Daneel Jacobus Johannes Roux said he had been overseer to the Worcester Municipality for the last 13 years. He had known the Municipality for the last 40 years. When he first took over the work there was no division between the upper and the lower town for water purposes. The division took place about two or three years afterwards. They had to divide the upper and lower parts on account of the scarcity. The water had become scarcer until the last few years, when they had had summer rains. There were about 20 cottages on the railway property at Worcester. There was a drain just by which was fed by water from the Municipal furrow flowing down Tulbagh-street. He had found the water flowing from the furrow into the drain. He had himself closed the connection, but he had afterwards found it opened again. The water from the drain ran through the culvert to the Government plantation. The water that went down the drain could not be used for irrigation purposes in the lower part of the town. Even if it were possible to divert the water from the drain back to the furrow, it would not be fit for drinking. Witness also spoke to the increase of railway property at Worcester. The water was much scarcer now than it was 30 years ago. All the water for irrigation purposes was taken from the main furrow. Less land was irrigated now than formerly. There was less water now in the sluit. He knew that the location erven and the lower part of the town suffered considerably from shortage of water; in fact, there was sometimes not a drop.

Cross-examined by Mr. Jones: He had not seen Government employees making a connection between the Municipal furrow and the drain on the railway property. He had stopped the diversion, and had found that the work had been undone again. Witness could not swear positively where the station water went to He thought the station water also went there, because the pipe went in that direction. He had never seen anything coming out of the pipe. The building in Worcester had increased during the last two or three years; but there had been no scarcity of water. There were fewer gardens to irrigate, but there was not enough water for irrigation. The water was getting less every day. He considered the people at the location suffered through want of water. Witness had told Mr. Lindenberg that the railway people were wasting the water.

Mr. Jones: Did you ever make any complaint to Mr. Lindenberg that the railway people were taking water out of this furrow?

Witness: No; I never made a direct complaint about it.

In further cross-examination, the witness said that it was usually the people farthest from the main course who complained about not having sufficient water. Witness had a boy, who distributed the water into blocks. After it got into the blocks, the consumers divided it.

Re-examined: When witness was first overseer, the water was not divided between the upper and lower parts of the town. The people then divided the water. The people could then irrigate every day if they wished. With regard to the drain, witness never allowed any Municipal water to run into the drain in summer. There was no water to flush the station drain, except what was taken from the Municipal furrow, unless the tanks were opened. Witness had never seen this done. The drain was constantly being flushed.

George Joseph Rous, one of the plaintiffs, said he was the owner of an erf, which he had occupied since 1887. He had a garden and fruit trees, which he irrigated with the water from the Municipal furrow. He first found water getting scarce in 1895. He then employed one boy to irrigate the garden. Once witness had to employ another boy to keep the water on. That was in 1898. Since then matters had been getting worse and worse. Two trees belonging to witness had died through want of water. Up to within the last two years, witness had not been able to do much with his trees. During the last two or three years, there had been late and summer rains. The water was getting more scarce, though there was less irrigation, there having been a good deal of building. Witness had suffered damage to the amount of about £15.

Cross-examined by Mr. Jones: Witness's property was in Napier-street. There had been no scarcity of water during the last three years, there having been late rains. There was a larger population now, and more drinking water was used than formerly. There was less ground to irrigate. Witness generally employed one boy to irrigate.

Wm. Henry Horne, of the Surveyor-General's office, said he had not been able to find in the records the conditions of sale referred to in the grant of the erven. Search had been made for the conditions in the Surveyor-General's office and the Colonial Secretary's office. Witness produced the original grant of No. 2 erf to Jan E. de Waal, who memoralised the Government in respect of the erf. He also produced the correspondence in connection with the grant.

Adam October, another of the plaintiffs, said he lived in the new location. Witness got waste water from the town. In the location they experienced a lack of water in the summer. Witness's garden had suffered frequently During the last three years it was better, but before that it had been getting worse and worse. All the people in the location suffered similarly. He had been in the location for over twenty years. They had their drinking water from the same source. The water from the station could only be turned off into the location course above the station. When the station water got below the station it was lost to the town, running to waste into the plantation. Trees and vegetables had died belonging to witness owing to the want of water, and the vegetables and fruit which he grew and sold had suffered in quality and in market value. Witness estimated that he had suffered damage to the amount of £10.

Mr. Schreiner closed his case.

Frederick Liesching Rubidge, Engineer of the C.G.R., said he had had charge of the Touw's River district, which included Worcester, since April. He was frequently at Worcester, and had a general knowledge of the water system in operation there. The only water used by the C.G.R. from the furrow which came out above Joubert's Mill was taken to the new reservoir. There were two reservoirs, and there was only one supply pipe from the furrow. That pipe was called a 5-inch pipe, but the water passed through a 3-inch meter, and it passed into a bottle neck of 4-inch diameter. The meter valve could be shut off for repairs, and the water then went through a 4-inch byeway. The meter had not been used for some time. Acting upon instructions, he gauged the water running into the reservoirs on Thursday of last week. It was then flowing at the rate of 53,000 gallons per 24 hours. He then came to town, and read certain evidence given in the case of Joubert v. Worcester Municipality, and Colonial Government; in consequence, he went back to Worcester on the 18th, and flushed the pipes at the scour valve in order to clear the silt. During the Saturday there had been rain. He went to the intake and had it cleared of silt. He took a gauge on Sunday, and found that 37,999 gallons passed into the reservoir in 24 hours. He made a note at the time in these words: "Evidently air in valves and pipes." On the following day, the 19th inst., he made a further test, which showed that 60,500 gallons passed through in 24 hours. In his opinion, that would be the greatest possible flow of water through the pipes with the present arrangements. The maximum capacity of the reservoir was 45,000 gallons, but with the present ball-valve arrangement it was impossible to fill the reservoir to the top. The water in the reservoir was used for locomotive purposes, station purposes, and household purposes for the employees' cottages on the hillside. The first use of the water was by the locomotives. He had had complaints from Worcester that the cottages could not obtain water at times. The engines were always supplied. He had formed an estimate of the quantity supplied to the locomotives and cottages. This was based on information given to him by individuals on the spot.

Mr. Schreiner objected that this evidence should be given by the "individuals on the spot."

Witness said it was impossible for him to ascertain all the details personally, but the information was gathered by people acting directly under his instructions.

Mr. Jones said that his learned friend could cross-examine the witness on the evidence.

Mr. Schreiner said that that was precisely what he could not do.

Maasdorp, J., held that the evidence might be given and taken for what it was worth.

Witness, continuing, said that his estimate of the water used by locomotives of the C.G.R., allowing for all booked trains as per working time book, was 52,257 gallons per day for locomotives of the Cape Central Railways, allowing for all booked trains as per working time book 4,785 gallons per day; for station and cottage purposes, 10,000 gallons. The total quantity required by the railway at full working pressure was thus 67,042 gallons. Under the present arrangements, it was not possible to pass more than 60,500 gallons per day through the pipes. The full working of the time book was not being adhered to at present. There were many trains that were booked "to run when required." They had to make provision for those trains whether they ran or not. The traffic did not demand the full working at present. The actual water used was considerably less than his estimate, but it fluctuated so much that he could not possibly give an estimate of the actual average consumption. He gauged 24 hours' consumption from 6 a.m. on Saturday last, and found that the engines actually took 38,000 gallons. The number of engines watered was 24. The engines in their journeys replenished their supplies as between two points at Worcester.

[Maasdorp, J.: Could you dispense altogether with Worcester as a watering station?]

Witness: I would rather not answer that question. The question would be better answered by a locomotive man than myself, as I have not sufficient knowledge of the working of trains. Continuing, witness gave details as to the use of water by the cottages. He had seen what he should roughly estimate at two million gallons per day running through the railway drain. He had always regarded that water as the overflow from the Municipal furrow. The railway had not used that water. He had not authorised anyone to make a connection between the furrow and drain. He knew the Municipal reservoir. It was possible to use water from there for the station, but not for satisfactorily watering the engines. He knew of the existence of the weir in the Hex River, and knew from correspondence in his office that it was built by the Government during the last four years. That was as far as his knowledge of the weir went.

Cross-examined by Mr. Schreiner: His headquarters were at Touw's River. His knowledge of this matter was confined to incidential visits to Worcester since April last. He had no knowledge of a summer experience at Worcester. His attention had been drawn to the water question about four times on the spot. The tank would probably have a capacity of about 6,000 to 7,000 gallons. As to the reservoir, he had never tested the quantity with the ball valve removed. He had made a test of the flow from all the pipes going fully, to ascertain the flow of water from the Municipal furrow. He had not made a test without the ball valve in operation. The ball valve presented a free flow of water. He did not agree with Mr. Stewart's estimate that 85,000 gallons would pass through the pipes. Mr. Stewart estimated upon a free flow. Mr. Stewart stated in his evidence in 1895 that a 5-inch pipe would pass 85,000 gallons; but in this case the pipe was reduced to a 4-inch. The 4-inch pipe was a bye-pipe. He could not speak as to the traffic over the line when it was used by the military. He would prefer that that evidence should be given by the "man on the spot." He did not know whether the traffic between Cape Town and Johannesburg was larger in the old days than it was now. He did not know whether a large portion of that traffic had been diverted to the coast routes. He could not say what was the matter with Mr. Reecks (who was mentioned by a witness on Wednesday) to prevent him from coming to the Court to give evidence. A medical man would be best able to answer the question. Mr. Reecks was deaf, and he told witness that he was "poorly." He was satisfied from the observations he had made on the ground that water from the Municipal reservoir could not be satisfactorily passed into the engines. He did not think the water could be flooded into the engines, because of the levels; he thought it would not be more than a trickle.

By the Court: He had seen water flowing down the open drain in a huge stream constantly. It had never occurred to any railway man that it was other than the surplus overflow from the Municipal furrow. If none of this water flowed down there in the summer, the drain might become a little offensive. He had no knowledge as to who opened or closed the furrow. He knew they had no right to touch the furrow.

Henry Robert Hopper, District Locomotive Superintendent at Worcester, said he had been in that position about thirteen years. He was well acquainted with the water system at Worcester Station. They did not use the water in the drain for railway purposes. He had never given any instructions as to making a connection between the railway drain and the Municipal furrow. There was no water as a rule in the furrow during the summer season. There was a large quantity running down the drain at present. They had been very much annoyed by the Municipal furrow at Worcester. Their yard had been frequently flooded in the winter time, and their turn-table had been placed under water. They would have been very glad if the Worcester Council had removed the furrow, as it had been a source of great annoyance to the Railway Department. It was of no use whatever to the station, and had been neglected by the Council. No complaints had been made to them about water having been taken by the railway from the Municipal furrow. He should say about 23 or 24 engines watered at Worcester each day on the average. He allowed 1,000 gallons for the up-trains, and 1,500 gallons for the down-trains, as the quantity taken up. It was impossible to form an exact estimate. He should say about 42,000 gallons was used at present by the engines of the C.G.R. and the Cape Central Railways. The trains were not running at full strength, according to the present time-book. He should say that the traffic during the war was about the same as in the present time-book. The Cape Central took about 4,000 gallons a day for their engines, and about 875 gallons a day was required for the wash-out of boilers and the cottages on the line. He took a reading of the meter in 1895. The result was 28,000 or 29,000 gallons in 24 hours.

Cross-examined by Sir H. Juta: The cottage drainage emptied into the ditch. He should not say that there were 20 drains emptying into the ditch. He had known the drain to be flushed in the summer. It would be possible to live on the hill if the drain were not flushed in the summer. He reckoned summer to last from December to April. He knew the drain became very disagreeable if it was not flushed in summer. In that case he went to the permanent way inspector, and asked him to send water down through the scour valve. He wished that the drain was filled in. The drainage could then be taken away in earthenware pipes, to be flushed with water from the reservoir. When they were at full pressure, the engines would take about 52,000 to 54,000 gallons of water per day at Worcester. He did not suppose, with the present arrangement, they could run at full pressure without cutting down the supply to the camp. There were fewer trains running now than during the war and before the war. During the war the traffic was much greater than now. The working time-books showed more trains scheduled than ever previously, but it was not unusual to have three trains cancelled each way per day. The present trains were running according to the time-book issued in August. The Cape Central was entirely under Government control, so far as the Worcester yard was concerned. As soon as trains passed the Cape Central points, they went into the control of the Government. He supplied certain figures upon which the report of Mr. Beattie, the Chief Locomotive Superintendent, was based.

Re-examined: He sent the figures to Mr. Beattie by wire, in response to an inquiry.

Mr. Schreiner said he wished formally to call for the production of this document.

Mr. Jones said that it would be produced if they could find it, only he would remind the Court that the document had been called for without any notice having been given.

James Hermanus Mays, permanent way inspector at Worcester, and Karl Frederick Kussatz, ganger, in the employ of the C.G.R., having given evidence,

Mr. Jones said that, subject to the evidence of Charles Reecks, of Salt River, ex-permanent way inspector, being obtained, he would now close the defendant's case. Reecks appeared to be suffering from eczema.

It was directed that the evidence of Reecks should be taken on commission, Mr. Pyemont being appointed commissioner.

The case was then adjourned, for the hearing of argument on a date to be fixed.

Postea (March 14, 1904):

Mr. Schreiner (for the plaintiffs) said that this was an action brought by the Municipality of Worcester and others against the Commissioner of Public Works, as representing the Colonial Government. The first plaintiff was the Municipal Council, the second was the registered owner of an erf in the town, and the third and fourth occupied houses and ground in the duly-constituted native location in the town. The action was for a declaration of rights in regard to a certain grant by the Commissioners of Worcester in the year 1874, embodied in a letter of October 10, for an interdict perpetually restraining the defendant from using any of the said water either for railway or for other purposes in the manner set out in the declaration; and for judgment for damages, the first plaintiff in the sum of £500, the second in £15, and the third and fourth in £10 each. The supply was granted to the defendants by the Commissioners under Ordinance No. 9 of 1836, and was under the control of the Commission until 1896, when the Municipality took it over, and had since continued to have control. The contention of the plaintiffs was, broadly, that leave and licence was granted to the Railway Department to divert and use water for the railway service in terms of the letter in 1874, while the Government contended that they had a perpetual right by virtue of the agreement to take such water for the railway service as they may reasonably require. The first broad issue was that the Government said they diverted, and took what they reasonably required for railway purposes; the Municipality said the department had taken as much as they wanted. The next point was whether the agreement was ultra vires so far as the Municipality was concerned. The whole case could be disposed of upon those two points. Then, if the case were not disposed of on those two points, a third point arose as to the way and extent in and to which the Government used the water. The Municipality said that the department had taken water for other than the purposes set out in the agreement, viz.: (1) for domestic use in connection with a number of cottages erected near the station; (2) irrigation of land and plantations, and (3) the railway service of the Cape Central Railway. The Municipality, further, said that the department had taken larger quantities of water than were contemplated in the agreement. The third point in the case, then, was this: had the Government made use of water within the scope of the agreement as construed by the Court: If the scope had been exceeded, then arose the fourth point, viz., what was the measure of damages sustained by the plaintiffs? The Municipality's contention was that they were entitled to give reasonable notice terminating this arrangement of 1874, and in September, 1900, the first-named plaintiff gave notice accordingly. This the Government declined to recognise, and had continued since that time to take and use water. It had been admitted that the uses of the Government amounted to at least 50,000 gallons a day. Counsel called the Court's attention to the interdict obtained by Mr. Joubert, mill owner, Worcester, limiting the diversion from the stream by the Municipality to 300,000 gallons per diem, and by the Government to 40,000 gallons per diem.

[The Chief Justice (to Mr. Schreiner): You don't admit Government's right to 40,000 gallons?]

Mr. Schreiner: We say they must stop using.

[The Chief Justice: What do you say was granted in 1874?]

Our contention is that we only granted leave and license to the Government, which we were at liberty to withdraw at any time.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Did you not get consideration?]

Certainly not. We do not say that they could have placed the station in any other position, and quite admit that the inhabitants wished it to be where it now is. The evidence shows that the Eastern Reservoir was under construction when the agreement of March 15th was entered into, and could supply engines, etc., at a rather slow flow. This is important, because now the Railway Department take water to wash sheds, flush drains, etc., and to supply railway cottages, water gardens, etc. On the 14th of April, 1877, a meeting was held at which it was agreed that the railway might take water subject to their paying a reasonable price for it. A water meter has been put in, but its use is merely nominal, and it is merely a matter of guesswork to say how much they use.

[De Villiers, C.J. : I would suggest that the Railway Department be allowed to take 25,000 gallons a day free, and that they should pay for any surplus just like other people.]

[Mr. H. Jones: I am not instructed to consent to any such arrangement.]

I would suggest that my learned friend should consult his clients to see if some such arrangement cannot be arrived at.

[Mr. H. Jones: I will see my attorneys; we will have a consultation, and then I shall be in a position to give a definite answer.]

The Municipality take up the position that they cannot dispose of the town's water without Parliamentary sanction: though we can consent to a compromise. As to the question of construction of our agreement with the department. This Municipality was constituted under Ordinance 9 of 1836, and Section 35 of that Ordinance prescribes the duties and powers of the Commisioners relative to supplying water to the inhabitants. We deny that we have granted any really permanent right to the railway; for the words "temporary" and "permanent" used in the agreement refer only to the time the railway was being constructed and thereafter, but no use of water for all time was ever granted. The Government contend that they are entitled to water for all time ad libitum. That clearly was not in the contemplation of either party. The Commissioners of the Municipality were willing to give water gratis until the eastern reservoir should have been completed, and after that the railway was to pay like anybody else for all over 10,000 gallons a day. The clause in the agreement is not worded very clearly, but the Commissioners cannot be presumed to have meant to act ultra vires by giving away the town's water for all time, no matter how great the needs of the town might be Then the Cape Central Railway (not a Government railway) took water, and the ratepayers authorised them to do so on a payment of 1s. 6d. per 1,000 gallons. Either the Government must admit our construction of the terms "temporary" and "permanent," or they must confess that they have been acting ultra vires all along. I must admit that "perpetual" implies continuance. Here it only meant that the use of water would be granted to the railway after the temporary work of construction was finished, and that it would not be withdrawn without reasonable notice, but not that such leave and licence should be continued for ever, no matter to what extent the railway might develop. The evidence shows that the railway people have been taking about 54,000 gallons a day, and in addition to this they have been taking water for cottages, etc., by a side-pipe, in all about 65,000 gallons a day. The meter is broken; that is admitted. And then they send down a man who estimates the quantity of water used by gaugings. The very fact that the Government put up the meter shows that they were limited as to the quantity they might take. All the agreement says is that "they shall be allowed, etc.." and on the strength of this permission they claim, as of right, to take what they please. As to ultra vires, section 35 of Ord. 9, of 1836 (under which this Municipality was constituted), authorised the Council to give away water to the inhabitants; but not to an outside body. See also on this subject of ultra vires, re Staffordshire and Worcester Canal Co. (1, H.L., 254). This case shows that even 70 years user does not give prescription unless sanctioned by statutory authority. See also Kimberley Water Works Co. v. Kimberley Borough Council (12, C.T.R., 758). See especially the judgment of De Villiers, C.J. (at p. 764). The principles there enunciated show that the powers of a Municipality must be strictly limited to the terms of their Act—Encyclopædia of Laws of England (Vol. 9, p. 21); Ashbury Railway Carriage Co. v. Rich (7, H.L., 653). The powers of a public body must be construed more strictly than those of a Board of Directors—Rochdale Canal Co. v. Ratcliff (18, Q.B., 287); Joubert v. Worcester Municipality (5, C.T.R., 303). Then as to the Native Location. The people living there have a right to the waste water, but owing to the action of the Government, there is often no waste water, and this is a most serious matter. Then, again, the Cape Central Railways are taking no less than 5,000 gallons every day, not only for engines, but to supply cottages and tanks up the line.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Ought you not to have come into court earlier and objected?]

That might have been better, but the case of Bower v. Colonial Government (6, C.T.R., 163), shows how disinclined people are to litigate in such cases as this.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Can you show the original conditions under which the town was allowed to take this water from the Hex River?]

I can find nothing save a notice in the Government Gazette of November 20, 1819.

[De Villiers, C.J.: I do not refer to that; but under what conditions were these farms sold?]

That I am not prepared to say.

Mr. H. Jones (for the Colonial Government): As to the application for an interdict, we rely upon the contract of October 13, 1874. This was a perfectly valid agreement, and the Municipality have received the benefit of it. This being so, they must establish a very strong case, and show whose rights would be infringed by giving effect to this agreement.

[De Villiers, C.J.: But the Municipality cannot do what is ultra vires.]

If any of their acts are ultra vires, they must be ultra vires with respect to the rights of private people, and therefore it was not for the Municipality, but for these injured people to come forward. It would seem that the inhabitants had a common right to the use of this water, and they, by the Municipality acting as their representatives, granted certain privileges to the Railway Department for consideration.

[Hopley, J.: But could the inhabitants grant rights beyond the term of their own lives?]

Yes; and the Municipality, in making this grant, distinctly said that they acted on behalf of the inhabitants. There is nothing in the Municipal Act to prevent either the inhabitants or the Municipality from selling the water.

[Hopley, J.: Common law would not allow the Municipality to sell the water.]

The inhabitants have since sold water to the Cape Central Railways. There is nothing to show what right the inhabitants had in the water, but it is for the plaintiffs to show this, if they object to the water being disposed of. The Colonial Secretary's letter of October 31 states that the inhabitants were willing to sell their water in consideration of the station being placed in a position which would best suit their convenience. See also sub-section 6 of section 109 of the Municipalities Act. All authorities go to show that Municipalities have the power to sell water, and in point of fact, this Municipality has sold water for money to the Cape Central Railways. On this point it is impossible to lay down any general rules. There is no evidence as to whether a vote of the inhabitants was taken before this arrangement was entered into with the department or not, and therefore the onus is on the Municipality to disprove the agreement which we allege. As to the case of Joubert v. Worcester Municipality (5, C.T.R., 303), it is by no means on all fours with the present case. There an interdict was granted because rights acquired by purchase had been violated. It is true that in 1847 the Government allowed the railway to take 40,000 gallons, but now they require more. I cannot say that the Government is entitled to give water to the Cape Central Railways. As to the question of ultra vires, the onus is on the plaintiffs to show that the Municipality has acted ultra vires, and this onus they have not discharged. We do not say that the Government is entitled to take as much water as they require, but only what they require for bona fide railway purposes. As to the meaning of "permanent," a permanent station means one which is always ready to receive goods. We are not bound to use at Worcester all the water we take there. In any case, the acquiescence of the inhabitants for so many years amounts to a ratification of what the Council had done.

Mr. Schreiner was not heard in reply.

De Villiers, C.J.: The plaintiffs, in paragraph 5 of their declaration, say: "Before, in, and since the year 1874, there has been and is a supply of water collected and distributed by Municipal and other works for the supply of the town and Municipality of Worcester and of the inhabitants thereof, including householders, ratepayers, erfholders, and resident occupiers of the Native Location, and the said supply was in 1874, and subsequently until 1895, under the control of the Commissioners of the said Municipality, within the limits of the law existing in regard to supplies of water, to which the inhabitants of a municipality are entitled: and thereafter, within similar limits, has been and is under the control of the Municipal Council of Worcester, duly constituted under the provisions of Act No. 45 of 1882." This paragraph, which I have just read, is admitted by the defendant, and the admission of this paragraph removes any difficulty which might otherwise have stood in the way of granting the relief applied for. The plaintiff further alleges that since the year 1874 the defendant and his predecessors in office administering the Railway Department of and representing the Government of this colony has diverted, taken, and used free of charge, large quantities of water, and that the diversion is taking place by virtue of a licence granted in 1874 in the following terms: "That water for temporary and permanent railway service be allowed free of charge, but water leadings by pipes from the eastern reservoir shall have to be paid for at the same charges as paid by resident householders." The defendant has left no doubt whatever as to the position taken up by the Government in regard to this case by the sixth paragraph of the plea. The defendant admits that he refused to accept a notice given to him by the plaintiff, and he further admits that water is still being taken by him, and that the Colonial Government claims it is entitled in perpetuity, under the agreement arrived at as aforesaid, to take and use such quantity of water for railway purposes as may from time to time be required. At the time the agreement of 1874 was entered into, the railway system was a small affair indeed, and it is quite clear that none of the parties to this agreement anticipated what the future requirements of the railway would become. The quantity of water taken out immediately after this agreement and for some years after this agreement was not more than nine or ten thousand gallons a day. In consequence of the extension of the railway system and the enormous increase of traffic, the requirements of the railway in regard to the Worcester water now amount to something like fifty or sixty thousand gallons a day, and the question now to be determined is whether under the agreement of 1874 the Government is entitled to use this enormous quantity of water without any payment whatsoever to the Municipality. It is said on behalf of the defendant that the Municipality at the time acted as the agent of the ratepayers, and that the ratepayers acquiesced, and that consequently the plaintiffs are not now entitled to succeed. But the agency of the Commissioners did not confer on them powers beyond those given to them by the Ordinance then in force. The Ordinance 9 of 1836 defines the powers and the duties of the Municipality. The 35th section enacts: "It shall be lawful for the said Commissioners acting in pursuance of any such regulations as aforesaid to provide from time to time, and to carry out and lay any pipe or pipes for the conveyance of water to which the inhabitants of the Municipality shall at any time have or acquire a common right from any reservoir, river, or spring to any house, building, or other place within the limits of the Municipality, and the said Commissioners, acting in pursuance of any such regulations as aforesaid., are hereby authorised from time to time to make such regulations touching the quantity of water to be supplied to the inhabitants, and the time or times at which such supply is to be received as shall be proper and necessary." The 43rd section mentions what contracts may be entered into by the Commissioners. It refers to contracts for any work to be done or performed, or any materials to be furnished, and it shows the extreme care with which the powers of the Municipality have been limited. We find that in 1874 the Commissioners took upon themselves to enter into a contract with the Government, the effect of which, literally construed, is to place no limit whatever upon the quantity of water belonging to the inhabitants not belonging to the Commissioners, in which the inhabitants have a common right. That water is to be diverted for railway purposes without any payment. At present the number of gallons per diem is said to be fifty or sixty thousand, and were it to go on at the present rate, it would soon be a hundred thousand gallons per diem, and in the end there might be nothing left for the inhabitants. There surely must be some limit. There appears to be no proof whatever of any acquiescence in the present case on the part of the inhabitants. The best proof of acquiescence would be a regulation to the effect that the Commissioners should have power to convey this water to the Government for railway purposes, but no such regulation has been proved to be in existence. In the present case I am clearly of opinion that if the agreement has the wide meaning which is attributed to it by the Government, and I am inclined to think it has, it is wholly beyond the powers of the Municipality, which had no power to bind the ratepayers to grant this unlimited quantity of water to the Government; and I think the plaintiffs are entitled to an order in terms of the first prayer of the declaration, omitting the words "either temporarily, or." With the omission of these words, I think the declaration should be made, especially in view of the further order which the Court will make. The Court will declare that the original granting of water by the Commissioners was ultra vires and illegal, and that the defendant is not entitled in perpetuity to continue to divert, take, and use water for all or any of the purposes aforesaid. In regard to the interdict, the Court is not prepared to grant an interdict taking effect immediately. It will probably take a considerable time for the Government to make the necessary provision for the supply of water. I am inclined to think it will take until the 1st January, 1905, before the requisite arrangements can be made. In granting an order in terms of prayer (b), it shall be as follows: "Provided that such interdict shall not take effect until the 1st January, 1905, and that in the meantime the defendant be allowed to use the Municipal water upon payment to the plaintiffs of £2 per annum for every hundred gallons used per diem, with leave to the defendant to apply for an extension of time beyond the 1st January, 1905; the defendant to pay costs of the action." Of course, this order will not debar the Municipality from trying to make a more liberal arrangement with the Government, and getting its ratepayers to consent to it. In regard to damages, I am of opinion that the plaintiffs should not succeed, because the Government took the water with the consent of the Municipality. There was nothing in the nature of trespass. I think the Municipality, in addition to giving notice that the contract was to expire, ought to have brought this action sooner. In regard to the water taken hereafter, the Government should pay at the same rate as the inhabitants.

[Plaintiffs' Attorneys: Van Zyl and Buissinne; Defendant's Attorneys: Reid and Nephew.]

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

ADMISSIONS. { 1903. Oct. 22nd.

Mr. Van Zyl moved for the admission of Petrus Johannes Schoevers as an attorney and notary. Counsel asked that the oath might be taken before the R.M. of Cradock.

Application granted, oath to be taken before the R.M. of Cradock.

Mr. Van Zyl moved for the admission of Robert Pullar Maxton as an attorney.

Application granted and oath administered.

PROVISIONAL ROLL.

MALCOMESS AND CO. V. GRAHAM AND LENG.

Mr. Gardiner moved for provisional sentence for the sum of £8,546 15s. 6d., owing on certain two notarial bonds, covering certain advances, for interest at the rate of 8 per cent. in terms of the bond, and for costs of suit.

Order granted.

MORSER AND CO. V. KAHN.

Mr. Pyemont moved for the provisional order for the sequestration of the defendant's estate to be made final.

Order granted.

At a later stage Mr. Pyemont stated that subsequent to the foregoing application an arrangement was entered into between the defendant and his creditors and the petitioning creditor would now like to withdraw his proceedings. He asked that the final order be cancelled, and the provisional order discharged.

His Lordship made an order accordingly.

MORSER AND CO. V. YOUNG.

Mr. Pyemont moved for the provisional order of sequestration to be made final.

Order granted.

SCHUTZ AND DE JAGER V. FOWRIE.

Mr. Pymont moved for provisional sentence for £714 14s. 6d., on a certain promissory note, with interest and costs of suit.

Order granted.

VAN DER SPUY V. VAN DER SPUY.

Mr. Buchanan moved for provisional sentence on a promissory note for £200, with interest and costs of suit.

Order granted.

KOTZE V. MCGREGOR.

Mr. Russell moved for provisional sentence on certain conditions of sale for £625, with interest at 6 per cent., plaintiff offering to give transfer, and for costs.

Order granted.

ARGUS PRINTING CO. V. MADDOCK.

Mr. Buchanan moved for provisional sentence on a promissory note for £73 5s. 7d., and for judgment, under rule 329d, for £73 15s., for work done, with interest a tempore morae and costs of suit.

Judgment and provisional sentence granted as prayed.

GOURLAY, CAVANAGH AND CO. V. GROMER.

Mr. Gardiner moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent.

The defendant appeared, and opposed the application, stating that it was proposed by one Mr. Herman that he should assign his estate for the benefit of his creditors, and that all then signed the agreement except this very Herman, who withdrew. Herman had told him that if he would give him some guarantee of preference he would sign the deed.

Maasdorp, J., advised the defendant to put these statements on affidavit and serve the applicants with a copy thereof.

Defendant said he would like time to earn money in order to engage counsel.

The matter was ordered to stand over until the 5th November, affidavit to be filed before the 29th inst.

WILSON, SON AND CO. AND OTHERS V. WAKELING.

Mr. M. Bisset moved to make final a provisional order of sequestration.

Order granted.

HAUPT V. VINK.

Mr. C. W.de Villiers moved for provisional sentence on a dishonoured cheque for £97.

Order granted.

HERMAN V. SMITH.

Mr. Russell moved for provisional sentence for £18 15s. on a promissory note, with interest and costs, and for judgment under Rule 329d for £10, for money lent by plaintiff to defendant, with costs of suit. Counsel said the parties lived in different districts.

Judgment and provisional sentence granted as prayed.

BROOKE V. MUSTAPHA.

Mr. Sutton moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £500, together with interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum from the 1st January, 1903, and costs, also for the property hypothecated to be declared executable, the bond having become due by reason of non-payment of interest

Order granted.

ABRAHAMS V. SCHWARZER.

Mr. Close moved for provisional order for the sequestration of the defendant's estate to be made final.

Order granted.

ILLIQUID ROLL.

FRANCIS BROS. V. GLASS. { 1903. Oct. 22nd.

Mr. M Bisset moved for judgment under rule 329 d for delivery of certain six head of cattle remaining over from sale, plaintiff tendering fulfilment of all the conditions specified in the conditions of sale.

Order granted.

ACKERMAN AND ADAMSON V. FORD.

Mr. Burton moved for judgment under rule 319 upon plaintiff's declaration, which claimed £257 11s. for work done. Defendant had been barred. There was an agreement to accept £200, for which amount judgment was now asked, with costs.

Judgment granted.

E. K. GREEN AND CO. V. COLE.

Mr. Gardiner moved under Rule 329d for judgment for £45 for rent, with interest and costs

Order granted.

S.A. BRICKFIELDS V. HENDRICKS BROS.

Mr. Gardiner moved for judgment under Rule 329d for £195 11s. 10d. for bricks sold and delivered, with interest and costs.

Order granted.

ROBINSON BANK V. HART.

Mr. Smith moved for judgment under Rule 319 for £49 4s. 5d., unpaid balance on an overdraft, with interest and costs. less £3 10s. paid.

Order granted.

VAN DER BYL AND CO. V. ROUS.

Mr. Smith moved for judgment under Rule 329d for £40 5s. 11d., goods sold and delivered, with interest a tempore morae, and costs of suit.

Order granted.

SOUTHERN LIFE ASSURANCE CO. V. DAY.

Mr. Buchanan moved for judgment under rule 329d for rent of certain offices situate in Good Hope Chambers at the rate of £16 per month from the 1st August to the date of giving possession by the defendant to the plaintiffs, the defendant holding unjust possession. Counsel also applied for the rule nisi granted against the defendant, restraining him from removing certain furniture from the said offices pending the action for rent to be made absolute. He asked further for an order for ejectment.

Maasdorp, J., said plaintiffs would be entitled to two months' rent. Judgment would be given for £32 rent, defendant being ordered to give up possession, the rule nisi to be made absolute, with costs.

STEER AND CO. V. IOUW.

Mr. Russell moved for judgment under Rule 329d for £68 15s., commission for raising a loan, and for £1 1s. for professional services rendered, with costs of suit.

Order granted.

MARAIS V. ESTATE DU PLESSIS.

Mr. Gardiner moved for judgment, under Rule 319, in default of plea, for £95, on a certain promissory note, with interest at the rate of 5 per cent. and costs.

Order granted.

ESTATE YOUNG V. MEYERS.

Mr. Buchanan moved under Rule 329d for judgment for £68 4s. 6d., for quit-rent and taxes, with costs.

Order granted.

MANSON V. MADDOCKS.

Mr. Van Zyl moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £288 8s. 11d., balance of account due and rendered by the plaintiff to the defendant, and costs of suit.

Order granted.

PURCELL AND OTHERS V. WEST INDIAN BUILDING ASSOCIATION.

Mr. Close moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £239 6s., balance of account for goods sold and delivered, less £200 paid on account.

Order granted.

PURCELL AND CO. V. BOYCE.

Mr. Close moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £119 5s. 4d., for goods sold and delivered, less £100 paid on account.

Order granted.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

SYME V. COLONIAL GOVERNMENT. { 1903, Oct. 22nd.

Mr. De Villiers appeared for the applicant, Ann Elizabeth Syme, and moved for a rule nisi, operating as an interdict, restraining the Government from proceeding with the erection of a certain wall on the boundary of plaintiff's property, and from proceeding with other work. The work was being done in connection with the construction of an overhead railway bridge at Claremont, and applicant alleged that if it were proceeded with, her property would be damaged.

Maasdorp, J., said there was no urgency in the matter, and notice of the application must be served on the Government. The matter would therefore stand over.

BANGEE V. BOOSTAY.

Mr. Burton moved for a rule, interdicting the respondent, and certain of his creditors, from selling certain property alleged to belong to the partnership existing between applicant and respondent, pending the determination of an action set down for hearing this term, by which plaintiff sought to establish the partnership, and sued for damages.

A rule nisi was granted as prayed, returnable on the 5th November, the rule to operate as an interdict in the meantime.

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice KOTZE and a Special Jury.]

REYNOLDS V. NEW CAPE CENTRAL RAILWAYS, LTD. { 1903. Oct. 22nd.

Injury to person—Negligence—Damages.

This was an action brought by George Reynolds, a stonemason and contractor, residing at Riversdale, against the New Cape Central Railways, Limited, to recover £1,500 for damages for injuries received through the wilful negligence of the defendant company.

The declaration set forth that the plaintiff resided at Riversdale, and that the defendants were a railway company connecting Riversdale with the C.G.R. system at Worcester. On the night of April 20, 1903, the plaintiff was leaving his kitchen door in order to reach the back yard, and it was necessary to pass along a certain lane at the back of the house. The plaintiff, in stepping off the doorstep, put his foot into an excavation made by the defendant company, and suffered severe injuries. The excavation was made by the defendants for the purpose of laying pipes to the station, but there was no warning light or protection to wayfarers. The plaintiff had sustained damages to the amount of £1,500, which the company refused to pay, or any part thereof.

The plea admitted the formal allegations, but denied that the company had any knowledge of the plaintiff stepping into the furrow, or that it was one or two feet below the level of the lane. The defendants denied that the plaintiff was suffering from rupture, or that he received other injuries rendering him unfit for his work, and even if true, the alleged cause was denied. The defendants denied that the furrow was made by them, but said that it was constructed by the contractors or other persons not directly under their control.

Mr. Upington (with him Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers) for plaintiff; Mr. Benjamin for defendants.

Mr. Upington said that the case was set down for September 8, and during the August term the defendants applied for a postponement, and to take evidence on commission of a certain witness. The Court refused the commission, but allowed the case to be postponed. Again the defendants made application for the commission, and on the second occasion the Court granted it. Shortly after that Dr. Raeburn, the doctor who attended the plaintiff at Riversdale, died, and thereafter some correspondence ensued between the parties. The defendants offered £100 with costs, in full settlement, which was refused. Subsequently they tendered £150, but the plaintiff refused to accept that sum. As a result of the correspondence, it would only be necessary to take evidence as to the damage, the denial of the liability having been abandoned.

Evidence was then called for the plaintiff.

George Reynolds, plaintiff in the case, said that prior to the accident he was a strong, healthy man. On the night of the 20th April he went out of his back door for the purpose of entering the back yard. When he stepped out of the door he fell into a drain in the lane. The excavation was about three feet from the door. He had no knowledge that the sluit was there, and there was no light. He called for a light, and his brother-in-law helped him into the house. At first he did not think he was seriously injured, although he felt a good deal of pain. Medical assistance was called for, and he was examined by Dr. Raeburn, who attended him for over four months.

Witness was ordered to bed, and remained there eleven days. The doctor ordered him to wear a truss. In June he was seen by Dr. De la Bat, and in August by Dr. De Vos. On both occasions Dr. Raeburn was with him. Occasionally he was free from pain. He was unable to do any work. In addition to the leg he had other pain, and he had lost his nerves. Prior to the accident he earned £500 by contracts between March of last year and May of this year. His average earning was £30 a month. Since the accident, he had to forego a contract for a school at Heidelberg. He had to pay for three doctors. Yesterday he was examined by three doctors in consultation.

Cross-examined by Mr. Benjamin: He had worked as a stonemason at the station Buildings at Riversdale. His principal work was taking contracts. He was always able to do his work prior to the accident, but it was possible he had a complaint in the right lung. Previous to the accident he had never complained of pains in the back. He did not tell Dr. Fuller that morning that he had pains in the back prior to the accident. He could not say whether he suffered from miners' lung complaint in Johannesburg. He had had a cough, and consulted a doctor about it. He could not really say the distance of the trench from the outer edge of the step. If it were said that the excavation was three feet six from the door step he would not deny it. He had one foot on the step, and then he put the other foot into the trench. He knew nothing about the depth of the trench. He had a swelling in the left groin after the accident. Hot water and turpentine were applied that night. The rupture was slightly rubbed at the time. He had been examined by four doctors. Dr. Biggs examined him in conjunction with Dr. Raeburn shortly after the accident. He had played billiards after the accident, but he was not anxious to take part in a competition. He did not know what a rupture was.

Re-examined by Mr. Upington: He had suffered from pains in the back since the accident, and he did not know what the cause was. He wore a truss as a result of a consultation with Dr. Raeburn. Dr. Andrew said nothing about the truss when he was examined. In consequence of what Dr. White told him, he left off the truss, and then he suffered pain again.

By Kotzé, J.: £30 would be about the average amount he earned per month.

Dr. Petersen stated that yesterday, in company with Dr. De Vos and Dr. De la Bat, he examined the plaintiff. He would say that the plaintiff at present was not in a good state of health. There were traces of shock to the spinal chord. The left lung was affected, and, in addition, the muscles of the calf of the left leg were slightly atrophied. The injuries were probably caused through the accident. He could find no trace of a rupture, but as he had been quiet for six months the parts might have assumed their normal condition.

Cross-examined by Mr. Benjamin: If the rupture was a small one it was possible that he might recover, and there would be no trace of it.

Re-examined by Mr. Upington: It was perfectly possible there might have been a rupture.

Dr. De Vos, of Riversdale, said he knew the plaintiff as a strong and healthy man for some time. In conjunction with Dr. Raeburn he examined the plaintiff in August, 1903, and he was astonished to see his poor condition of health. He took it that the plaintiff was suffering from shock to the spinal cord. It would be some time before he would be able to work.

Cross-examined by Mr. Benjamin: He might get quite well again. The accident might have caused the damage.

By Kotzé, J.: The plaintiff was a hard-working man. He would say that it was possible that the plaintiff's present condition was due to the accident.

Dr. De la Bat, practising at Heidelberg, said that he examined the plaintiff in the early part of June in consultation with Dr. Raeburn. His nervous condition was low, and he believed he was suffering from shock to the spinal cord. It was probable the symptoms were the result of the accident. He was again examined yesterday by three doctors, and in witness's opinion his general health was not good.

Cross-examined by Mr. Benjamin: The lung trouble would partly account for his condition.

By Kotzé, J.: It would be difficult to say what his condition would be in three months.

Mrs. Reynolds, wife of the plaintiff, said that when her husband came into the kitchen after the accident he was in considerable pain. Dr. Raeburn was sent for, her husband was ordered to bed, and remained there eleven days. He was strong and healthy previous to the accident.

Mr. Upington closed his case.

Mr. Benjamin called,

Dr. White, of Swellendam, who said that he examined the plaintiff about the 24th June. He examined him principally for rupture, and witness found no trace of it. He did not think it possible that the rupture could be concealed from him. Witness recommended him to wear a suspensory bandage. The plaintiff told witness he had had inflammation of the lungs on two different occasions. He did not think it likely that the accident was the cause of the state of his general health. Again in September he was examined for a trace of rupture, but nothing could be found. On the first occasion he complained of pain in the groin, but on the second he said the pain in the groin was better, but that he was suffering from pain in the inside of the thigh. He could not see what caused the limp.

Cross-examined by Mr. Upington: He did not agree with Dr. Petersen that the plaintiff was suffering from shock. Witness was the railway company's doctor. The company sent him to examine the plaintiff for rupture, and his general condition. He advised him to remove the truss, although he knew the plaintiff was in Dr. Raeburn's hands. He had never seen him previous to the accident, and knew nothing of his state of health.

Re-examined by Mr. Benjamin: There were no physical signs of pain when witness recommended him not to wear the truss.

Dr. Biggs said that the plaintiff himself asked to be examined. A spinal affection would exhibit itself in other parts of the body. He found no spinal affection. After leaving Heidelberg the plaintiff was not in good health.

Cross-examined by Mr. Upington: He did not look for spinal injury, and he was just as confident as Dr. Petersen, who had looked for it and found it. The plaintiff was not suffering from shock. He saw the plaintiff in court, and there was not the slightest sign of shock. He thought the plaintiff would limp for a long time. The plaintiff had just an ordinary cough, but witness did not examine his lungs. He thought the plaintiff's present condition was due to worry. The plaintiff, he would not mind saying, was worse now than before the accident. Witness had been doctor for the contractors.

By Kotzé, J.: He would not advise the plaintiff to do blacksmith's work tomorrow, but in a few weeks he might be able to do so.

Dr. Andrew, formerly of Swellendam, said that he examined the plaintiff on the 2nd July last, in company with Dr. Raeburn. There was no trace of rupture. There were no external signs to indicate why the plaintiff should limp. A strain on the muscles of the leg might cause the plaintiff to limp. If there had been proper treatment at the time the plaintiff would have been all right in six weeks. Rubbing with liniment would do rupture a deal of harm.

Cross-examined by Mr. Upington: Witness found no trace of spinal injury. He would not say there was considerable injury.

By Kotzé, J.: He did not think the swelling could be caused by a fall. When he saw him on the 2nd July, witness thought he would be all right in a few weeks.

William Rogers, of Pauling and Co., said he was engaged in constructing the trench in question. The trench was eleven inches broad and nine or ten inches deep. From the doorstep to the inner edge of the trench was three feet six inches.

William Witham, contractor for Pauling and Co., corroborated the measurements of the trench given by the last witness. The plaintiff he had known for twenty-two months, and he was not in very good health. Witness never saw the plaintiff doing manual labour.

Arthur Cook, traffic superintendent of the New Cape Central Railway, said that he saw the plaintiff on two or three occasions prior to February 18, and after that continually. In February and March the plaintiff was in poor health, and said that he thought he was going to die. Witness saw the plaintiff in bed two days after the accident, when he was lying in bed with a pad on his loin. On the 12th May witness saw the plaintiff play skittle pool. After a dispute about a billiard table, the plaintiff threatened to fight witness and two barmen.

Cross-examined by Mr. Upington: He would ask the jury to believe that the plaintiff was very violent, threw his stick down, and threatened to fight witness and two barmen.

Fredk. Dawson, General Manager of the Cape Central Railways, said, as far as the company was concerned, they had nothing to do with the accident, as the work was being done by Messrs. Pauling and Co. The plaintiff looked better to-day than he did previous to the accident

Dr. Fuller said that, in conjunction with Dr. White, he examined the plaintiff that morning. He found no signs of recent rupture. It was very doubtful if a rupture was ever cured without an operation. The plaintiff told witness that he had had three attacks of inflammation of the lungs. Witness found one of the lungs diseased. The plaintiff told witness that he had pains in the back prior to the accident. Witness discovered nothing wrong with the spine.

Cross-examined by Mr. Upington: The plaintiff was not suffering from shock.

Mr. Upington closed his case, and counsel then addressed the jury on the facts.

Kotzé, J., after dealing with the contradictory nature of the medical evidence, advised the jury to look at the case from a common sense point of view. The jury would have to accept either the evidence of the doctors with regard to the plaintiff's state of health prior to the accident, or that of the railway officials. Even accepting the statement that he did suffer from lung trouble previous to the accident they would have to consider whether his lung might not have got worse after the accident. The plaintiff had always been willing to submit himself to a medical examination by the doctors representing the company, and that was hardly in keeping with the actions of a man who was supposed to be shamming. They would also have to look at prospective damages and weigh up the opinions of the different medical experts.

The jury retired, and, after about 15 minutes' consultation, returned with a verdict for the plaintiff for £500 damages, with costs.

Judgment was entered accordingly.

[Plaintiff's Attorneys: Walker and Jacobsohn; Defendants' Attorneys: Syfret, Godlonton and Low.]

C 4

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP and the Hon. Mr. Justice KOTZE.]

BLENCK V. REYNOLDS. { 1903. Oct. 23rd.

Mr. Buchanan said that he appeared for the defendant in the action. The case was set down by the defendant in consequence of the plaintiff not having proceeded with the action. The action was for slander, and the defendant pleaded privilege. The case had been set down by the defendant for the purpose of obtaining judgment with costs.

The plaintiff did not enter appearance.

Some question having been raised as to notice, the case was ordered to stand over till later.

At a later stage, Mr. Buchanan put in an affidavit of service of notice, and the Court granted absolution from the instance with costs.

REHABILITATION.

Mr. Buchanan moved for the rehabilitation of Andries Kinder Mans, in whose insolvent estate the assets realised £2,132 and the debts proved £3,402, thus showing a deficiency of £1,370.

Application granted.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

ASHMAN V. ASHMAN.

Mr. Buchanan said that he appeared for the plaintiff (the wife) to ask for the rule nisi calling on the defendant to show cause why a decree of divorce should not be granted to be made absolute. This matter was before the Court a few days ago, when their lordships asked for an intimation in some shape or form by the defendant that he was willing to acquiesce in an alternative order asked for by the plaintiff in lieu of the division of the estate and maintenance of the children and costs. The defendant had written letters consenting to an order in the terms proposed by the plaintiff.

An order was made in the following terms: Decree of divorce granted, plaintiff to have custody of the children; division of the estate to be effected in the following manner—defendant to pay to the plaintiff £500, and to cede to her a policy of life insurance and furniture and piano now in her possession, the defendant to retain the rest of the estate, plaintiff abandoning her claim for maintenance and costs of suit.

Ex parte ROSE.

Mr. C. W. de Villiers moved for a rule nisi under the Derelict Lands Act to be made absolute.

Order granted as prayed.

Ex parte VILJOEN.

Mr. Buchanan moved for an order confirming the sale of certain property in the Division of Uitenhage to the petitioner, who is executor dative in the estate of the late John Willem Viljoen. Petitioner said that he bought certain property in the estate at public auction for £300, and that the Divisional Council valuation for same was £285. The auctioneer had since died. The registrar declined to register the deed of transfer.

Order granted as prayed.

Ex parte LAMPRECHTS.

Mr. C. W. de Villiers moved for an order authorising the registration of certain property in the district of Hope Town, purchased by the applicant from an estate of which she was executor testamentary. The purchase price was £275.

Order granted as prayed.

Ex parte SCHOEMAN.

Mr. Van Zyl moved for an order authorising the disposal of certain property in the estate of the late Henry Pieter Schoeman and his surviving spouse. Petitioner was one of the minor sons, and he said that the immovable property was bequeathed to himself and his brothers and one sister. Their shares, however, were very small, and the proceeds of the sale of the farm were proposed to be invested in a farm in the division of Burghersdorp, which petitioner's brother had purchased for £3,000. Petitioner asked for an order authorising him to dispose of the land in the will aforesaid of his parents and to invest the proceeds in the other property. The surviving spouse approved of the application.

Maasdorp, J., said it appeared from the affidavit that the mother had renounced the benefit of her usufruct.

Mr. Van Zyl said that that was so.

Maasdorp, J., said that the affidavit seemed to be very vague, and it was a point as to whether the mother understood that she was really renouncing the benefits. It should be quite clear that that was her intention.

The matter was ordered to stand over for further inquiries on this point.

Ex parte MABUYA.

Mr. Close said that this matter came before the Court on the 15th April last for the confirmation of a certain order granted under the Derelict Lands Act in respect of certain fifteen pieces of land that were in the possession of the petitioner, and for which he wished to obtain title deeds. Subsequently when transfer was effected under the order, the Registrar of Deeds at King William's Town found that certain lots had the prescriptive or registered owner and the date incorrectly stated in the petition, on which the rule nisi was granted, and on which the order of the Court was granted, so that the Registrar of Deeds refused to pass transfer without a further order amending the preceding order. The property was situate in Stutterheim. The Registrar at King William's Town had forwarded a letter to the Registrar at Cape Town setting forth the discrepancies in the petition. Council submitted that all that was required was a formal alteration of the rule nisi. He moved for an order authorising the amendment of the previous order of the Court.

A rule was granted with respect to lots 19 and 24, returnable on the 12th December, rule to be published once in the "Gazette" and once in "Imvo." Order granted in respect to Lots 32, 33, and 106, order to be amended in accordance with the directions of the Registrar of Deeds, King William's Town.

SMITH V. MENGEL.

Mr. Van Zyl moved for an order for the attachment of certain two erven of land belonging to the defendant at Elliott, so as to found jurisdiction, and for leave to sue the defendant by ediotal citation for a certain debt.

Order granted for attachment, and leave granted to sue by edictal citation, rule to be returnable on the 1st February, personal service to be effected.

Ex parte DU PLESSIS AND OTHERS. { 1903. Oct. 23rd.

De communi dividundo.

This was an application for the direction of the Court as to the division and distribution of certain immovable property.

The petition of Sarah Elizabeth du Plessis (born Weyers), widow of David Jacobus du Plessis, of Zuurfontein, in the Division of Middelburg. Rodolph Andries Jansen, as secretary to the Board of Executors of Graaff-Reinet in their capacity as the executors testamentary of the said David Jacobus du Plessis, humbly showeth:

1. That by the last will of the said D. J. du Plessis, and his wife, the said S. E. du Plessis, executed on the 16th November, 1891 (copy of which is hereunto annexed), it is specially provided, inter alia—that the farm Zuurfontein, situate in the Middelburg district, is bequeathed to their children, Daniel Johannes du Plessis, Stephanus Jansen du Plessis, Anna Christian du Plessis, Salomon Terblanche du Plessis, and Sarah Elizabeth du Plessis, subject to certain conditions, inter alia, that they shall have nothing to say, nor can they obtain transfer until the death of the survivor.

2. That the said D. J. du Plessis is dead.

3. That after his death the bondholder, in consequence of the non-payment of interest for several years, called up the bond, and the said farm was sold in execution.

4. That thereafter the executors were duly paid the balance of the purchase money amounting to the sum of £7,456 18s. 1d.

5. That it is further provided by the said will that in the event of the death of any of the children before the survivor, his, her, or their shares will devolve upon the surviving children, or upon their descendants by representation, but should they leave any descendants, his or her share shall devolve upon his or her descendants by representation.

6. That the said children shall only be entitled to possession of their farms after the death of the survivor, who shall have and enjoy the usufruct thereof as long as she lives.

7. That according to the codicil attached to the said last will of the above parties, dated 20th March, 1895, hereto annexed, it is provided that a certain piece of Government ground, lately purchased from the Government, shall be subject to the above-named conditions of the will.

8. That the said piece of land adjoins the above-named farm, and is lying vacant, there are no lands or buildings thereon, and it is altogether useless to the owners, and measures 899 morgen and 366 square roods, and was purchased from the Government for £180.

9. That, as the said piece of ground was not included in the bond, the same was not sold in execution.

10. That the said widow, Sarah Elizabeth du Plessis (born Weyers) has entered into and executed a deed of renunciation, dated July 13, 1903, hereunto annexed, relinquishing her life interest under the said last will and testament.

11. That there is one child, Sarah Elizabeth du Plessis, a minor, aged 12 years, the remaining children being majors.

Wherefore your petitioners humbly pray:

1. For an order that your executors may be entitled to forthwith pay out the children the balance of the purchase amount, realised by the farm sold in execution, viz., to the major heirs, and to pay into the hands of the Master of the Supreme Court the said minor's portion.

2. That the piece of Government ground referred to in the said codicil be sold by public auction, and the proceeds dealt with as above, viz., by paying out the major heirs and by paying the minor's portion in the hands of the Master of the Supreme Court.

The usual verifying affidavit was annexed.

The portions of the will referred to, which are material to the above petition, read as follows:

1. We prelegate and bequeath to our children, Daniel J. du Plessis, Stephanus J. du Plessis, Anna C. du Plessis, Solomon T. B. du Plessis, Sarah E. du Plessis, our farm now occupied by us, and known as Zuurfontein, situate in the district of Middleburg . . . . subject to the following conditions: (a) They shall not be allowed to make any claim whatever or obtain transfer of the farm until after the decease of the survivor of us. . . . . (b) We desire that the survivor shall remain in the full and undisturbed possession of our joint estate during his or her lifetime, and shall be entitled to the full income and usufruct thereof. After the death of the survivor, the residue of our joint estate shall be equally divided among our children raised, or still to be raised, and in the event of one or more of them predeceasing the survivor, then their lawful descendants by representation. . . The material part of the deed of renunciation referred to in the petition was as follows. . . I, Sarah Elizabeth du Plessis (born Weyers), widow of the said late David Jacob du Plessis, do hereby expressly renounce and disclaim all my right, title, and interest and claim in and to all usufruct and income devolving upon me out of the joint estate of myself and my said deceased husband, relinquishing the same in favour of my said children, so procreated in marriage with my said late husband. . . . . ."

The Acting Master's report, after setting out clause 1 of the will (as above) proceeds: "The said farm Zuurfontein was sold in execution at the instance of the bond-holder by reason of non-payment of interest. The purchase price obtained was an exceptionally high one; for after satisfying the bond-holder's claim, sheriff's and other costs, a surplus of £7,551 resulted, which sum has been paid over by the High Sheriff to the petitioners. The survivor has now executed a deed of renunciation, relinquishing her life interest with the view of making an immediate distribution of the surplus referred to, but the question naturally arises whether such distribution can now take place, in view of the terms and conditions of the will above set forth. Should your Lordships be of opinion that the fact of the said farm having been sold in execution nullifies the said terms and conditions of the said will, then such distribution could, of course, be effected, but if, on the other hand, your Lordships should hold that such distribution could only be determined at the death of the survivor, then I beg to recommend that the said balance of proceeds (viz., £7.551) be deposited with a trust company, subject to the life usufruct of the survivor and the terms of the will. I have no objection to offer to the proposed sale of the piece of Government ground now that the farm Zuurfontein has been sold, but I would suggest that the proceeds thereof be dealt with in a similar manner as your Lordships may decide upon in regard to the sum of £7,551.

Mr. Burton (for the applicants): The will left Zuurfontein to the children, subject to a life usufruct to their mother The only difficulty seems to be that should any one of the children predecease the mother, his or her share of the property must go to his or her heirs. There is a minor child among the heirs, and her share might be affected by an immediate distribution. The widow has renounced her rights under the will, and is prepared to distribute the estate at once. If, then, the majors agree to take their shares now, would your Lordships sanction a distribution in the interests of the minor?

[Maasdorp, J.: But if we do that, and one of the heirs should predecease the mother, his descendants would forfeit their share.]

[Kotzé, J.: Should one of the sons get his share now, and then die before the mother, he may first spend his share.]

He might do that in any case; the rights of the immediate heirs have already vested.

[Maasdorp, J.: Hardly. There is a contingent vesting, subject to the condition, should the children survive their mother. The minor should be represented.]

I quite admit that.

[Kotzé, J.: The will directs that in the event of the death of an heir before that of the mother his share shall go to his heirs, surely those further heirs will be prejudiced if you now distribute the capital?]

There is no entail, and the further heirs would be bound by the consent of the immediate heirs. Would your Lordships allow this matter to stand over?

[Maasdorp, J.: Yes, in order that notice may be given to the major heirs and their consent obtained, and that the minor may be represented by counsel.

[Applicant's Attorneys: Dempers and Van Ryneveld.]

Ex parte BOTHA.

Mr. Buchanan moved for an order directing the transfer of certain property. It appeared the applicant, formerly of Colesberg and now of Jaggersfontein, on the 14th February, 1903, sold to a certain syndicate known as the R.B. and B. Syndicate his farm of 2,386 morgen for £3,639 8s. 3d. When the petitioner sold the farm he was aware that the syndicate were the purchasers, and he looked to them for the purchase price. The transfer duty was duly paid, and thereafter the Registrar refused to pass transfer when the company was formed. It was really a question of whether two transfer duties should be paid. Counsel read an affidavit from Mr. Abe Bailey and other members of the syndicate setting forth that owing to certain circumstances the registration of the company was delayed until June 26th, 1903. The same syndicate was formed prior to the registration, and the farms were purchased for the purpose of irrigation.

Mr. Buchanan (for applicant): The Registrar objected to the transfer on the ground that it was sought to be passed before the company was registered.

[Maasdorp, J.: A company is not formed till it is registered.]

The syndicate was formed, and it consisted of the same persons as those which formed the company. Botha looked to the company when he sold. I do not know that any deed of sale was entered into, but that only shows that the vendors would deal only with the company. The only difference was that the syndicate was not registered and the company was. If that fact of registration makes an essential difference, of course I am out of court. The whole point of the case is, "were there two sales—the first to the syndicate and the second to the company." If so, two transfers would be necessary.

[Kotzé, J.: When was the syndicate formed?]

On February 14, 1903, and then all preliminary proceedings for the formation of the company had already been taken, save registration. See the recent case of the Blauwklip Garden Company (13, C.T.R.), where land was sold to a company before registration; also Re Union-Castle Company (12, C.T.R., 126), where certain property had become consolidated. See also Re Evening Star Lodge, Berry ex parte (13, C.T.R., 277). On the whole, I would submit that this case should stand over.

The matter was ordered to stand over for further information.

Ex parte P. J. TERBLANCHE.

Mr. M. Bisset moved for the appointment of a curator ad litem to represent the minor children in the partition of certain undivided land, and for leave to raise a mortgage on the estate to provide the necessary funds to defray the costs in the matter Johannes Hendrick Spies had been suggested as curator.

An order was granted, subject to the Master's approval of the curator as a fit and proper person. The question of mortgage was ordered to stand over for an approximate estimate of the amount.

Ex parte G. D. TERBLANCHE.

Mr. M. Bisset moved for the appointment of a curator ad litem to represent the minor children in the division of certain undivided land, and for leave to raise the necessary funds to defray the cost of transfer. Counsel asked that Willem Johannes van der Veen be appointed as curator.

An order was granted, subject to the Master's approval, appointing Willem Johannes van der Veen as curator, but the question of a mortgage was ordered to stand over for further information as to the approximate amount.

Ex parte NEL.

Mr. M. Bisset moved for the appointment of a curator ad litem to represent the vested rights of the minor children in an arbitration which had been agreed upon to avoid expensive litigation.

The matter was ordered to stand over for information as to whether the proposed curator was a fit and proper person to look after the interests of the minor children.

SIPIKA V. NONKOMAINST AND OTHERS.

Mr. Russell moved for an order calling on the respondents to show cause why an order should not be issued declaring the applicant, David Sipika, heir to his father's property and consequently entitled to transfer. The property was registered in the father's name, and applicant being the eldest son of the chief wife, was entitled under native customs to the property. An affidavit by the Resident Magistrate of Kokstad was put in to the effect that notice had been served on the wives and children of the applicant's father.

A rule nisi was granted calling on all persons to show cause why the property shall not be transferred to David Sipika, to be returnable on December 12. The notice to be published once in the "Kokstad Advertiser."

Ex parte HUTT.

Mr. Russell moved for leave to raise money on mortgage. The petitioner was the sole heiress in the estate of her late husband, Vincent Hutt, who had had a joint transaction with one Johnson in connection with certain property situate at the corner of Chiappini-street. A claim had been filed against the estate, and it was proposed to raise money in order to meet this.

The Court granted an order as prayed.

Ex parte ARNOLD.

Mr. C. W. de Villiers moved for leave to sell portion of a farm in the joint estate of the petitioner and his deceased wife, situate in the district of East London, to his son, James Weston Arnold. Petitioner, who was executor testamentary, enjoyed usufruct of the farm, and at his death the said usufruct appertained to his daughters. The usufructuary heirs had consented to the proposed sale. The purchase price was proposed to be fixed by two independent sworn appraisers, who placed the value at £30 per acre. The extent of the section proposed to be sold was twelve acres. Another son of the petitioner, Charles Robert Arnold, held a bond for £1,000 on the farm, and it was proposed to reduce the capital of the bond by the amount raised by the sale.

Order granted in terms of the trustee's report, and subject to the consent of the bond-holder.

Ex parte ROBINSON (BORN RAYNOR).

Mr. Buchanan moved for an order authorising the amendment of a certain ante-nuptial contract. The petitioner was married in 1886. The ante-nuptial contract showed her name to be Maria Raynor, instead of Maria Sophia Raynor, The difficulty had arisen in connection with the transfer of certain property, the Registrar of Deeds having declined to register the property in consequence of the error in the ante-nuptial contract.

Order granted authorising the Registrar to amend the ante-nuptial contract as prayed.

Ex parte METELERKAMP.

Mr. Buchanan moved on behalf of the petitioner, the sole trustee and the only creditor in the insolvent estate of Hendrick Jacobus van der Walt, for leave to take transfer of certain property in the estate, situate at Oudekraal, in the division of Knysna. Petitioner had duly advertised the property for sale by public auction, and it had been so submitted more than once, but the highest bid received was £400, and petitioner had bought the property for £425. The matter had been standing over for production of proof of advertising the sale. Counsel read an affidavit as to the publication of advertisements.

Order granted as prayed.

REYNOLDS V. GOODMANSON.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers, for the applicant, moved for the attachment of certain movables and immovables at Claremont, and for leave to sue by edictal citation. In November, 1902, the petitioner sold to Goodmanson a certain piece of ground for £150, and advanced £400 for the purpose of erecting a building on the said piece of ground. Goodmanson had not taken transfer of the property, had left the Colony, and had only paid £50, leaving £500 still due.

Order for attachment and leave to sue by edictal citation granted, citation to be returnable on February 1 next, personal service to be effected, failing which, one publication each in the "Gazette" and the "Cape Times."

Ex parte THE EXECUTORS IN THE ESTATE OF THE LATE JAN BARDIEN.

Mr. M. Bisset moved for leave to sell certain property, with buildings thereon, measuring 20 square roods and 20 square feet, situate at Port Elizabeth. The petitioners were the executors dative in the estate of Jan Bardien, who died in 1868, bequeathing the said property to his four children. At the death of the legatees, the property was to pass to their descendants. A further condition in the will was that there should be paid to certain parties certain sums of money out of the rents of the property. The property was at present leased to one Antoine Fisher. The petitioners thought that, in view of the numerous heirs, it would be the best course to sell the property and distribute the proceeds. The Master reported in favour of the application, and recommended that the property should be sold by public auction, and from the proceeds thereof, after deducting the costs of the present application, their shares should be distributed among the major heirs, and that there should be paid into the Guardians' Fund of this colony the shares of the minors and the heirs whose whereabouts were unknown.

Order granted in terms of the Master's report.

TIEN SON V. ASSIGNEE ESTATE FARROW. { 1903. Oct. 23rd.

Exception to summons—R. M. Court practice—Specific performance.

The same precision is not necessary in drawing a R. M. Court summons which would be required by the Supreme Court. A magistrate does not exceed his jurisdiction by ordering a litigant specifically to deliver up certain articles if he orders him in the alternative to pay their value.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Acting A.R.M. of Port Elizabeth.

The plaintiffs (now respondents) sued the defendant in the Court below for the return of certain empty aerated mineral water bottles, or their full value, £4 15s. The Magistrate gave judgment for the plaintiff for the return of the bottles within thirty days, failing which, the defendant to pay the value. The summons called upon the defendant, at the suit of the plaintiff, in his capacity as assignee in the estate of A. E. Farrow, to deliver up twenty-three and three-quarter dozen bottles, the property of the estate, which were delivered to the defendant at his special request, and which the defendant unlawfully retained, although they had been demanded. An objection was taken to that part of the summons as vague, embarrassing, misleading, and bad in law, in that it failed to set out the exact manner in which the debt arose.

The Magistrate, in his reasons for judgment, said that the plaintiff sued for a return of 23¾ dozen empty aerated water bottles, or the value thereof, 4s. per dozen. It appeared that the plaintiffs were aerated water manufacturers, and in the ordinary course of business sold to the defendant, who was a general dealer, certain quantities of aerated water, which were delivered to defendant in bottles. Farrow and his party swore that when the aerated water was sold and the goods delivered to the defendant, they told him that he was only buying the contents of the bottles, and not the bottles themselves, and that the bottles had to be returned when empty; in fact, that the bottles were only lent to him. The defendant made three different statements—firstly, that he was never told that the bottles must be returned; secondly, that he bought the bottles in question; and, thirdly, that they told him that he had to return them. In face of these conflicting statements, he (the Magistrate) could put no credence in the defendant's evidence, and he accepted the plaintiffs' positive statement that they told the defendant that the bottles were to be returned. This story was borne out by the fact that the aerated water was sold at 2s. per dozen for large, and 1s. a dozen for small bottles to the defendant, while the bottles themselves cost plaintiffs 4s. a dozen Some question was raised as to the number of bottles that the plaintiffs were entitled to from the defendant. He (the Magistrate) examined the books kept by Farrow, and he had no hesitation in accepting them as correct, in preference to defendant's contradictory statement. He therefore gave judgment for the plaintiffs for the return of the bottles or their value.

Mr. Benjamin (for appellant): We say that this exception ought not to have been dismissed.

[Maasdorp, J.: You bought only soda water; you did not buy bottles?]

Surely that ought to have appeared on the summons. The evidence shows that the Chinese go about selling bottles.

[Kotzé, J.: The same precision is not required in a Lower Court which is insisted upon here.]

But a man may not vary his plaint, and sit between custom and contract. To vary these is to set up quite a new case.

[Mr. Benjamin here read defendant's evidence.]

[Maasdorp, J.: Do you say that he bought the bottles?]

He used to take empties when he could get them. The summons is very vague and embarrassing, and the defendant is prejudiced thereby. The Magistrate also ordered the return of the empty bottles or payment of their value. The Magistrate had no jurisdiction to order specific performance. He erred in that part of his judgment at all events, and also in overruling the exception.

Mr. Buchanan (for respondent) was not heard.

Maasdorp, J.: In this case the plaintiffs in the Court below sued the defendant for the delivery of certain mineral water bottles, the property of the plaintiffs, which were delivered to the defendant at his request. The plaintiffs allege that they have demanded delivery of the bottles, and the defendant has refused to give them up. These are mainly the allegations in the summons. An exception was taken to the summons, that it was vague and embarrassing, and did not set forth any cause of action, but it seems to me to be quite clear that there is a cause of action. If a plaintiff alleges that his property was placed in the possession of the defendant, then he is entitled to demand its recovery, unless the defendant sets up some defence to show that he is entitled to retain it. In the absence of such a defence, and merely taking the summons as it stands, a cause of action is given, because a person is entitled to recover his property from anyone who holds it, unless some reason for retention is given by the person in possession thereof. This exception was overruled by the Magistrate, and evidence was taken upon which it appears that there were certain transactions for the sale of soda water by Farrow, whose estate has been assigned, to the plaintiffs, in which Farrow sold soda water to the defendant, but expressly retained the property in the bottles. He says that in selling soda water he did not sell the bottles, and defendant admits that when the soda water was sold to him it was upon condition that he should return the bottles to the plaintiffs. The appeal has now been brought before the Court on the ground that the exception should have been allowed. In my opinion, as I have said already, the summons clearly sets forth what the claim of the plaintiffs is, but even if the summons was not so artistically drawn as would have been necessary in the Supreme Court, it now appears that there was a good ground of action upon the evidence, and if the summons was at all vague that the defendant was in no way prejudiced by that vagueness. Mr. Benjamin now raises another point, which does not seem to have been one of the grounds of appeal. He says that the form of the Magistrate's judgment is not exactly such as it ought to be, because he gave an order for the return of these bottles. But considering that he has given an order for the return of these bottles, or, in the alternative, that the value thereof should be paid, I think that the objection that he made an order for the specific performance of a certain act does not arise. I don't think it is necessary for the Court to interfere with the form of the judgment as it stands. The appeal will be dismissed with costs.

Kotzé, J, concurred.

[Appellants' Attorneys: Michau and De Villiers; Respondent's Attorneys, Van Zyl and Buissinné.]

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

TRIAL CAUSES.

DE VILLE V. DE VILLE. { 1903. Oct. 26th.

This was an action brought by Pieter Bernhardus de Ville, of Graaff-Reinet, against his wife, now living at Calitzdorp, for restitution of conjugal rights, failing which a decree of divorce, with forfeiture of the benefits of the marriage in community. Mr. Russell appeared for the plaintiff, and the suit was undefended.

Evidence was called in support of the action.

Charles Wm. Henry Smith, clerk in the Colonial Office, in charge of the Marriage Register, produced the duplicate original register of the marriage of the parties.

Pieter Bernhardus de Ville said he was married to the defendant in September, 1898, at Graaff-Reinet. After marriage they resided at Graaff-Reinet. There had been one child of the marriage. They lived together until August, 1899, when his wife told him she was going away for a couple of months to a farm. He reluctantly consented to her leaving, but his impression was that she would return. She had not, however, come back. He had a letter from her a little time ago, from which it appeared that she was teaching at Calitzdorp. He had asked her more than once to return to him, but she had refused to do so. He did not know any good reason why she should have left him. He understood that his wife had said in a letter that it was impossible to live with him, and that she would like to retain the child. Witness was willing that she should have custody of the child.

By the Court: He did not know why defendant should say that it was impossible to live with him. There might have been differences of opinion and quarrels, but nothing of such an extraordinary nature as to justify her in deserting him.

An order was granted calling on the defendant to restore conjugal rights to the plaintiff on or before the 14th November, failing which, to show cause on the 12th December why a decree of divorce should not be granted against her, with forfeiture of the benefits of the marriage.

LIQUIDATOR OF THE LIFE BRANCH OF THE S.A. FIRE AND LIFE ASSURANCE CO. V. THE BOARD OF EXECUTORS. { 1903. Oct. 26th. „ 27th.

Liquidator—Investment of Trust Funds—Ultra vires—Pleading—Exceptions.

On a certain Life Assurance Co. going into liquidation, one H. was appointed as administering liquidator, and in that capacity arranged with a certain Trust Co. to deposit with them such funds of the Assurance Co. as should come into his hands; the said funds to bear interest at 5 per cent., to be reckoned half-yearly. This interest was afterwards reduced to 4 per cent. The Trust Company, on being called upon, rendered an account of these funds, but brought up no interest for 1897 to 1899, and thereafter brought up interest yearly. The plaintiff now claimed that this account should be amended and the Company directed to bring up interest half-yearly from 1897, and also to account for certain unclaimed dividends remaining in their hands which had been merged in their funds. The defendant Company pleaded that H. had agreed that no interest should be allowed on moneys deposited by him with the said Company after 1896. That at his request they agreed to allow yearly interest on the said moneys after 1899. They denied that they were bound to open an account for unclaimed dividends or were responsible for the same, but they tendered to pay them whensoever they might be claimed. To this plea the plaintiff excepted as bad and insufficient in law.

Held, that as a liquidator may require certain funds, which come into his hands, at any moment he is not acting ultra vires by not investing these at interest, and further, that as the allegations in the plea, in respect of unclaimed dividends, would (if proved) constitute a good defence, the exception must be disallowed with costs.

This was an argument on an exception filed by the plaintiff to the plea of the defendants on the ground that it was bad and insufficient in law, and that no cause was shown therein why the plaintiff should not obtain judgment as prayed.

The declaration was in the following terms:

1. The plaintiff (Charles Christian de Villiers) is the sole surviving liquidator of the life branch (in liquidation) of the South African Fire and Life Assurance Company.

2. The defendant (Johannes Henoch Neethling Roos) is the secretary of the Board of Executors, of Cape Town, and is the proper person to be sued as representing the said Board.

3. The said company was constituted under unlimited liability in the year 1831, and thereafter carried on in Cape Town the business of a Fire and Life Insurance Office.

4. On the 31st March, 1881, the said company was dissolved by a unanimous resolution passed at a duly convened meeting of shareholders then held, and in conformity with resolutions passed at previous meetings of shareholders, duly convened and held, for the purpose of taking into consideration the starting of a new Fire Insurance Company in the stead of the fire branch of the then existing company, the liquidation of the life branch thereof and the dissolution of the said existing company.

5. The shareholders at the said meeting unanimously appointed a committee for certain purposes consisting of its chairman, Jan Hendrik Hofmeyr, William Mortimer Maynard Farmer, and Charles Christian de Villiers (the now sole surviving liquidator).

6. At a meeting of shareholders held on 31st May, 1881, the shareholders present unanimously resolved, amongst other things, that the liquidation and working out of the life branch should be left in the hands of the committee before mentioned, that all transfers of lands, cessions of bonds, and other assets should be signed by not less than two of their number, and that all moneys received by them should be invested on deposits bearing interest half-yearly, and that the general management and control should be left in their hands.

7. Shortly after the last mentioned date it was agreed between the liquidators, so appointed, that Jan Hendrik Hofmeyr should act as administering liquidator, and he undertook so to act.

8. Thereafter in or about the month of July, in the year 1883, the administering liquidator of the life branch, aforesaid, agreed with the said Board of Executors to place the administration of the life branch (in liquidation) in the hands of the said Board, and to invest the funds of the said life branch (in liquidation) still remaining in his hands, in his capacity as such administering liquidator, and all further sums accruing to the said funds by way of interest, or otherwise in deposit with the said Board of Executors, to bear interest at the rate of five per cent. (afterwards reduced to four per cent.) per annum, payable half-yearly from the first day of August, 1883, and that the said Board should keep and render from time to time, half-yearly accounts of all moneys received and disbursed by them in that behalf.

9. The said Board of Executors undertook the matters as agreed upon in the manner agreed upon, and received the premiums as they fell due of certain life policies then still existing in the life branch aforesaid, paid out of such funds such of these policies as fell in through death of policy-holders, disbursed necessary expenses in connection therewith, and kept books and accounts of their administration.

10. The said Board of Executors, during the period beginning with the 20th July, 1883, and ending with the 31st December, 1896, paid at the end of each half-year interest on the balance standing to the credit of the said life branch at the beginning of the half-year, according to the true intent and meaning of the agreement entered into as aforesaid, and they brought up such interest and other receipts and the disbursements made by them on behalf of the life branch in their accounts rendered from time to time during that period. At the beginning of that period, for several years, the rate of interest paid was five per cent. per annum, and at the latter part of that period, for several years, it was four per cent. per annum.

11. William Mortimer Maynard Farmer died in August, 1899, or thereabouts, and Jan Hendrik Hofmeyr died in March, 1900.

12. In the year, 1901, the plaintiff requested the secretary of the Board of Executors to frame a statement showing the position of the said life branch (in liquidation) in account with the said Board, and to supply him therewith, and this, after the lapse of more than a year's time, not having been done, he again made a similar request.

13. Thereafter, on or about the 18th July, 1903, the secretary of the Board of Executors furnished him with certain accounts purporting to state the position of the said life branch (in liquidation) in account with the said Board of Executors.

14. From these accounts it appears that the Board of Executors had, on 1st January, 1897, a balance in hand and standing to the credit of the said life branch (in liquidation), the sum of £5,258 13s. 2d., and that (a) for a period of three years, beginning 1st January, 1897, and ending 31st December, 1899, they brought up no interest whatever, such as they were bound to bring up in the manner above stated in paragraph 10, on that sum or any other further sums in their hands on account of the said life branch (in liquidation); (b) for the period of three years, beginning 1st January, 1900, and ending 31st December, 1902, they brought up interest yearly at the rate of 4 per cent. per annum on the balance purporting to stand to the credit of the said life branch (in liquidation) at the beginning of the year, and they did not bring up interest every half-year in the proper manner before mentioned; and (c) for the period of a half-year, beginning 1st January and ending 30th June, 1903, they brought up interest at the rate of 4 per cent. per annum half-yearly on the balance purporting to stand to the credit of the said life branch (in liquidation) at the beginning of the half-year.

15. The account thus rendered showed a balance to the credit of, and an acknowledged indebtedness so far as it went, to the life branch (in liquidation) of £4,336 15s. 9d. sterling, but owing to the action of the Board of Executors in not bringing up interest in the manner they ought to have done, this amount did and does not represent the full liabilities of the Board to the said life branch (in liquidation), and the account rendered by the defendant is in this manner insufficient and incomplete.

16. The plaintiff thereafter, in his capacity aforesaid, requested the defendant, in his capacity aforesaid, to render him a just and true account from the 1st day of January, 1897, to the 30th day of June, 1903 (both days inclusive) of all moneys received and expended by the said Board of Executors for and on behalf of the said life branch (in liquidation) as before mentioned, showing the true balance standing to its credit, and bringing up interest in the manner hereinbefore mentioned in paragraph 10, but this he has refused and failed to do.

17. Further, from time to time in the course of the said administration of the Board of Executors of the said life branch (in liquidation), dividends by way of refunds became payable by the said Board to shareholders.

18. A number of shareholders did not claim and did not receive such dividends due to them.

19. Such unclaimed dividends remained in the hands of the Board of Executors, and were not placed by them to a separate account in any bank, but were merged in the funds of the said Board. The cheques of the Board of Executors for such unclaimed dividends, signed by the said Jan Hendrik Hofmeyr as director (he being also chairman of the Board) or by some other director, also remained in their hands.

20. By reason of the premises interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum became payable by the said Board on the said unclaimed dividends from the time they became so payable.

21. The defendant, at the plaintiff's request, furnished the plaintiff with a list of such shareholders, with the amounts claimable by them, and the dates upon which such amounts became claimable.

22. It appears from the said list that no interest has been allowed on such unclaimed dividends, and the defendant in his capacity having been duly requested by the plaintiff to render him an account of such unclaimed dividends due to various shareholders, bringing up interest thereon at 6 per cent. per annum, has refused and neglects so to do.

23. The plaintiff in his aforesaid capacity prays: (a) That the defendant in his aforesaid capacity may be condemned to render unto him a just and true account setting forth all moneys had and received, and all moneys expended and disbursements made for and on behalf of the life branch (in liquidation) of the South African Fire and Life Assurance Company from the 1st day of January, 1897, to the 30th day of June, 1903 (both days inclusive), and the true balance standing to the credit of the said life branch on the last-mentioned date, and that he bring up in such accounts interest at the rate of 4 per cent. per annum, at the end of every half-year, on the balance in hand on the first day of such half-year, during the period beginning with the first-mentioned and ending with the last-mentioned date. (b) That the defendant be condemned to render to him an account showing the names of the shareholders to whom dividends by way of refunds have from time to time become due, to whom they were paid, if paid, and what amount of dividend remained in the hands of the defendant unclaimed or unpaid, with proper vouchers and documents, and bringing up interest at 6 per cent. per annum on such unclaimed dividends from the time when they became payable; (c) debate of such accounts, and that the defendant be condemned to pay to the plaintiff, in his aforesaid capacity, such amounts as may after debate be found to be due; (d) such alternative relief as to the Court may seem meet; and (e) the costs of this suit.

Defendant's plea was in the following terms:

1. Defendant admits paragraphs 1 and 2 of the declaration.

2. As to paragraphs 3, 4, 5, and 6, he admits that on the 31st March, 1881, and the 31st May, 1881, the shareholders of the company appointed the persons named in paragraph 5 to be a committee to work out the liquidation of the life branch of the company's business; but as to the other allegations in those paragraphs, he has no special knowledge, and begs to refer to such proof as the plaintiff may adduce in support thereof.

3. He admits paragraph 7, and says that, with the knowledge and approval of all persons interested, Jan Hendrik Hofmeyr acted thereafter till his death in 1900 as administrator liquidator.

4. He admits paragraph 8, but says that it was specially understood and agreed that payments for life losses and for reassurance of capital for distribution or part thereof should be done under directions of the liquidators, who were acknowledged to be the owners or representatives of the funds deposited with the Board of Executors, and it was specially understood and agreed that the administrating executor, the said Hofmeyr, should represent the liquidators in respect of all such payments and all matters relating to the administration of the funds, and he did so represent the liquidators thereafter until his death, and act on their behalf.

5. As to paragraph 9, the Board of Executors from time to time provided the liquidators with moneys to be paid out of the said funds or policies, which fell in through the death of policyholders, and acted therein and in disbursing expenses under the directions of the said administrating liquidator.

6. The defendant admits paragraphs 10 to 11 of the declaration.

7. On or about the 18th September, 1896, it was agreed between the Board and the administrating liquidator that interest should not be allowed on the capital funds in the hands of the Board after the 31st December, 1896, and accounts were thereafter duly stated and rendered by the Board to the liquidators, and accepted as correct by the administrating liquidator for the liquidators as correct accounts during the years 1897, 1898, 1899, to which accounts no interest on the capital was allowed, and the plaintiff, amongst others, received a dividend from the administrating liquidator after the 31st December, 1899, on the basis of the accounts showing no interest allowed upon the capital funds.

8. Thereafter the administrating liquidator died in 1900, and thereafter the plaintiff, as surviving liquidator, applied for information and a statement of account, which were duly supplied and rendered to him.

9. In the accounts rendered for 1900, 1901, and 1902, the Board specially resolved, at the request of the plaintiff, to allow interest to be included on the capital funds in their hands, but the Board did not agree to allow interest to be stated half-yearly, nor at any time agreed to reopen the question of interest for the years 1897, 1898, 1899, which had been, by agreement as aforesaid, excluded from the stated and accepted accounts after the 31st December, 1896.

10. He admits that the balance on hand on 1st January, 1897, was the sum of £5,258 13s. 2d., and admits the allegations in paragraph 14, save that he denies that the Board was bound for the period since the 1st January, 1900, to allow interest half-yearly or at all. The said allowance was made voluntarily on the part of the Board at the request of the plaintiff, but the Board was not bound to allow such interest after the agreement referred to in paragraph 7 of this plea.

11. The defendant denies that there was a lapse of a year's time or any long time after the plaintiff requested a statement of the position of the funds of the life branch of the company before full information was supplied him, and says that the plaintiff has had rendered to him full and correct accounts of the funds from time to time in the hands of the Board for and on behalf of the liquidators.

12. The balance on hand at the 30th June, 1903, was £4,336 15s. 9d., as alleged in paragraph 15, but the defendant denies the other allegations in that paragraph.

13. As to paragraph 16 he repeats that he has rendered a true and correct account to the 30th June, 1903, including interest allowed the Board after the 1st January, 1900, and denies the other allegations in that paragraph.

14. As to paragraphs 17, 18, and 19, he says that cheques were drawn and signed under the directions of the administrating liquidator from time to time for the payment of sundry dividends by way of refunds by the liquidators to shareholders, and there were at all times funds ready to honour such cheques if presented; but the Board did not undertake and was not appointed to pay shareholders, but such cheques were held by the administrating liquidator awaiting the claims of shareholders under his control.

15. The Board did not and was not bound to open any separate account in any bank for unclaimed dividends as to which it had no control, nor was any such separate account ever asked for by the administrating liquidator.

16. Save as aforesaid the Board denies the allegations in paragraphs 17, 18, and 19, and all the allegations in paragraph 20, specially denying that it has been in mora in regard to any unclaimed dividend, for the non-payment of which the Board is not in any way responsible.

17. The list of shareholders referred to in paragraph 21 is drawn from the receipt book.

18. As to paragraph 22, he admits that the Board has not allowed and refuses to allow interest on unclaimed dividends, and says that such refusal is lawful, but otherwise denies that paragraph, and says that the Board is ready and willing on return by the plaintiff of any cheques drawn and signed, but not issued, for dividends to draw and sign a cheque or cheques for the capital sum or sums of such returned cheques.

Wherefore the defendant prays that the plaintiff's claim may be dismissed, with costs.

To the plea the plaintiff filed the following exception: "The plaintiff excepts thereto as being bad and insufficient in law, and says that no case is shown therein why the plaintiff should not obtain judgment as prayed." Plaintiff also filed certain paragraphs by way of replication.

Mr. M de Villiers (with him Mr. McGregor) for the exceptor; Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (with him Mr. Searle, K.C.), for the respondents.

Mr. De Villiers, in narrating the principal facts of the case, said that the administrating liquidator (Mr. Hofmeyr), on account of some difficulties that he had with the secretary of the old Board, who was appointed to assist him, made an arrangement with the Board of Executors, of which he was the chairman, to deposit the funds that he had in his hands and which might thereafter accrue, so as to bear interest with the Board of Executors, they at the same time to have administration in their hands. The true intent and meaning of the agreement entered into was acknowledged by the defendants to have been that at the end of each half-year interest on the balance standing to the credit o the life branch at the beginning of the half-year should be paid. For thirteen years the interest was duly paid, first at the rate of 5 per cent. and afterwards at the rate of 4 per cent. The Board, however, ceased to pay any interest at all, and their allegation was that they entered into an agreement with the administrating liquidator that no interest should thereafter be paid. The plaintiff submitted that this agreement was unlawful, that the administrating liquidator had no power to enter into an agreement of that nature, inasmuch as he surrendered the liquid and undisputed right founded upon the agreement on which they had acted for thirteen years, and moreover the law required that a person in the position of the liquidator should deposit all moneys that he had in his hands at interest, and that he had instructions given him by the shareholders of the association to deposit money at interest, and that these rights could not be abandoned. Moreover, unclaimed dividends were payable to shareholders. The Board of Executors, instead of opening an unclaimed dividend account, and depositing all money there or handing over the money in a lump sum to the administrating liquidator in order that he might do so, wrote out cheques in favour of the shareholders who were entitled to these unclaimed dividends, these cheques being signed by the secretary and by the directors, either Mr. Hofmeyr himself or some other director. In many instances these dividends were not claimed, and in these cases the funds merged with the funds of the Board, instead of being deposited with the separate account. On that account these unclaimed dividends ought to have borne interest, which they had not done, and therefore the liquidator, as representing the shareholders, who were entitled to these refunds, was now entitled to institute an action for such interest.

Our case is founded on the illegality of the agreement between the plaintiffs and the defendants, and we claim that interest should be paid to us at the rate of 4 per cent. This is a very liberal offer, as we could get 6 per cent. for the money.

[Maasdorp, J.: Do you allege mala fides?]

No, only breach of trust in the legal sense. We represent the creditors, and I submit that everything done to their prejudice is null and void.

Paragraph 2 of the plea is excepted to as bad and insufficient in law. My points are: (1) Nemo protest lucrifieri cum detrimento alterius. Here the shareholders seem to think that they are at liberty to take the property of other people. (2) A trustee has no power to make over to the Board the property of shareholders. Voet (2-15-2). If there is a demand in respect of an unliquidated claim the trustee may compromise, but he cannot abandon liquid rights. As to the word "ambitiose," Voet (2-15-2, line 5). See also Voet (50-9-1).

[Maasdorp, J.: What is the right given up?]

A right founded on the agreement that the money in the estate should be invested in funds bearing interest. Mr. Hofmeyr, as liquidator, entered into an agreement with himself as chairman of the Board of Executors.

[Maasdorp, J.: Yes, but what vested right was given up?]

The right to the interest on this money. It was a breach of trust to give up the interest, and we say that this was done ambitiose, and that the rights of the shareholders were thereby defeated. A trustee is obliged to put out money at interest. Voet (2-15-2), Van der Linden (1-5-3), Van der Keessel (Thes. p. 155). Technically, the respondents were here guilty of breach of trust.

[Mr. Schreiner: I object to that phrase.]

Then I will say that the respondents acted illegally, to the detriment of the trustees. There may be breach of trust without fraud. Collector of Customs v. Cape Central Railway (6 Juta, 402).

[Maasdorp, J.: There the money due was given up.]

In that case there was merely a right to the money; but in this case the respondents were deriving their 6 per cent. from the money.

[Mr. Schreiner: That does not appear on the pleadings.]

It is the presumption.

[Maasdorp, J.: No, they said, "We cannot pay interest, and you may take your money away."]

That does not touch the question. Mr. Hofmeyr, as chairman of the Board of Executors, had no right to enter into such an agreement with himself in his capacity as liquidator.

[Maasdorp, J.: You were not legally obliged to leave money there.]

But in point of fact it was there.

[Maasdorp, J.: I do not see what the agreement was. If I leave money with a man, all he undertakes to do is to keep the money safely. Here the agreement was that the capital sum should remain in the possession of the respondents, but that they should pay no interest.]

Then we say that the administrating liquidator should have taken the money from the Board and invested it.

[Maasdorp, J.: It does not appear on the pleadings that the trustees were bound to obtain interest.]

They were bound to do their best for the estate. See section 8 of the Declaration and section 4 of the Plea.

[Maasdorp, J.: You say that there is something fraudulent on the part of the trustee; that is your exception?]

We do not say that the trustee was guilty of moral fraud or of conscious breaches of trust, but we do say that he committed legal breaches. Further, if the administrator abandoned certain rights, his principal can vindicate such rights as have been illegally abandoned. Voet (6-1-19), Godefroi on Trusts (p. 67, line 3). Shareholders have the same rights, and here it is really the shareholders who have instituted this action. Principals are not estopped from claiming their rights should an agent abandon a liquid claim. Phillips v. Phillips' Trustee (2 Buchanan, 321). Forbes, Still and Co. v. Sutherland (2 Searle, 231). It has been argued that Mr. Hofmeyr ratified what had been done, but if a man cannot do a thing, how can he ratify it? Omnis ratihabitio retrotrahitur et mandato aequiparatur. Tudor's Equity Cases (Vol. 2, 5th Edition, paragraph on the liability of agent as trustee). So here we have a right to sue the Board of Executors as trustees. Burdrick v. Garrick (39 L.J., Ch. 369), Soar v. Ashwell (69 L.T., 585). It is not necessary to allege fraud in order to prove breach of trust—Lee v. Sankey (15 Eq., 204)—where an agent put the money of his principals into the funds of a board of which he was a director. Apart, however, from any technical breach of trust, Mr. Hofmeyr's principals had a right to interest. If a man deals with an agent, he is supposed to know what are the powers of that agent, and this is the position we take up on our plea (section 7 of plea).

[Maasdorp, J.: There is nothing to show what were the powers of the liquidator.]

The defendants are bound either to admit or to deny our allegation on this point.

[Maasdorp, J.: Suppose money is required from day to day out of an estate, could the funds be invested at interest?]

The Court cannot assume that the money was so acquired.

[Maasdorp, J.: Your exception seems only to apply to the fact that Mr. Hofmeyr had not claimed interest for three years?]

Yes, in a sense; but our exception meets the whole case raised on the plea.

Mr. Schreiner (for respondents): This matter should be argued on the pleadings, and there we find nothing about breach of trust. Mr. Hofmeyr's memory has been attacked; but all we have now to do with is the declaration (see par. 7). The act of the liquidators was either lawful or unlawful. If they acted unlawfully the exceptors should say so. We know Mr. Hofmeyr only as administrating liquidator. The exceptors admit that they agreed to deposit funds with the Board of Executors. They admit that Mr. Hofmeyr was appointed administering liquidator, and when we say what on their own showing he did, exceptions are taken. If the allegations in paragraph 7 of the declaration are true, how can it be said that the plea discloses no defence? Their position is that shareholders who neglect to draw their cheques can claim interest on them. How could we invest this money if we might be called upon at any moment to pay it out? Why should we be held responsible for the shareholders' negligence if they do not think fit to draw their money. As to these deposits, the Board was in the same position as a bank. There if a man first leaves money on a fixed deposit, and afterwards transfers it to a floating deposit, surely he cannot claim interest? This money had been left with the Board for some 13 years, and then they gave notice that after December 31 they would not continue to pay interest. The Board had not undertaken any permanent function, nor had they any reason to suppose that the liquidation of this estate would extend over a period of nearly 20 years. They admit that they first of all reduced the interest from 5 per cent. to 4 per cent., and subsequently refused to pay any interest whatever. I submit that the exception cannot be maintained.

[Maasdorp, J.: Suppose Mr. Hofmeyr had said: "We will take care of this money, but we will pay no interest on it"?]

That would be a perfectly tenable position, because they are not bound to keep the money at all: a fortiori, they could refuse to pay interest.

Mr. M. de Villiers (in reply): Trustees who allow trust funds to be merged are liable for interest. We object to the plea because it amounts to a confession of a tort. The accounts rendered by the plaintiffs themselves show that they had entire administration of the estate.

Cur. Adv. Vult.

Postea (October 27th).

Maasdorp, J.: The plaintiff alleges in his declaration that on the 31st May, 1881, the shareholders of the South African Fire and Life Assurance Company placed the liquidation of the life branch of the company in the hands of a committee of three, consisting of Jan Hofmeyr, the chairman of the company, William Farmer, and the plaintiff, who is now the sole surviving liquidator. In carrying out the liquidation, Jan Hofmeyr acted as administering liquidator, and in that capacity he entered into an agreement with the Board of Executors, of which the defendant is the secretary, whereby it was agreed that the board should administer the liquidation, and that the funds of the life branch should be invested in deposit with the Board at 5 per cent. interest, which interest was afterwards reduced to 4 per cent. The Board, when called upon to render an account, did so, but brought up no interest on the funds in their hands for the years 1897, 1898, and 1899, and after that they brought up the interest yearly and not every half-year, as they should have done. The plaintiff claims that the account shall be amended by the Board bringing up interest at 4 per cent. half-yearly from the beginning of 1897. It is further alleged in the declaration that unclaimed dividends due to shareholders remained in the hands of the Board and were merged in their funds. Of these the plaintiff claims an account, together with interest at the rate of 6 per cent. The defendant pleads that the Board acted in its administration of the liquidation under the direction of the liquidators, who were represented by Jan Hofmeyr as the administering liquidator, that on the 18th of September, 1896, it was agreed between the Board and the administering liquidator that interest should not be allowed on the capital funds in the hands of the Board after the 31st day of December, 1896, and upon that basis accounts were rendered and accepted during the years 1897, 1898, and 1899. And, as to the half-yearly interest, the defendant says that after 1899 the Board resolved, at the request of the plaintiff, to allow interest on the funds in their hands, but did not agree to allow interest to be stated half-yearly. Defendant says the Board was not bound to open an account for unclaimed dividends, but were always ready to pay the same upon the presentment of cheques, which were under the control of the liquidators. The defendant denies that the Board were in mora in regard to any unclaimed dividend, for the non-payment of which the Board is not in any way responsible. The plaintiff excepts to this plea as being bad and insufficient in law, and says that no cause is shown why the plaintiff should not obtain judgment as prayed. The exception does not point out in what respects the plea is bad and insufficient, and the grounds of the exception have to be gathered from the argument of counsel at the Bar. The main defence of the defendant on the more important branch of the case is the alleged agreement set forth in the 7th paragraph of his plea. The principal issue between the parties is with respect to interest on the funds in the hands of the Board for the years 1897, 1898, 1899. Defendant alleges that it was agreed between the administering liquidator and the Board that after December, 1896, interest should not be allowed. It is contended for the plaintiff that that agreement was ultra vires of Jan Hofmeyr as administering liquidator. But that contention is based upon an assumption of facts which are not admitted on the pleadings. It is impossible, without evidence, to decide whether the liquidator was or was not clothed with the power to deposit money with whomever he pleased, without entering into stipulation for the payment of interest. I can only say that it may, under certain circumstances, be quite proper for a liquidator, and he may, in fact, be obliged, during a liquidation in which he may be engaged, to deposit moneys which he may momentarily require, or for which he may have no investment, in some safe custody, without deriving any interest. It was further contended that the contract was ultra vires, because, as stated in the declaration, all moneys received by the liquidators should be invested in deposits, bearing interest half-yearly; but this allegation not being admitted, requires to be proved. It was also argued that it was a breach of trust on the part of the liquidator to give away the rights of the company. To decide whether any act is a breach of trust, it is necessary to know the conditions of the trust, and moreover, the alleged contract of September, 1896, did not involve the abandonment of any vested rights of the company. The contract in question, if valid, would be a defence to the claim for interest for the three years in dispute, and it is impossible to decide upon exception whether it is valid or not. The same observations hold good with reference to the agreement set up by the defendant, whereby it was agreed that interest should be allowed after 1899, but should not be allowed half-yearly upon the accounts. As to the issues between the parties respecting the interest on unclaimed dividends, it seems to me that the allegations contained in the plea would constitute, if proved, a good defence to the claim. The exception must, therefore, be disallowed, with costs.

Kotzé, J., concurred.

[Exceptor's Attorneys: Van der Byl and Van der Horst; Respondent's Attorneys: Van Zyl and Buissinné.]

D 4

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Honourable Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.) and the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

VAN NIEROP v. KIDNEY. { 1903. Oct. 27th.

Power of attorney—Revocation of agency.

The plaintiff ceded her boarding-house business to M., and gave him a power of attorney, authorizing him to dispose of the business and pay her debts. M. employed the defendant to sell the business and pay his creditors out of the proceeds. The defendant, who knew that the plaintiff was the real principal, sold the business and proceeded to pay the plaintiff's creditors, and was about to pay a debt claimed by one R. from the plaintiff, when the plaintiff informed him that she denied the debt and warned him not to pay it. In spite of the warning he paid the debt.

Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to claim an account from the defendant of his dealings with the proceeds, and that the defendant was liable to pay the amount of the claim which he had paid to R.

This was an action brought by Maria Christina van Nierop, lately a boarding-house keeper, of the Linda Vista, Rondebosch, against Wm. Lambert Kidney, a broker, of Cape Town, for a statement of account as to the sale of the business at the Linda Vista, payment of such sum as may be found due, and delivery of a certain promissory note for £333 6s. 8d.

The plaintiff's declaration was as follows:

1. The plaintiff is married out of community of property to Pieter Francois van Nierop, but has lived apart from him for several years, and has carried on business as a public trader on her own account. She resides at Rondebosch.

2. The defendant is a broker, carrying on business as such in Cape Town.

3. For some time until January last the plaintiff carried on the business of a boarding-house in premises known as Linda Vista, at Rondebosch. Thereafter a certain Caspar Henry May, acting on her instructions, authorised the defendant in his capacity as broker to sell the said business, that is to say, the goodwill, furniture, and other contents of the said boarding-house, and also to receive all money due to the said business, to make the necessary disbursements, and pay all creditors in respect of the said business.

4. The defendant undertook the matters so entrusted to him on plaintiff's behalf, and in or about the month of May last sold the said business to a certain Miss E. O'Sullivan for £1,900, and it was agreed that the purchaser should pay £900 in cash and the balance of £1,000 in three bills, each of £333 6s. 8d., bearing date June 19, 1903, and maturing, one on October 1, 1903, one on February 1, 1904, and one on June 1, 1904.

5. The said amount of £900 was duly paid, and the said three bills were handed over to the last defendant by the purchaser. The two last mentioned of the said bills have, at plaintiff's request, been delivered to her by the defendant.

6. The plaintiff has requested the defendant to furnish her with a true and proper account of his transactions, as above stated, but he had failed to do so, and has not handed over to her the first mentioned of the said three bills as he was to do.

Wherefore the plaintiff claims:

(a) A proper statement of account duly supported by vouchers, books, and other documents, showing all moneys received, expended, and disbursed by the defendant, for and in respect of the sale by him of the goodwill, furniture, and other contents of the said boarding-house.

(b) The debate of the said account.

(c) Payment of such balance as may be found to be due to the plaintiff upon a debate thereof, together with interest thereon.

(d) Delivery to her of a certain bill for £333 6s. 8d., signed by a certain Miss E. O'Sullivan, dated June 19, 1903, and falling due on October 1, 1903.

(e) Alternative relief.

(f) Costs of this suit.

To this declaration the plaintiff pleaded as follows:

1. Paragraphs 1 and 2 of the declaration are admitted.

2. In January, 1903, the plaintiff carried on business as a boarding-house keeper, in premises known as Linda Vista, at Rondebosch, and on the 20th of January she entered into a written agreement with one Casper Henry May, which, after reciting that owing to financial difficulties she had decided to relinquish the said business, and had arranged to hand it over to the said May, provided that she made over and assigned to the said May all her interest in the tenancy of the said premises, and of the trade and business carried on herewith, that plaintiff was to receive certain payment per month, that the said May was entitled and empowered at any time to dispose of the said business, and right to and interest in the said tenancy, and any surplus that existed over £1,500, the value fixed of the furniture and goodwill, to be divided between the plaintiff and May in equal shares, that the amount paid to all existing creditors and all furniture, etc., necessary to carry on the said boarding-house as a going concern were to be deducted from the £1,500 payable to the plaintiff when the business was sold, that all profits arising from the said business should belong to May, and that this agreement should only take effect in the event of May coming to an amicable agreement with existing creditors, and the landlord not objecting to May taking over the premises, and that to give greater effect to the agreement the plaintiff had granted a general power of attorney, and undertook not to revoke it during the continuance of this agreement.

3. The said May came to an agreement with the creditors, the landlord agreed to his taking over the premises, and the said May carried on the said boarding-house business under the said agreement from January to April, which became and was of full force and effect.

4. In April, 1903, the said May by written authority placed his said boarding-house in defendant's hands to be sold to the best advantage, keeping within the terms of May's agreement with plaintiff, handed over the full management of the said business to defendant, who was to receive all moneys, make all necessary disbursements, and to pay all creditors, and the said May delivered to the defendant the annexed balance-sheet, marked "A," which contains a list of creditors.

5. Under the said due and legal authority of the said May the defendant took over the management of the said business, and carried out the said instructions, and in or about the month of May, 1903, sold the said business to one Miss O'Sullivan, from whom he received £900 in cash and three promissory notes for £333 6s. 8d. each, and made disbursements and paid creditors, as instructed by the said May. The plaintiff had full knowledge of all the aforesaid facts, and from time to time received moneys from the defendant, acting as aforesaid.

6. On the 6th of August, 1903, the defendant received notice from the firm of attorneys, Michau and De Villiers, that the power granted him by the said May had been cancelled, and that they were authorised to obtain from the defendant all documents, papers, promissory notes, etc., held by defendant, in return for which they would pay whatever might be due to the defendant. The defendant therefore handed over to the said firm all documents, papers, etc., in his possession, including two of the aforesaid promissory notes, the proceeds of the third of the said notes having been paid by him to the creditors, shown on the said balance-sheet as authorised as aforesaid by the said May, and also delivered a full account showing all his dealings and transactions, and showing a balance in defendant's favour of £24 5s. 10d., which was paid by the said firm to the defendant.

7. Save as above, the defendant denies the allegations in paragraphs 3, 4, 5, 6, and 7, and says that the plaintiff is not entitled to demand any account from him, or the delivery of the said bill dealt with by him as aforesaid.

8. In case this Honourable Court should hold that the plaintiff was entitled to demand such an account from him he says that the plaintiff, through her attorneys, received a true and proper account of his transactions before action brought, and he says that the proceeds of the bill now claimed by the plaintiff was paid by him to the creditors of the said business as appears from the said account.

Wherefore the defendant prays that the plaintiff's claim may be dismissed with costs.

The plaintiff's replication was as follows:

1. The plaintiff says, with regard to paragraph 2 of the defendant's plea, that the power of attorney therein mentioned as being referred to in the written agreement therein mentioned was a power of attorney, dated the 16th day of January, 1903, and signed by the plaintiff in favour of Casper Henry May therein mentioned, appointing him as her agent for managing and transacting her business and for other matters.

2. The plaintiff thereafter, on the 20th day of January, 1903, signed a document purporting to be an agreement whereby in effect she leased the said business and her furniture to the said May for the sum of £20 per month, as will appear more fully from the said document on reference thereto, and this is the agreement referred to in paragraph 2 of the defendant's plea. She signed the same in ignorance of the terms thereof, and believing that she was then signing an agreement more specifically appointing the said May as her manager to carry on her business and to act on her behalf in respect thereof at a salary of £8 per month, until the said business was disposed of; and the said May did thereafter manage the business on those terms. The defendant was fully aware that the said May was such manager, and thereafter treated with him as such.

3. The plaintiff admits the allegations contained in paragraph 3 of the defendant's plea, subject to the qualification stated in the last foregoing paragraph.

4. The plaintiff in any case admits that she empowered the said May to dispose of the said business, and acknowledged and ratified the power given by the said May to the defendant to act in her behalf in the manner stated in paragraph 4 of the defendant's plea.

5. The plaintiff, on the 1st day of May, 1903, by mutual agreement with the said Casper Henry May, cancelled all powers given to him by her; and the said May and the plaintiff shortly afterwards gave notice to the defendant of such cancellation. The defendant thereafter ceased to recognise the said May in this matter, and had no further dealings with the said May therein, save in so far as he, acting as on behalf of the plaintiff, in the month of June following, called upon the said May to render him an account of monies received by the said May during his management of the business.

6. The defendant, in the month of June, 1903, paid out to a certain Ruthven, claiming to be a creditor of plaintiff's, the sum of £50 sterling, besides then and previously certain other smaller amounts.

7. The said sum of £50 was portion of a larger amount of £400 alleged by the said Ruthven to be due by her to him, but which sum the plaintiff at the time contended was not due to him, and was then the subject of litigation. The said Ruthven offered to compromise his claim for £150, which compromise the plaintiff rejected.

8. The plaintiff having become acquainted with the fact that such payments had been made, on the 25th day of June, 1903, through her attorneys required the defendant in writing not to make any further payments on her behalf to any person or persons without the concurrence of themselves, as being appointed by her to act as her attorneys and agents in the matter. On the 9th day of July following she again by her attorneys prohibited the defendant from making any further payments, and in particular any payments to the said Ruthven, and drew his attention to the fact that her power to May had been cancelled; and the defendant undertook to make no such further payments.

9. Notwithstanding the prohibition of the plaintiff, the defendant nevertheless, in the account rendered by him to her as mentioned in paragraph 8 of the defendant's plea, brought up two amounts of £50 and £100 respectively as having been paid on 15th and 30th July, 1903, respectively, and these amounts, if so paid (which plaintiff does not admit) were paid to the said Ruthven after the date of her prohibition.

10. The plaintiff through her attorneys again on the 29th July following instructed the defendant in writing not to part with any monies belonging to her; nevertheless the defendant, on the 4th day of August following, according to the said account, paid out to the said Ruthven the sum of £150 sterling. The plaintiff, however, does not admit that such payment was made.

11. The defendant unnecessarily discounted one of the bills mentioned in his plea in order to pay the said Ruthven, there being at the time more than sufficient funds of hers in his hands to pay all her other creditors; and he brought up in his account the sum of £10 18s. 8d. for discounting the said bill and for stamps thereon; for which amount the plaintiff is not liable.

12. The defendant also brought up on the said account he sum of £25 for services rendered by him in arranging to pay her accounts and the like, but the said amount is not due to him by reason of his having already brought up the amount of £95 for brokerage, and in any case is not claimable owing to his maladministration.

13. The plaintiff and the said May, on the 29th day of July, 1903, formally cancelled all powers given to the defendant on her behalf, and the plaintiff, through her attorneys, on the 6th day of August following, gave notice to the defendant of such cancellation, and required him to deliver over to them all papers and documents in his hands; and the defendant handed over to them the documents and papers mentioned in paragraph 6 of the defendant's plea. The plaintiff further admits the allegations contained in the said paragraph 6, but does not admit that the account delivered to her attorneys was a full and proper account of his transactions.

14. The plaintiff denies all allegations of fact or conclusions of law contained in paragraph 7 and 8 of the defendant's plea.

Wherefore the plaintiff prays the judgment of this Court with costs as before.

Mr. M. de Villiers (with him Mr. Van Zyl) for the plaintiff; Mr. Upington (with him Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers) for the defendant.

Casper Henry May secretary of the Salt River Co-operative Society, said that in June last year the plaintiff had a business at Rondebosch. He kept her books. In the early part of this year she was in bad health. He suggested that she should go to the seaside, and that he should look after the place in her absence. She afterwards received a wire from Mr. Ruthven, of Johannesburg, and he came down. Mrs. Van Nierop went away. It was agreed that witness should run the place in her absence, and that he should have her general power of attorney. He would be paid £8 a month, and have a share of profits.

Mr. Upington said he was reluctant to interrupt, but he must object to evidence being led in order to vary a written agreement.

Mr. De Villiers said that he was entitled to lead evidence from a third party.

De Villiers, C.J., said he did not think evidence should be led in order to upset a written agreement which was not in dispute. He would like counsel to quote an authority for his contention.

Witness (continuing) said that the agreement was drawn up, and also the power of attorney. He was being further examined by his counsel with regard to the agreement, when

Mr. Upington again interrupted, and said that he must object to this evidence.

Mr. De Villiers said that one important reason why they should have evidence as to the agreement was that Mrs. Van Nierop was not aware of its contents when she signed. Mr. Ruthven exercised a certain influence over the plaintiff. He held over her in terrorem an accommodation note.

[De Villiers, C.J. This final agreement is the one upon which all parties acted, is it not?]

Mr. M. de Villiers: Yes, my lord, but the difficulty is that I do not understand the exact position that my learned friend takes up.

Witness (continuing) said that the agreement was signed in his office. Acting upon that agreement, he gave certain instructions to Mr. Kidney, and employed him to sell on his behalf the boarding-house business. Witness took that step upon the power of attorney given to him by the plaintiff. The power of attorney was revoked in May. He gave notice of that fact to Kidney by calling at his office. Under the agreement Ruthven was to receive 75 per cent. of the profits eventually realised, after deducting witness's salary of £8 a month, and witness was to receive the remaining 25 per cent. Ruthven was also to have free board, and lodging, and washing, so long as he remained at the place. Ruthven took up the position that he was a partner in the business, and that he had a big share, because he held a bill for £480 odd passed in his favour by Mrs. Van Nierop. He did not come to understand the true position of affairs until the day he cancelled the power of attorney, when he found that Ruthven had no interest whatever in the business. On the 19th June he received a letter from Mr. Kidney, accusing him of receiving certain payments which were due to the business, and which payments he repudiated.

Mr. M. de Villiers next quoted the rule of evidence bearing on the point as to examining the witness as to the agreement, and contended that he was entitled to lead evidence from a third party as to a written agreement.

[De Villiers, C.J.: The agreement is not in dispute, and I do not see any need to call evidence for purposes of interpretation.]

Cross-examined by Mr. Upington: Witness said on the 25th April he wrote a letter to the defendant authorising him to dispose of the boarding-house, in which he said: "Having got into difficulties with my creditors, I place my boarding-house at Linda Vista, Rondebosch, with you, to be sold to the best advantage; of course, keeping within the terms of my agreement with Mrs. Van Nierop." He also handed over the full management of the business to the defendant, and authorised him to pay all creditors before settling with him (the witness). He entered into an arrangement by which Ruthven was to receive 75 per cent. of the profits, and witness was to receive 25 per cent. of the profits. Witness was to receive £8 a month as salary, irrespective of the profits. He saw Mr. Kidney at his office about the middle or so of May, and told him that he had cancelled his power of attorney from Mrs. Van Nierop, and that Mrs. Van Nierop would in future give him all instructions. When witness took over the business the plaintiff was in financial difficulties, and could not carry on the business any longer. Witness could not carry on the business successfully. He handed to the defendant a list of creditors, who were to be paid before he settled with witness. The schedule of creditors was prepared by Mr. Ruthven's brother, Mr. S. P. Ruthven.

Re-examined: Witness was never able to find out for whom Kidney worked.

By the Court: Witness made out the account produced in which Ruthven was shown to be a creditor to the amount of £449. Witness always told Mrs. Van Nierop that Ruthven was a creditor, but he did not then know the amount.

J. J. Michau, attorney, said that in May, 1902, he acted for Ruthven in respect of a claim he had against plaintiff for £66, an amount awarded to him under arbitration. In May, witness issued summons against the plaintiff. Appearance was entered, and the matter was settled by the parties, witness drawing up a promissory note for £480 on instructions from Ruthven. Mrs. Van Nierop was present. In July, summons was issued, and witness entered appearance. Ruthven issued summons. Witness had previously written to defendant in June. Ruthven repeatedly called on witness and offered to compromise for £150. Witness told him to go to his attorneys. On the 25th June witness wrote a letter to Kidney on plaintiff's instructions, enclosing a copy of a letter addressed to Miss O'Sullivan, and stating that Kidney was not to make any further payment on behalf of Mrs. Van Nierop without witness's concurrence. The letter to Miss O'Sullivan informed her she was to make no payments to anyone but witness. On the 25th June Kidney replied that he would not part with a penny until the letters to him and Miss O'Sullivan were withdrawn, or until an order of Court was made. If Kidney had not agreed not to part with the money, witness would have sought an interdict. On the 29th July witness called on Kidney, and had a conversation with him. Witness told him on no account to pay Ruthven, and he undertook not to pay Ruthven. Witness told him also that the power of attorney to May was cancelled, and that May had been called upon for an account. Kidney said he also had called upon May for an account, considering that May had not treated plaintiff properly. He said he would do all he could to protect Mrs. Van Nierop. The money was paid by Kidney to Ruthven after this conversation. Witness referred to further correspondence, in the course of which Kidney was warned that if he parted with money belonging to Mrs. Van Nierop he would do so at his own risk. When witness found from the account that payments had been made to Ruthven after the date of prohibition, he immediately demanded an explanation, and Kidney replied that he thought he had done what was right, and that he had acted bona fide throughout.

Cross-examined by Mr. Upington: On the 6th August witness sent a formal cancellation of the powers to Kidney. Witness did not know whether there was any other formal cancellation in existence. This was signed by Mrs. Van Nierop and May, and was dated July 29. Witness could not make up his mind at once as to whether it was necessary to send the formal cancellation to Kidney. On the 9th July witness went to Kidney, and told him no further payments were to be made. Witness was then acting for Mrs. Van Nierop and May. In July Kidney wrote that he had promised to hold the money until an interdict had been obtained, and as matters were continuing in a go-as-you-please style, he proposed to pay out moneys to prevent creditors from calling for a settlement of long overdue accounts, and to pay on the 27th July a sum not exceeding £150 on account to Ruthven.

Maria Christina van Nierop, the plaintiff, said that in January, on account of ill-health, she had to go to the seaside. It was arranged that witness's housekeeper and May should look after affairs. Witness gave May a power of attorney to sell the property. The place was sold on the 1st May, and witness went to see Kidney, whom she then met for the first time. She went to Kidney on the advice of Ruthven on the 1st May, and Kidney then said he had to go up-country, and that he could not then arrange the matter. Witness afterwards saw Kidney's son, who showed her a telegram which he said he had received from his father. This telegram read: "Don't pay any moneys out; we must protect Mrs. Van Nierop." This gave witness confidence in Kidney. In May witness gave the document produced, cancelling the power to May to Kidney. Kidney said it was all right, and that they could not act on that power, as it was in his possession. Witness told Kidney not to pay Ruthven. Kidney said that was all right. Afterwards she found that payments had been made to Ruthven. Witness went to see her attorneys (Messrs. Michau and De Villiers), and again went to Kidney, and asked for the return of the power. Kidney gave her the document to copy. Witness then first knew of the contents of the agreement. Witness saw the account, and instructed her attorneys to act.

Cross-examined by Mr. Upington: Witness was not in financial difficulties at the time of the agreement, and May did not, as a consequence of her embarrassed position, take over the business. She had never seen the produced list of creditors and balance-sheet. Ruthven had never brought these documents to her; he had promised to do so. She had never seen the agreement. She admitted that she had signed it. She thought at the time that if she withdrew the power of attorney the agreement fell back. She was not aware until the 16th February that the agreement was that they took over the boarding-house and got the profits. She knew that from a letter sent to her by May. She had only lately found that the whole business was in financial difficulties. Ruthven told her in the last week of April that he had put Mr. May out of the place, that he had put the place in the hands of the defendant, and that the defendant would see as to the payment of creditors. She told Mr. Kidney that she did not know her place was taken from her. She had thought she would be able to come back to it. She received a letter from May in February stating that the place had been taken out of her hands. She had handed over the letter to Mr. Michau. (Letter produced.) Ruthven and May continually promised they would let her see the agreement. All that was said to her by Ruthven and May was quite different from the agreement that she signed.

At this stage Mr. Upington said that his learned friend (Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers) had read the letter sent to the plaintiff by May in February, and he found that it had a bearing on the case. In the letter, which was dated the 21st February, May said he enclosed a detailed account to date, which he trusted she would find in order, also 30s. advance, to go on with in the meantime. He hoped to square and settle up at the end of the month, according to the way things stood. Should she then have overdrawn the amount agreed upon—viz., £20 a month—he would again advance her some money from time to time till the end of next month. After that date she would receive her allowance as agreed upon, according to the notarial agreement drawn up—viz., £20 a month. In the course of the letter May also protested against the conduct of Mrs. Van Nierop in several particulars, declaring that she had interfered with certain business that did not concern her, that she had caused a certain amount of disturbance at his place, that she had belittled him before his servants, that she had misbehaved herself in his place, that she had insulted a friend of his, Mr. Ruthven, and that she had insulted himself (Mr. May) in his place. He also stated that when he visited her the other night, in company with Mr. Ruthven, they were undoubtedly treated most shabbily, and they also had the door slammed in their faces, "which was a dastardly act." In future he must request her not to call at his place, but when she had any communication to make to him, to do so by letter. "Your interests in the business," he added, "are absolutely null and void. The place is entirely mine, and to do with as I please and think fit, and I most emphatically allow no man or woman to contradict me or interfere in my business. In the event of my selling the business, you are to receive £1,500, after deducting all amounts due to the creditors, and so forth."

[De Villiers, C.J.: What has this letter had to do with the case before the Court?]

Mr. Upington: The portion bearing on the case is this—that on the 21st February, May, in this letter, said to her, "The place is mine."

[De Villiers, C.J.: Yes, but what has that to do with the question whether this power continued, and whether he was not afterwards paying creditors when he had been told not to do so?]

Mr. Upington: I quite agree with that, my lord, but the point is this, supposing there had been no power at all under that agreement, Kidney, presuming that he was authorised by May, would have been entitled to do as he pleased.

[De Villiers, C.J.: It really has no bearing on the case.]

Mr. Upington: I must submit that my learned friend and myself both thought it had in this respect, and that she has stated that she knew nothing of the terms of the agreement.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Yes, but we have excluded that evidence. The Court has repeatedly said that we consider the agreement binding on both parties.]

Further cross-examined by Mr. Upington: Witness did not see a balance-sheet as to her affairs. She was repeatedly asking to see who it was that was pressing.

Re-examined by Mr. M. de Villiers: She had not seen any receipts between Ruthven and Kidney. Kidney was a "man of straw."

This closed the plaintiff's case.

The defendant, William Lambert Kidney, called by Mr. Upington, said that they came to him in April last, accompanied by Ruthven, and told him they wanted Linda Vista to be sold. He took down the particulars. He only saw May on one other occasion, as far as he remembered. The sale took place on the 1st May. On that date he left for the Transvaal, and returned on the 15th. He did not see May on his return. He denied that May came and told him that the power given to him by the plaintiff had been revoked. He often saw Mrs. Van Nierop, but she did not make any mention of the revocation of the power of attorney. The first notice he had of such a thing was on the 6th August. The bills given by the purchaser of the property were made payable to witness's order. He interviewed creditors. The business was in a very bad state, when he took it over. There were two or three judgments against the estate. There was a difficulty about the sale of the business. He made arrangements with the creditors as to not pressing their claims, and intimating that they would be paid out of the proceeds of the sale. He paid the amounts to Ruthven shown in the balance-sheet, less what was owing to witness. He had handed over the receipts to the plaintiff's attorneys along with the other documents. The payment to Ruthven was made by cheque. He had made payments from time to time to the plaintiff. Mrs. Van Nierop was fully aware of what was going on. She knew that the creditors were being paid. In the account witness had prepared there was a payment to Ruthven of £57 10s. on June 9. In paying creditors and also Ruthven, he was acting, he thought, on behalf of May. In addition to the schedule supplied to him by May of Mrs. Van Nierop's debts, he had also to pay debts contracted by May. His charges were for brokerage on the sale, and extra work previous to the sale. He had rendered an account.

[De Villiers, C.J.: What items in the defendant's account are in dispute?]

Mr. M. de Villiers said that they disputed three payments made to Ruthven or alleged to have been made to Ruthven, viz., £50 on July 15, £100 on July 30, and £150 on August 4. They also disputed a charge of £25 made by Mr. Kidney, and an item of £10 8s. 8d. for discounting a bill and stamps, saying that the bill was unnecessarily discounted, there being then, according to the accounts, sufficient funds in hand to meet all the creditors.

Witness (continuing) said that after the letter of the 15th July, Mr. Michau came to see witness, and the conversation which ensued between them was substantially as related by Mr. Michau with the exception that witness remembered nothing concerning the cancellation being said.

Cross-examined by Mr. M. de Villiers: Witness knew that Mr. Ruthven was suing for the money, and that appearance had been entered.

Knowing that, what right had you to pay money out to him?—Well; I acted as I was advised.

Mr. Ruthven is a man of straw, is he not?—It appears so.

What did Mr. Ruthven owe you? What did you get back?—I got back 2½ per cent. on the purchase price, £47. He agreed to give me that out of his own money.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Where is Ruthven now?]

Witness: In the Transvaal.

Mr. M. de Villiers: Mr. Ruthven now claims £150. Don't you say that is a fraudulent claim?—No answer.

Cross-examined as to why, after giving the understanding not to pay out money given to Mr. De Villiers, he paid Ruthven, the witness said that he understood from Mr. Michau that he would take out an interdict, considering the matter was so involved.

By the Court: Witness had given the receipts to Messrs. Michau and De Villiers' clerk.

[De Villiers, C.J.: I don't understand your taking this risk when you were told that if you paid out the money it would be entirely at your own risk.]

Witness: I was advised that I was acting entirely in accordance with the law.

Advised by whom?—By my attorneys.

Mr. Upington closed his case.

After hearing Mr. Upington on the facts and without calling on Mr. M. de Villiers, the Court gave judgment.

De Villiers, C.J.: It is not necessary in this case to inquire whether the plaintiff owed any money to Ruthven. Ruthven is not before the Court, and upon this question he might have something to say. The plaintiff's case, however, is that she disputes the debt; she says that the promissory notes given by her were accommodation notes, and that if she were sued by Ruthven she would have a valid defence against that claim. That is her case. Now, it appears that the plaintiff, wishing to sell her business, entered into an agreement with one May, under which May was to take over this business. At the same time a general power of attorney was given by her to May, and in the agreement it was provided that the power which she had given should be an irrevocable power. After that, on the 25th April, May entered into an agreement with the defendant, and that agreement is evidenced by a letter addressed by May to Kidney in the following terms: "Dear sir,—Having got into difficulties with my creditors, I place my boarding-house, known as Linda Vista, in Rondebosch, in your hands, to be sold to the best advantage, of course keeping within the terms of my agreement with Mrs. Van Nierop. I want you to see my creditors and make arrangements with them to wait until the sale is effected. In the meantime I hand you over the full management of the business, you to receive all the money, and make all necessary disbursements. I will at all times give you what assistance and information you require." And in a postscript it is stated: "I also authorise you to pay all creditors before settling with me." Now, there can be no doubt that any payments actually made by the defendant on behalf of May would be valid payments, and cannot be set aside. I am satisfied, however, that the defendant knew that the debts which he claims to have paid—viz., the debts to Ruthven, were debts not owing by May at all, but were debts owing by the plaintiff. He knew also that the business he had to dispose of was the plaintiff's, and that the proceeds belonged to her. The defendant proceeded under this arrangement to collect moneys, and to pay them out; but on the 25th June he got specific notice from the plaintiff's attorneys to the effect that no further payments of any debts owing, or alleged to be owing by Mrs. Van Nierop should be made. A letter was addressed to him in the following terms: "At the request of Mrs. Van Nierop we enclose herewith a copy of a letter we have this day sent to Miss O'Sullivan. We have to ask you not to make any further payments on behalf of Mrs. Van Nierop to any person or persons, without our concurrence, as she has appointed us to act as her attorneys and agents in all matters in which she is interested." The letter which was enclosed is clear and specific in its terms: "Dear Mademoiselle,—We are instructed by Mrs. Van Nierop to inform you that she has revoked the power of attorney granted by her in January last to Mr. May, and that at present nobody has any authority to receive any moneys due to her by you or anyone else, except the balance still owing by you to us," and so on. Now the letter of the defendant in answer to that is as follows: "In reply to your letter of the 25th inst., I beg to say I have neither the time nor the inclination to visit you on Mrs. Van Nierop's business. The matters are now in such a position that I shall not at present part with a single penny until your letters to me and to Miss O'Sullivan are withdrawn, or until I receive an order of Court." Here there are two conditions. He promised not to part with a single penny until either the two letters were withdrawn—they were never withdrawn—or he received an order of Court. Yet, in face of this, he proceeded to pay out this money to Ruthven. What was his authority? He had no authority. whatever. In the face of the express prohibition of Mrs. Van Nierop, he should not have paid any money to Ruthven. Now, I have no doubt that he acted bona fide, but he acted quite illegally. He had no right to bind Mrs. Van Nierop by paying this money to Ruthven. Let us suppose that Mrs. Van Nierop had a good defence to the claim of Ruthven. What right had he to prejudice her defence by paying without any authority? He knew before he made the payments that she had withdrawn the power of attorney which she had given to May, and that she wished no further payments to be made. Ruthven could not have compelled the defendant to pay him, and no other circumstance existed to make his power irrecoverable. He took this tremendous risk upon himself, and though he acted bona fide, he is bound to account for the money. In regard to the other items, I don't think they should be pressed. The plaintiff cannot claim back the promissory note, for which she got full credit. She may claim back, no doubt, the amount paid for discount, but upon the whole, seeing that he acted bona fide, and that he acted under what he supposed to be authority, I think that claim should not be pressed. In regard to the £25, there seems to have been considerable work attached to this business, quite independently of the brokerage. The further receipts, correspondence, and so on, entitle him to some payment, and I do not think £25 is excessive. It is said, however, that he had already got 2½ per cent. in addition from Ruthven, but I am afraid he will get very little out of that if he is made to pay out the £300 to the plaintiff. The judgment of the Court must therefore be for the plaintiff, for £300, with costs.

Maasdorp, J., concurred.

[Plaintiff's Attorneys: Michau and De Villiers; Defendant's Attorneys: Van Zyl and Buissinné.]

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.) and the Hon. Mr. Justice KOTZE.

AFRICAN BANKING CORPORATION V. HILLS AND ANOTHER. { 1903. Oct. 28th. Nov. 6th.

Debentures—Act 43 of 1895—Preference.

In an action to have it declared that the plaintiff, as the holder of debentures of a certain company, has a preference against the assets of a certain partnership, which, after the date of the issue of the debentures, had taken over the assets and liabilities of the company, it appeared that the assets were not mentioned and described in the debentures as required by Act 43 of 1895, and that the creditors of the partnership were in no way represented in the action.

Held, that it would be premature to declare such a preference, even if it could legally be claimed, until the estate of the partnership had been sequestrated or execution had issued at the suit of the debenture holder.

This was an action brought by the African Banking Corporation for an order declaring that the plaintiff had a preferent claim over the amount of the judgment in the case of Hills v. Colonial Government (13 C.T.R., 618, 661), and restraining the paying out of the same until the plaintiff's claim in respect of certain debentures had been fully satisfied.

The declaration set out that the plaintiff bank carried on business in London, Cape Town, and elsewhere. The defendants were Arnold Frank Hills, John Walker, John Walker, jun., and Thomas Mouat Cameron Walker, now carrying on business as the Grand Junction Railways, and Edward Ridge Syfret, who was the liquidator of the said railways. It appeared that in 1896 the original company entered into a contract with the Colonial Government for the construction of three lines of railway within the Colony, viz., Somerset East to Fort Beaufort, Fort Beaufort to King William's Town, and Oudtshoorn to Klipplaat. The company proceeded with the work, acquired rights, and expended money. In 1896 the company issued debentures, and passed a bond under date October 23, 1896. Thereafter, in July, 1898, Hills and the firm of John Walker and Sons, carrying on business in this colony and elsewhere, entered into partnership, for the purpose of constructing the said railways, and carrying out the said contract of 1896. On March 18, 1899, a fresh contract was, in so far as the said railway was still to be executed, entered into between the Colonial Government and the company registered in England, and known as the Thames Ironworks and Shipbuilding Company, for the further construction of the said railways. For the purposes of the said contract, the old company, in July, 1898, ceded and assigned all its rights to and interest in and to the contract to the said Thames Ironworks Company and to the defendant Hills, acting for and on behalf of the partnership. The work was proceeded with under the contract of 1899 until 1900, when fresh contracts were entered into with the said Government, in lieu of the said contract of 1899, in so far as the last-named contract still remained to be executed. The said Thames Company proceeded with the execution of the said contracts until December, 1900, when they ceded and assigned the contracts of 1896, 1899, and 1900 to the defendant Hills, acting personally and for and on behalf of the partnership. All transfers, cessions, and dealings were made without notice to and sanction by the holders of the said debentures. Thereafter the said Hills, acting as aforesaid, proceeded with the construction of the railway until the 30th June, 1902. He received sums from time to time from the Colonial Government in respect of the said contracts. The amount of costs incurred and expended up to the 20th July, 1898, was (according to the figures given in Hills's declaration in the case of Hills v. the Colonial Government) £254,769 13s. 6d. Further costs and expenses, amounting to a large sum, were thereafter incurred to the 20th June, 1902. From September, 1898, the plaintiff bank advanced large sums to the said Hills and to the partnership, amounting, with capital and interest to the 31st March, to £59,384 0s. 6d., for which debt promissory notes, signed by the partnership of the said Hills and Walker and Sons, were duly given to the plaintiff, who still held the same, and for the said advances the said Hills and the partnership pledged as security to the plaintiff certain debentures of the face value of £116,000, which debentures the plaintiff still held. In November, 1902, the said Hills, acting both personally and in his capacity as trustee for and on behalf of the said partnership, instituted an action against the Colonial Government, and was awarded £76,225 9s. 4d. Plaintiff prayed for an order declaring that the bank was entitled to preference over the total amount of the said judgment, given in favour of the said Hills, personally, or as trustee for the partnership, or the paying out of the assets mentioned, or any part thereof, until the said claim of £59,384 0s. 6d., together with interest and costs, had been fully satisfied, and such further and other relief as to the Court might seem meet, and as against the first-named defendant's interest and costs of suit.

The defendant Hills, in his plea, said that, by order of the High Court of England, Hills had recently been appointed receiver for the co-partnership business known as the Grand Junction Railways. Subject as above, the defendant admitted the other paragraphs, save as to paragraph 9. He denied the allegations, and said that the various cessions, assigns, and transfers referred to were made with the notice and consent of the holders of the debentures. As to paragraph 2, he admitted that a large sum was expended on the construction of the said works. He denied the allegations in paragraph 16, and said that in law the plaintiff was not entitled to a preferent claim, but was only entitled to rank concurrently with the other concurrent creditors of the said Hills.

The plaintiff filed a replication, upon which issue was joined.

Sir H. Juta, K.C. (with him Mr. McGregor) for plaintiff; Mr. Searle, K.C. (with him Mr. Close) for defendant.

Mr. McGregor said the other defendant, E. R. Syfret, had filed a plea craving leave to submit to the judgment of the Court, and praying to be relieved from costs.

Mr. Searle put in a number of documents relating to the transactions, and also put in a letter from John Walker and Sons to the manager of the A.B.C. Bank, giving notice on the 20th July, 1898, of the cessions.

Thomas Mouat Cameron Walker said he had been engaged in the office of the Grand Junction Railways since the contracts were entered into in 1896. There were certain creditors in the Colony of the partnership between Hills and John Walker and Sons. The amount of concurrent claims was £54,300. These claims consisted of £8,500 for salaries, £4,000 wages due on the Mossel Bay section, and the balance of about £42,000 was due principally to merchants for goods supplied at Port Elizabeth for the works on the three different railways, such as coal and stores. Some of the creditors had obtained judgments, the larger creditors, but there were a number of small creditors who had not taken out judgments. These were the people, he thought, who would come into competition with the claim of the A.B.C. Bank. The debts were incurred before July, 1902—he should say in or about December, 1901, and in the first three months of 1902. The company closed the works about March, 1902, and all the debts he had named would then be in existence.

Cross-examined by Mr. McGregor: The wages due on the Klipplaat-Oudtshoorn and Somerset East-King William's Town sections were ordered to be paid by the Government, but not the salaries and not the wages due upon the Mossel Bay section. The Mossel Bay section was not referred to in the action. He was not aware that the sums of £8,500 and £4,000 that he had mentioned were included in the provision as to payment by the Government. The item of £42,000 was for coal, timber, food, stores for the men, and a little corrugated iron, but it did not include the larger supplies of sleepers, rails or cement, these materials being purchased by the London office and sent out to South Africa.

Re-examined by Mr. Searle: The claims he had described were all local claims in connection with the working of the Cape office. The bank advanced the money now in question in England to the London office of the undertaking for the purpose of the construction of the railways here.

This closed the evidence.

Mr. Searle intimated that the defendants' contention was that all claims ranked alike, and that the plaintiff bank had no preference.

Mr. McGregor (for plaintiff): I will in the first place refer to Act 43 of 1895, Section 2 (as to the power of a Company to issue debentures and cause them to be registered, and the rights of the holders of such debentures), and Section 6 (as to the title of debenture-holders to enforce their rights). Now these debentures were duly registered and there was (I take it) no prior claim on them. The bearer of the debentures is entitled to receive £100. We do not claim priority over the other debenture-holders (see Section 2 of the contract). A subsequent section shows that if half-yearly payments have not been made the defendants are in default (see the agreement of July, 1902).

[De Villiers, C.J.: The property must be mentioned and described in the debenture.]

They had no property at the time, but they bound their future rights to property.

[De Villiers, C.J.: But the property bound by these debentures consisted of moveables, and mobilia non habent sequelam.]

This case must to some extent be guided by English law. As to the meaning of "debentures," see the Panmure Company case (5 Ch., 318). This is not a case of one company succeeding another; we have to deal with the same company throughout.

[De Villiers, C.J.: But they were different corporations.]

Yes, but see Palmer's Company Law (p. 73). Under Section 3 of Act 40 of 1898, the company have the power to deal with this property, and when Hills succeeded the Thames Ironworks he took over their liabilities, as well as their assets.

[De Villiers, C.J.: But was not a new agreement entered into with a new company?]

Yes; but here there is no question of personal rights, but of real rights. The property is bound, not any particular person. Having regard to the special facts of this case, I submit that the defendants are bound to pay off these debentures. The debenture-holders are entitled to payment on two grounds: (1) No interest can now be paid as the funds from which it would otherwise have been paid are in the hands of the Court; (2) the general rule as to priority of debentures is perfectly clear. Palmer's Company Debentures, Vol. 2, p. 401 and seq.). As to priority, see Palmer (p. 125) and Allen v. Richardson (13 Ch.D., 530). It is only equitable that a man who finances the whole undertaking should be responsible to those who have advanced funds to carry on that undertaking. It might be asked "why did not the debenture-holders try to enforce their rights at any earlier stage?" There was no reason why they should do so. This is no ordinary case of borrower or lender; it is almost impossible to say what persons are entitled to claim; but we do ask the Court to hold that the debenture-holders have priority.

Mr. Searle (for defendants): I must confess I can hardly follow counsel's argument. The Debenture Act never changed the Common Law. We deny that no notice was given to the plaintiff company. An Act of Parliament is sufficient notice to everybody. The debt is not denied, but the preference of the debentures is.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Doesn't the letter include all the rights of debentures?]

I submit not, my lord. "To pay all the debentures" is no acknowledgment of preference. They did not undertake to pay any preference. The plaintiff did not rely on that letter; otherwise he might have sued on a promise to pay. In all probability it would be found that when the bank ceased to advance money, the other creditors came in. If it be held that the bank had a preference, the whole of the assets would be swept away, and there would be nothing left to meet the liability of Colonial creditors to the extent of £60,000. See Hamilton on floating and fixed security. It is quite clear that a company may even part with the whole of its assets, and in such case it is the duty of the debenture-holders to apply to the Court for the appointment of a receiver, when the floating security would become a fixed security. Had an application been made to the Court on the occasion of the transfer, a receiver would undoubtedly have been appointed. I cannot see under what principle the debenture-holders of the Grand Junction Railway could recover their money, because the Grand Junction Railway were the first to obtain the rights, and an entirely new contract was made, and the character of the railway was changed.

[De Villiers, C.J.: On your argument that the company should have made the floating security a fixed one, didn't Hills give the bank the assurance that he was taking over all the liabilities? Doesn't his letter mean that he took over the debentures and all the liabilities?]

It is merely a personal matter, and they might sue him for breach of contract.

[De Villiers, C.J.: It is quite possible the Corporation might have done what you say they ought to have done, had they not received that assurance.]

They say that the debenture-holders had no knowledge of the transfer, so that the case your lordship suggests is not really the case they make out. The £76,000 awarded against the Government, over which the bank claims a preference, was awarded to Hills personally and as trustee of the partnership. Therefore, I contend that there can be no preference awarded in this action without the rights of creditors coming up. The plaintiff contends that he is entitled to preference upon the amount of the judgment given in favour of Hills personally or as trustee of the partnership. I submit that the liability of Hills, by contract or any other way, to pay this money does not specifically come up in this action. The point is, whether the plaintiff is entitled to preference over a fund which was awarded to the Grand Junction Railways and Hills together. The plaintiff has not even obtained a judgment. The application is standing over, just the same as the proceedings for provisional sequestration are standing over. The debentures were pledgeqd as a collateral security. The present action is really in the nature of a special case. The object is not to obtain judgment, but rather to obtain a declaration as to the plaintiff's right to preference, as against the claims of the other creditors. I would suggest that the other creditors might properly be given notice to intervene. In the undertaking, the Grand Junction Railways were not mentioned at all. I submit that this case, which is really a special case, should be answered in favour of Hills, acting for himself and as receiver of the Grand Junction Railways.

Mr. McGregor having been heard in reply,

Mr. Searle mentioned to the Court that a case which would be found of some value in this matter was the Government Stock and Investment Co. v. Manila Railway Co. (1897, Appeal Cases, p. 81).

Cur. Adv. Vult.

Postea (November 6):

De Villiers, C.J.: The question to be determined in this case is whether the plaintiff bank is entitled to a preference upon the amount of a judgment given by this Court against the Government in favour of Hills personally and as trustee for a partnership known as the Grand Junction Railways. It is admitted that the first defendants, namely, Hills and the partnership, are indebted to the bank in the sum of £59,384 for advances made in September, 1898, and that the bank holds as security for such debt debentures to the face value of £116,000, issued by the company known as the Grand Junction Railways (Limited) in 1896. This company was placed in liquidation in 1902, and the liquidator, who is the second defendant in this suit, does not dispute the bank's right to a preference in respect of any assets in his hands. It does not appear, however, that he has any such assets, for the judgment already referred to was given in favour of Hills and a partnership which, although having the same title as the company with the omission of the word "Limited," is a different persona from the company which issued the debentures. It further appears that the Supreme Court of Judicature in England has appointed Hills as receiver of the partnership, and it is in his capacity as such receiver, as well as in his individual capacity, that he now opposes the bank's claim to a preference. I am bound to say that, if the decision of the question at issue had affected only the immediate parties to this suit, I should have been prepared to hold that the first defendants are not entitled to set up the defence that the liabilities under the debentures attach solely to the original issuers of the debentures and not to the partnership which took over the contracts of the company. At the time when the partnership took over those contracts, it also agreed with the company to pay all its debts, including the debentures, and the fair inference is that it agreed that any preference enjoyed by the debenture-holders should attach to the assets of the partnership. It is of the very essence, however, of a preferent charge that it affects, not the debtors themselves, but other creditors of the debtors, and therefore an unregistered agreement to give such a preference cannot affect creditors who are no parties to such an agreement. The question of preference can only arise where the person claiming such preference enters into competition with other creditors, but in the present case the Court is asked to decide such a question as between the debenture-holders and the cessionaries of the issuer of the debentures, without regard to the rights of the creditors of such cessionaries. If such cessionaries had been in the possession of land specially mortgaged in favour of the debenture-holders, the latter would, of course, be entitled to a preference in respect of such land under the general law of this colony. It is not alleged, however, that the first defendants hold land thus mortgaged. As to any movables which they might hold the general rule of our law is mobilia non habent sequelam. It is not necessary now to inquire whether and to what extent this rule has been modified by Act 43 of 1895, for that Act only recognises a preference in respect of "so much of the property of the company as shall be mentioned and described in the debenture," and the debentures now in question contain no such description. The preference which is claimed is not a prior claim in respect of specific property, but a general priority, such as is continually asserted in insolvency under general bonds. Such a priority can only arise where there is a competition between creditors, and at present no such competition exists. If the estate of the partnership should be sequestrated, such competition would arise, but the person to protect the interest of the creditors would be the trustee of the insolvent estate, and not the receiver of the partnership. As the case now stands, it would be premature to decide the question of preference as against the first defendants. If they are solvent they will be able to pay the full debt owing by them to the plaintiff bank, and if they are insolvent their estate must be sequestrated, or, at all events, execution must issue in respect of the debt before the question of preference can arise. I find from the records of the Court that a provisional order has been granted for the sequestration of the estate of the partnership, and that the application for final sequestration is to be heard on the 14th inst. I find also that the bank has sued the partnership for the amount of its claim, but subsequently withdrew the action. The proper course for the bank to have taken was to proceed with its action, and raise the question of preference upon suing out execution for the amount of the judgment. If, however, the estate of the partnership should be sequestrated, the bank will prove its debt and claim a preference in insolvency, when the trustee will be able to protect the interests of the creditors. In the present action, however, there must be absolution from the instance, with costs, but the interdict already granted will be continued until the hearing of the application for the final sequestration of the partnership estate.

[Plaintiff's Attorneys: Sauer and Standen; Defendant's Attorneys: Tredgold, McIntyre and Bisset.]

Ex parte ANDREWS.

Mr. Alexander moved for an order authorising the issue by the Registrar of subpœnas to eleven persons in Cape Town, to appear before Advocate Close, who had been appointed as commissioner, on November 2, at 3.30 p.m. Petitioner was acting as agent in Cape Town for defendant's attorneys in Johannesburg, and the evidence of the said witnesses was most important to the defendant in the pending suit of Miriam Cohen v. David Langleben, to be heard in the High Court of the Witwatersrand, Transvaal. Mr. Alexander mentioned that the action was one for breach of promise.

Order granted as prayed.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Chief Justice, the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.), and the Hon. Mr. Justice KOTZE.]

ADMISSIONS. { 1903. Oct. 29th

Mr. Morgan Evans moved for the admission of Henry Sylvester Williams as an advocate.

Application granted, and oath administered.

Mr. Benjamin moved for the admission of Gerald Francis Joseph Scanlon as an attorney.

Application granted, and oaths administered.

PROVISIONAL ROLL.

ESTATE RIX V. CLEMENTS.

Mr. Buchanan moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £450, with interest and costs, and for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable.

Order granted.

FINCHAM V. ARNOT.

Mr. Gardiner moved for provisional sentence on a promissory note for £87.

Order granted.

HUTTON V. POOLE.

Mr. Sutton moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £1,000, with interest, and for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable.

Order granted.

ESTATE HIDDINGH V. THEUNISSEN.

Mr. Buchanan moved for provisional sentence on certain three mortgage bonds, with interest, and for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable. The bonds were for the amounts of £4,000 (less £16 10s. paid on account), £600, and £1,000.

Order granted.

SMITH AND CO. V. ALLIS.

Mr. Van Zyl moved for provisional sentence on a promissory note for £128, with interest and costs of suit.

De Villiers, C.J., pointed out that the promissory note was unstamped. There would be a fine of a sovereign to be paid upon it.

Order granted, subject to the document being stamped and the fine paid.

MALCOMESS AND CO. V. MULLER.

Mr. M. Bisset moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond, with interest and costs of suit.

Order granted.

ILLIQUID ROLL.

NOLAN V. SIBBETT AND STEPHAN. { 1903. Oct. 29th

Rule 319—Damages.

The defendants had undertaken to finance the plaintiff by raising a certain loan for him. This they failed to do. He now sued them under Rule 319 (inter alia) for damages on the ground that they had prevented him by their default from completing a certain contract. The Court refused to give damages (1) on the ground that the damages claimed were not liquid; (2) that the defendants had not guaranteed a loan.

This was a motion for judgment in default of plea under Rule 319, for (a) £474 19s. 6d., balance of moneys due from defendants to the plaintiff, together with interest due thereon a tempore morae; (b) £6 2s. 11d. as and for damages sustained by the plaintiff by reason of the default of the defendants; (c) costs of suit.

Mr. Gardiner, in moving, explained that the plaintiff had had to incur certain legal expenses which had proved fruitless by reason of the defendants having failed to render to him the assistance they had promised. These expenses could be ascertained, and he submitted that they were therefore liquid damages.

[De Villiers, C.J.: You had better call your evidence.]

William Jones Nolan said that in May of this year he purchased certain properties through the defendants. He arranged with Sibbett that they should finance him. Sibbett and Stephan were to provide the money owing to witness, and to raise the rest of the purchase price on mortgage. Chapman, the vendor, agreed to take back one of the properties. Witness had been put to certain legal expenses. The transfer expenses were £6 2s. 11d.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Have you the bill of costs?]

I put in the taxed bill.

[De Villiers, C.J.: But where is the consideration?]

We engaged to purchase their property, and because they could not give us the assistance they had promised we have incurred useless costs.]

[De Villiers, C.J.: I do not see how you have proved your damages.]

Yes, we have called our evidence, and the plaintiff is always at liberty to prove a liquidated demand under Rule 319 where the defendant has been barred.

[De Villiers, C.J.: But here the defendants have not agreed to pay money but to try to find somebody who will. How could you sue them for breach of contract?]

They not only promised to try to raise the money, but to do so.

De Villiers, C.J.: Judgment will be given for the first item, with costs, but not upon the second item. The item of £6 is not really liquidated damages, and it is not clear that there was a guarantee that the defendants would succeed in finding a person to lend the plaintiff the money.

WIENER AND CO. V. EBRAHIM.

Mr. Smith moved, under Rule 329d, for judgment for the sum of £114 5s. 10d., for goods sold and delivered, with interest a tempore morae, and costs of suit.

Order granted.

ESTATE ISAACS V. MARKS.

Mr. Close moved, under Rule 319, for judgment in default of plea. The declaration claimed the sum of £21 for rent. Originally provisional sentence was granted for the sum, which was claimed upon a lease, but thereafter the defendant entered appearance, and the declaration was filed. The defendant was in default of plea to the declaration, and was barred. He then gave notice of an application, which was set down for the 15th inst., for removal of bar and for leave to plead. That application was granted, but on the 15th defendant made no appearance, and, in case there might have been a mistake, the Court ordered the matter to stand over. Defendant had not appeared since. Counsel asked that costs should include costs of the notice to remove the bar.

Order granted as prayed.

ESTATE OLGAAR V. OLGAAR.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved, under Rule 329d, for an order directing the defendant to hand over certain goods belonging to the plaintiff's estate, or to pay their value.

Order granted.

VAN DER BYL AND CO. V. MINNAAR.

Mr. Struben moved, under Rule 329d, for judgment for £61, for goods sold and delivered, with interest and costs.

Order granted.

ZWARENSTEIN V. SIMES.

Mr. Buchanan moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £28 4s. 7d., balance of account. The defendant incurred certain costs and damages in connection wtih a divorce case, conducted by the plaintiff for the defendant, and had paid £30 on account.

Order granted.

MARSH AND SONS V. HUXHAM.

Mr. Russell moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £146 1s. 5d., balance of account for goods sold and delivered, with interest a tempore morae and costs.

Order granted.

REHABILITATIONS. { 1903. Oct. 29th.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for the rehabilitation of Johan Christian Marais, whose estate showed a deficiency of £139 odd.

Granted.

Mr. Benjamin moved for the rehabilitation of Bernard Viland, who became insolvent in 1885.

Order granted as prayed.

Mr. C. W. de Villiers moved for the rehabilitation of Johannes Lodovicus Conradie, whose estate was surrendered in 1882, and showed a deficiency of £1,081.

Order granted, the Chief Justice stating that in view of the trustee's report it was only because the applicant had been insolvent for 20 years that he was rehabilitated.

Mr. Benjamin moved for the rehabilitation of Wm. Alfred Grey Webster, whose estate was surrendered in 1887, and showed a deficiency of over £693. The trustee called attention to the fact that applicant had for some years been absent from the Colony.

Granted.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

Ex parte SIMPSON.

Mr. C. W. de Villiers moved to make absolute a rule nisi, granted under the Derelict Lands Act.

Order granted.

Ex parte FRIEDLANDER.

Mr. Upington moved as a matter of urgency for a temporary interdict. Petitioner said that he was an attorney of this Court, and held general power of attorney of a firm in Hamburg, Germany, who were the owners of certain stock and furniture situate in and upon the premises known as number 68, Caledon-street, Cape Town. On October 11 last the petitioner entered into an agreement with Grayer and Sussman to buy the said stock for £240, payable in four instalments, the first to be £50 cash, and the remainder in sums of £60, £70, and £60 respectively. None of these instalments had been paid, except the cash payment of £50. Petitioner, on going to the said premises, found that they had been cleared of all stock, and that the stock was now in the possession of one

Lewis, of No. 1, William-street. Petitioner had reason to believe that the said Grayer and Sussman intended to defraud his principals. He intended to proceed against the said Grayer and Sussmann for compulsory sequestration of their estate.

A rule was granted calling upon Lewis to show cause on Thursday next why he should not be interdicted from parting with the property pending an action to be instituted by the petitioner, rule to operate as an interdict in the meantime leave being granted to Lewis to move the Court for the discharge of the order. It was understood that the petitioner would proceed at once to sequestrate the defendant's estate.

Ex parte OOSTHUYSEN.

Mr. Alexander moved for a rule nisi to be made absolute, calling upon John William Armstrong and the trustee in the insolvent estate of Armstrong, formerly trading under the style of Holland and Co., to show cause why an order should not be granted, cancelling the entry in the Debt Registry of the Colony of a certain mortgage bond.

Rule made absolute, as prayed.

Ex parte SCHOOMBIE.

This was an application to have made absolute a rule nisi calling upon one John McAlister to show cause why, on account of his absence from the Colony, he should not be removed from the executorship under his late wife's will. The petition of Johannes Jacobus Schoombie stated that McAlister had lived at Steynsburg, but had gone away after his wife's death to Johannesburg, leaving his child, and his present whereabouts were unknown. Under the will of his wife, the minor child of the marriage was appointed sole heiress, and the respondent was appointed executor. Petitioner prayed that the respondent should be removed from executorship, and that an executor dative of the estate and a guardian of the said minor should be appointed.

The affidavit of the respondent stated that he was employed as an engine driver in Johannesburg by the Municipality, that he made no secret of his departure from Steynsburg when he left, and that it was his intention when he settled down again in a home of his own to have the said child with him. His attention was only called to the application by accident, upon his seeing a notice in the "Star." He verily believed the object of the petitioner was to possess himself of the said property.

Mr. De Waal for applicant; Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers for respondent.

Mr. De Waal said that he did not know that he could really press for the removal of the respondent from the executorship, but he thought there were grounds for maintaining that he did not intend to carry out his duties as executor. More than six months had elapsed since the death of his wife, and no account had been filed with the Master.

Mr. De Villiers was not called upon.

De Villiers, C.J.: The estate can be administered without the respondent necessarily coming from Johannesburg to Steynsburg. There has been no sufficient cause shown for removing the respondent from the executorship. There will be no order upon the petition. Costs will come out of the estate.

ESTATE MULLER V. MULLER.

ESTATE MULLER V. DU TOIT.

In the first of these motions the respondent, Abraham Johannes Muller, of Groot Drakenstein, Paarl, was called upon by the applicant, Jacob Isaac de Villiers, in his capacity of sole surviving trustee of the insolvent estate of Hendrik Lodewyk Muller, of Fortuin, in the district of Sutherland, to show cause:

Why a proof of debt tendered by the respondent for £700 and accepted by the Master should not be expunged on the ground that it is false and unfounded, and

Why the respondent should not be interdicted from parting with any property either in the said insolvent estate or in his own estate, pending an action to be brought by the applicant to recover any property in the said estate.

In the second case the same applicant applied to have a proof of debt lodged by one Paul Phillippus du Toit for £35 on the same insolvent estate expunged on the ground that such claim was false and unfounded.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C., with him Mr. Searle, K.C., appeared for the trustee; Mr. Upington appeared for the respondent Muller, and Mr. Benjamin for Du Toit.

Mr. Schreiner said that the two motions were so closely allied that they might be taken together. Very important affidavits had been filed in the first case, and in the second, certain affidavits had been handed in at noon that day that would necessitate replies. Interdicts would be asked for in Muller's case, and the applicant was in this position, that the insolvent, who was the principal witness, and able to answer the allegation of the respondents, was at Sutherland. He thought the motions should stand as summonses, in order to proceed to file pleadings. The debt was alleged to be money advanced to the amount of £700, and it was alleged that the respondent, Mr. A. J. Muller, had been taking all the assets out of the insolvent estate. They had either to ask for a postponement to file further affidavits, or else to go to trial. The debt in the second case, that of £35, was alleged to be the other way about, and it was stated that the second respondent had been put in as a creditor, so as to get a vote in the insolvent proceedings. Counsel moved that the Court should direct that the two notices should stand as summonses, in order to proceed with the action.

Mr. Upington, for the respondent Muller, raised no objection to the case being tried by pleadings, but he submitted that costs should be made costs in the cause.

Mr. Benjamin, for the respondent Du Toit, said he was instructed to oppose the matter being tried by action. It was within the discretion of the Court to say whether or not the matter should be tried by pleadings. The amount was so exceedingly small, and as the matter had been standing over for about four years, he submitted that his client, who had been prosecuted for perjury, should not be put to an expensive trial.

De Villiers, C.J., said that if the case of Du Toit had stood alone, the Court might have heard the case at once. As there was some connection between the two cases, he thought it better that both cases should stand over. The Court would therefore order that the questions of fact in these cases be tried by action and that the notice of motion stand in lieu of summons, costs to be costs in the cause.

[Applicant's Attorneys: Walker and Jacobsohn; Respondent's Attorneys: Faure and Zietsman.]

Ex parte ROBERTSON. { 1903. Oct. 29th.

Rule of Court.

The Court refused to make a certain agreement between the petitioner and the Municipality of M. a rule of Court.

Mr. Buchanan, for the petitioner, moved that a certain agreement with the Mowbray Municipality with regard to the construction of a stormwater drain and sewer convenient to the petitioner's property should be made a rule of Court.

De Villiers, C.J., said that a precedent could not be established in the matter, and that the application must be refused.

TUROK V. CHRISTOPOULUS AND ANOTHER.

Mr. Alexander applied for this matter to stand over until Thursday next to enable applicant to reply to an answering affidavit filed that day. The application was for an order amending a certain contract of lease.

Mr. Pyemont, for the defendant, said that the affidavits showed that the matter should be dealt with by way of action. It was by no means clear that there had been a mistake.

Mr. Alexander said that if the affidavits of his client were correct, a purely clerical error had been made, and the matter was one that could be decided by motion. The figures 161 had been inserted instead of 165.

De Villiers, C.J. (to Mr. Alexander): You will have to take the risk of having to pay costs in case it is decided that the matter cannot be dealt with by motion.

The matter was ordered to stand over till Thursday next, question of costs also to stand over.

Ex parte LORD AND ANOTHER.

Mr. Buchanan moved for leave to raise a sum of £4,500 on second mortgage, in order to renovate and repair the Central Hotel at King William's Town.

Order granted as prayed.

BANGEE V. DUSTAY.

Mr. Burton (with him Mr. Upington) moved for a temporary interdict restraining Ebrahim Cotwal and all others from disposing of the property of petitioner's partnership with Dustay and the appointment of a receiver. The petitioner said that he resided at Lady Grey, in the division of Aliwal North, and he was the plaintiff in an action against the respondent for £500 sterling, damages sustained through the illegal action of the said respondent by virtue of his denial, and refusal to abide by a certain partnership agreement in respect of a certain retail business and for an account of the said partnership. Petitioner said that the goods of the partnership had been attached under a judgment against the respondent, that the respondent had now surreptitiously disappeared leaving another person ostensibly in possession, but deponent had reason to believe that the sale was merely a bogus one to defeat the petitioner's objects. Counsel said the action was set down to be heard on the 13th November, and after the pleadings had been closed the goods of the partnership had been attached upon judgments against the private estate of Dustay. It appeared that the principal of the attachments had now been withdrawn, and the bulk of the goods had gone back to the possession of the supposed buyer. The application was made ex parte.

A rule was granted as prayed, rule to be served upon Ebrahim Cotwal, to be returnable on the 13th November, and to operate as an interdict in the meanwhile. The Court also authorised Mr. H C. M. Getliffe to take charge of the property on behalf of the alleged partnership.

SYME V. COLONIAL GOVERNMENT. { 1903. Oct. 29th.

Interdict—Costs—Raising of road—Public utility.

The Government, in the course of constructing an overhead bridge over one of its railways, found it necessary to raise a divisional road leading to the bridge, and this was done with the consent of the Divisional Council. In consequence of the raising of the road the applicant's property, which bordered on the road, was deprived, in part, of convenient access to the road.

Held, that although the applicant might be entitled to compensation for depreciation in the value of her property, she was not entitled to an interdict restraining the raising of the road.

This was an application on behalf of one Miss Syme, who is the owner of property abutting upon the Lansdowne-road, Claremont, for an interdict, restraining the Colonial Government from proceeding with the erection of a certain wall and for costs of the application.

The affidavits of the plaintiff and others stated that the C.G.R. were constructing an overhead crossing at Claremont, and were raising the road and building a wall on the boundaries of the applicant's property. If this wall were erected, it was believed, the surface water would be thrown on her property, and the value of the estate would be diminished, inasmuch as applicant would be prevented from cutting the land into building lots, and the frontage to Lansdowne-road would be lost. Mr. Jones, sworn appraiser, estimated the damage to the property at about £1,200.

The affidavit of Mr. Dalton, chief engineer of the C.G.R., stated that work complained of was necessary work in connection with the erection of the overhead bridge at Claremont, and was being done with the approval of the Divisional Council, in which body the said road was vested. The plaintiff was mistaken in supposing that the said work would throw the surface water upon her property. It would not prevent the applicant from cutting up her land into building lots, though it would, no doubt, affect a portion of the frontage to the applicant's ground.

It appeared from correspondence which had taken place between the respective attorneys that the C.G.R. intimated that they recognised Miss Syme's claim to be compensated, that the applicant then offered to submit the matter to arbitration if the Government would pay the costs of the application, and that the Government replied that, as there were no grounds for an interdict, they could not agree to pay the costs.

Mr. C. W. de Villiers, for the applicant, and Mr. H. Jones, for the respondent, were heard on the question of costs.

De Villiers, C.J.: This application was originally made on two grounds: (1) That by reason of the respondents raising the road, the surface water would be thrown upon the applicant's property, and (2) that her property would be seriously diminished in value, as it would prevent her cutting it up into building lots, and deprive her of frontage to Lansdowne-road. The engineer, Mr. Dalton, in his affidavits, states that the applicant is mistaken in thinking that the surface water would be thrown upon her property, as a footpath would be constructed from the top of the road, and drained with kerbing and guttering, which would prevent any water from passing over the road on to her ground. There is no answer to this, and I think, therefore, that the applicant abandons the first ground that water would be thrown upon her property. The Court now has to deal with the second ground that her property would be seriously damaged in value in consequence of the raising of the road. But the raising of the road took place with the full consent of the Divisional Council. It is admitted that if the Divisional Council had done it the Court would not have interdicted the Divisional Council. Now, in my opinion, if the Court would not interdict the Divisional Council, the Court would equally not interdict the Government, acting with the consent of the Divisional Council in raising this road if it is done for the purposes of public utility. No one can deny that this railway bridge is for purposes of public utility, and, I am satisfied, even if compensation was ultimately payable, it is not a case in which the Court would grant an interdict. This is not a case of injury to property, which would justify an interdict. Now, it is quite true, that the attorneys of the Government did recognise the applicant's claim to be compensated, but it does not follow that it is any recognition of a right to an interdict against a construction of this road. In the absence of proof that the applicant was entitled to such an interdict, I am of opinion that the costs of that application should be paid by the applicant. There will, therefore, be no order upon this application, but the applicant will have to pay the costs.

Kotzé, J., concurred.

[Applicant's Attorneys: W. E. Moore and Son; Respondent's Attorneys: Reid and Nephew.]

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Chief Justice, the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D., the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP, and the Hon. Mr. Justice KOTZE.]

REVIEW.

REX v. STUURMAN BOTES. { 1903. Oct. 30th.

Evidence from spoor.

Kotzé, J., said that this case, which had been heard before the Resident Magistrate of Sutherland, had come before him for review. The defendant was charged under Act 35 of 1893 with the theft of one sheep, the property of Michael Boshof, and was sentenced to twelve months' imprisonment with hard labour, and to receive 25 lashes. The case rested entirely upon the evidence of a little girl, nine years old, the daughter of Boshof, as to the prisoner's spoor. To test her knowledge of the prisoner's spoor certain other prisoners were taken along with the prisoner Botes outside the gaol, and they made footmarks on some ashes, when the little girl, without hesitation, pointed out the prisoner's spoor. A police sergeant who was present says there was very little difference between the different spoors. The evidence of spoor should be very cautiously acted upon, especially when it stood by itself, and unless the evidence was very clear and satisfactory, he did not think there should be a conviction. In the present case, there certainly was a doubt, and he thought, having regard to the age of the child and the fact that her pointing out the spoor might have been purely accidental, the prisoner ought to have had the benefit of the doubt, and the conviction, therefore, should be quashed.

TRIAL CAUSES.

SWART V. SWART.

This was an action brought by Susanna Maria Johanna Swart, of Bredasdorp, against her husband, now residing in the Orange River Colony, for restitution of conjugal rights, failing which a decree of divorce, plaintiff to have custody of the children, division of the joint estate, and a contribution by way of maintenance for the children. Mr. Upington appeared for the plaintiff, and the defendant was unrepresented.

Charles W. H. Smith, clerk, in charge of the Marriage Record at the Colonial Office, produced the original register of the marriage.

Susanna Maria Johanna Swart said she was married to the defendant on the 14th June, 1887, at Riversdale. Four children had been born of the marriage. The eldest was 14 years of age, and the youngest 10. All the children were girls. Witness and her husband at first lived in the division of Ladismith, Cape Colony. They lived together until 1889, when the defendant left for Johannesburg. He stayed away a couple of months, and then returned, when they lived at Heidelberg. He lived with her until 1898, when he went to Johannesburg. He made an arrangement that his brother, who was a storekeeper, had to supply her with goods, and pay for the children's schooling. This was done until 1899. The defendant had not supported her since. She had asked him to come back. In his replies he had asked her to give him a divorce, as he could not live with her again. She was quite willing to go and join her husband in the Orange River Colony. The defendant was a general dealer at Vrede, and was doing a good business. Witness was at present housekeeper at the Heidelberg Hotel.

By the Court: The defendant fought for the Dutch during the late war, and was taken prisoner. He was sent to the Green Point Camp, and was afterwards removed to Bombay. Defendant had asked her to let him have a divorce.

Decree of restitution granted, defendant to return to or receive the plaintiff on or before the 31st December, failing which a rule calling upon the defendant to show cause on the 12th January why a decree of divorce should not be granted, why he should not be ordered to contribute a sum of £4 per month as maintenance to each child until the said children should have attained the age of 16 years, and why he should not pay costs.

MIDDLEWICK AND ANOTHER V. BRODIE.

1903. Oct. 30th. „ 31st.

Lease—Evidence—Credibility of witnesses.

This was an action instituted by the plaintiffs as executrices testamentary in the estate of the late William Middlewick against Robert Charles Brodie, of the farm Klipkraal, in the district of Sterkstroom, for the ejectment of the defendant from the farm Donkershoek, and damages in respect of refusal to quit and the destruction of trees.

The declaration was in the following terms:

1. The plaintiff Susannah Elizabeth Middlewick is the surviving spouse, and the plaintiff Annie Elizabeth Wright (born Middlewick), who is married out of community of property to Walter Irvine Wright, and by him duly assisted as far as need be, is the daughter of the late William Middlewick. The plaintiffs have been duly appointed, and have been granted letters of administration dated 23rd June, 1896, as executrices testamentary of the estate of the said late William Middlewick, and sue in their capacity as such. The first-named plaintiff also sues in her individual capacity.

2. The defendant is a farmer residing at the farm Klipkraal, in the district of Sterkstroom, and division of Queen's Town, in this colony.

3. By the joint last will and testament of the said late William Middlewick, who died on or about the 24th day of May, 1896, and of his spouse, the first plaintiff, the usufruct for life of the farm Donkershoek, in the said district and division, of which said farm the said Middlewick was, in his lifetime, the registered proprietor, was bequeathed to the first-named plaintiff, and the said plaintiff has adiated and enjoyed the said usufruct.

4. In or about the month of June, 1900, the plaintiffs, in their said capacity, and the defendant entered into a certain agreement of lease whereby the plaintiffs let and the defendant hired the said farm Donkershoek for a term of three years, commencing on the 1st day of July, 1900, and terminating on the 1st day of July, 1903, and at a rental of £100 per annum, upon the terms and conditions set forth in a certain document, signed by the defendant on or about the 4th day of September, 1900, copy of which is hereunto annexed marked A.

5. By clause 5 of the said document, it is provided that the lessee shall not fell or cut, or cause to be felled or cut any timber or trees of whatsoever kind growing upon the said property, except such as he may require for firewood for domestic purposes, and then such firewood shall only be obtained by pruning the said trees.

6. The defendant entered into possession and occupation of the said farm under the said agreement, and subject to the said terms and conditions, and has enjoyed all the rights, privileges, and benefits of the said lease for the said period of 3 years, which expired on the 1st day of July, 1903.

7. The plaintiffs have duly given the defendant full legal notice to quit and give up possession of the said farm, but the defendant wrongfully and unlawfully refused, and still refuses, so to do.

8. The defendant has further wrongfully, unlawfully, and in breach of the said agreement, cut and felled great quantities of timber and trees growing upon the said property, and has thereby damaged the said property to the extent of £213 sterling.

9. By reason of the said wrongful and unlawful refusal of the defendant to quit and give up possession of the said farm, the plaintiffs have been deprived of the use and occupation thereof, have been unable to let the same, and have otherwise sustained damage in the sum of £200 sterling.

Wherefore the plaintiffs claim: (a) That the defendant be ordered to forthwith deliver up to the plaintiffs possession and occupation of the said farm Donkershoek, and that the defendant be ejected from the same. (b) Judgment for the sums of £200 and £213 sterling as and for damages as aforesaid. (c) Alternative relief. (d) Costs of suit.

The defendant's plea was as follows:

1. The defendant admits paragraphs 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6 of the plaintiffs' declaration.

2. As to paragraph 7 thereof, the defendant says that in or about March, 1902, the plaintiffs agreed to and did let the said farm to the defendant from the 1st of July, 1903, the date of expiration of the current lease, for three years, on the following terms and conditions: (a) The plaintiffs to have the right to extend the said period of three years to five years, if they so desired; (b) the rent to be £110 per annum; (c) the defendant to pay all rates and taxes; (d) the other terms to be the same as those of the current lease (viz., the lease annexed to the declaration).

3. The defendant says that, under and by virtue of the said agreement of lease in the preceding paragraph mentioned, he is and has been since the 1st of July, 1903, in just and lawful possession of the said farm, and is entitled to remain in possession thereof.

4. Save that he admits receiving notice to give up possession and refusing to do so, the defendant denies paragraph 7 of the declaration.

5. The defendant denies all the allegations in paragraphs 8 and 9.

Wherefore the defendant prays that the plaintiffs' claim may be dismissed, with costs.

Mr. Upington (with him Mr. Alexander) for plaintiff; Mr. Burton (with him Mr. Van Zyl) for defendant.

Mr. Upington said that the plaintiffs proposed to amend the declaration, and to substitute £800 damages for the amount of £213. He understood that his learned friend had no objection.

Mr. Burton intimated that they raised no objection.

Mr. Upington said that the defendant admitted that notice was given to him to quit. The issues of fact would seem to be, firstly, whether there was a new lease granted on the terms set forth in the plea; secondly, what damages had, in point of fact, been sustained by the felling of the timber; and, thirdly, if any new lease was granted, and what damage had been sustained by the plaintiff by being kept out of possession. Counsel submitted that the onus of proving the issue of the alleged new agreement of lease rested upon the defendant.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Yes, but shouldn't you prove your damages as to the felling of the trees?]

Mr. Upington said that that, no doubt, was so, and he would accordingly call evidence.

Susannah Elizabeth Middlewick, one of the executrices in the estate of her late husband, William Middlewick, said her co-executrix was her daughter, Mrs. Annie Elizabeth Wright. She was enjoying the usufruct of the estate. She did not transact business herself. It was done by her daughter, Mrs. Wright. She did not sign a prospecting agreement to the defendant in July, 1902.

Cross-examined by Mr. Burton: She did not remember whether the defendant had a lease of the property under her late husband. Her husband got the property about fifteen years ago. Brodie was not the first tenant. Mr. Alton was the first tenant. She had not been to the place since Mr. Brodie had had it from 1900. Her daughter had been to Donkershoek three times.

Annie Elizabeth Wright, wife of Walter Irvine Wright, said she was co-executrix with the last witness in the estate of her late father. She knew the defendant Brodie. The estate included the farm Donkershoek. In 1900 they let the farm to Brodie, who signed a lease. Prior to that they had not received a communication from the defendant. They had a letter from Mr. Visser. Mr. Visser was not acting as their attorney at the time. The letter was written on behalf of one Prinsloo. In the early part of March she was staying at Cheviot. Her sister Emma sent a message to her, and in consequence, she wrote a letter on the 7th March. She subsequently saw Brodie about the end of March or beginning of April, at their house in Queen's Town. There was nothing said at the interview with reference to the letter of the 7th March. Brodie afterwards came, and saw her with regard to coal prospecting on the farm. They arranged to give him the right for a year. An agreement was drawn up. As to the lease of Donkershoek, she casually mentioned that they had a letter from Prinsloo asking for the lease of Donkershoek. She told him that Prinsloo had offered £100, and all rents and taxes. Brodie said that Prinsloo had been cutting off branches, and that he had been sub-letting veld to Boers from the Orange River Colony. Brodie seemed very excited. She afterwards saw Prinsloo, and asked him whether he had cut down any trees, and he said that he had not. On the farm were two very fine belts of mimosa trees. She saw the defendant at Klipkraal. She afterwards saw a man named Diedrichs at the main farmhouse at Donkershoek. Shortly afterwards Brodie came up. They did not speak for about an hour. Brodie spoke to her about the lease. She asked him what about the trees that he had destroyed. He replied that he had destroyed none. She said: "Can you say that in sight of the trees near the kraal?" She put a question to the man, and then she told the defendant that he was speaking a falsehood. The defendant said that he had always considered her interests. She now claimed £800 for the destruction of the trees on the farm. She gave Brodie notice to quit, and give up possession of the farm. She asked for the farm to be advertised. She received an offer of £180. The farm contained about 1,700 morgen. She did not know the value of the farm, but they would not take £4,000 for it.

Cross-examined by Mr. Burton: Mr. Brodie was the first tentnt, but she was not aware that his first lease was a verbal one. She did not know of three or four different tenants between the period of Brodie first entering into possession and 1897, when the lease was given him. No inspection was made of the farm on the expiration of occupation by any of the other tenants. She did know of the state of the farm in 1897, when Brodie got the lease. One of the other tenants had assured her that no trees were cut down by him. When Brodie came to her he never spoke about the lease. It was not so that she told Brodie that she had received a higher offer for the farm, neither did she remember saying that Prinslo had offered a higher price. She had no recollection of fixing up a lease at an increased rate. Witness said that Prinsloo was mad when asked for a lease. She had proved that the trees were early cut down. She had seen two or three willows cut town.

Re-examined by Mr. Upington: In June or July, 1902, she told Brodie of Prinsloo's offer.

Walter I. Wright, farmer, and husband of the plaintiff, residing at Haslemere, stated that he remembered Brodie calling at the farm at the end of June or the beginning of July. Brodie came about prospecting rights, and wanted an agreement. The plaintiff, when the defendant asked for a renewal of the lease, said that she would first go over the farm. When the defendant heard that Prinsloo had made an offer he said that the latter was an undesirable tenant, as he had been cutting down trees. In February he again asked for a renewal of the lease, but it was pointed out that there would be difficulty in obtaining a lease on account of the trees being cut down. Later, in the month of June, witness inspected the farm, and found trees cut down. Wood had been found in Brodie's place, and Hendrichs entirely denied any knowledge of it. When Brodie was accused of cutting the trees he first of all denied it, but, subsequently, he admitted that he had been doing it for years. In July, when he inspected the farm, he found ninety-one mimosa trees had been cut down, and in another part of the farm over a hundred trees had been cut down.

Cross-examined by Mr. Burton: In June, 1902, when the interview took place, witness was in the next room to the plaintiff and defendant. He could not say why they delayed inspecting the farm for five months. Some of the trees had been cut down five or six years ago but, as near as he could remember, the most of the trees had been cut down recently. The trees were not cut down with discretion to allow the younger trees to grow. It would take about ten trees to make the kraal.

Re-examined by Mr. Upington: He would say the majority of the trees had been cut down within three months.

Emma Jane Middlewick, daughter of the firstnamed plaintiff, said that she was generally present at business interviews. This was in consequence of the deafness of her mother and sister. She remembered that in January last Mr. Brodie called. She was sent on a message in February or March. Mr. Brodie saw witness, and said he wanted the farm for a few years longer. He did not mention the rental. Mrs. Wright conducted the business of the estate. Brodie came to Queen's Town in July, 1902. Mr. and Mrs. Wright were in the dining-room. Witness and her sister went in the drawing-room to meet Mr. Brodie. She had heard Mr. Wright's evidence as to what took place. A renewal of the lease was spoken of, but Mrs. Wright did not grant one, and she told the defendant to go off the farm. At the interview in March the defendant merely spoke about the rates. Witness was present at the interview in December, and the renewal was again spoken of, but Mrs. Wright declined to consent to the renewal.

Cross-examined by Mr. Burton: At the interview in July Brodie told Mrs. Wright that Prinsloo had cut down the trees.

Henry Edward Halse, a farmer, in the Wodehouse district, said he had given special attention to tree planting. On the farm Carnarvon, owned by witness and his brother, they had close upon a million trees. They had tried the mimosa, but had not been successful. The mimosa was a valuable tree as a shelter to stock. A large solid load of mimosa timber would be worth about £3. Two very large trees would make a load. At the request of Mrs. Wright, he had visited the farm Donkershoek, together with Mr. Patterson and Mr. Wright. Mr. Patterson was a forester. He visited the farm on the 24th September and 22nd October. He counted the trees which had been destroyed. There were two belts—one on the north-west boundary and the other on the south-east. On the former fifty odd large trees, he found, had been destroyed. Seventy odd small trees had been destroyed. On the south thirty large and a little over 100 small trees had been destroyed. The large trees on the north-west were very fine, and he should estimate their value at £5 each. The small trees he should estimate to be worth £1 each. In the south-east plantation, the large trees were, in his opinion, worth £5 each, and the small ones about 6s. each. The general value of the small trees was greater; he was simply giving the commercial value. He should say that the trees had been shamefully hacked to pieces. The large trees had been cut down almost flush with the ground. There was only one tree in the plantation that had been pruned, or cut back. All the trees he had counted had been cut within the past three years. A considerable number had been very recently cut. Speaking generally, he should estimate the damage done to the farm at about £500.

Cross-examined by Mr. Burton: The farm contained a large number of mimosas. The mimosas grew very slowly—more slowly than the oak, and he did not think there had been any large increase during the past few years. The trees had acted as a wind-break, and in view of the removal of the trees, the plain was more wind-swept than it had been. He thought that in a commercial sense the plantations would be of the value of about £1,500. He should say the farm was of the value of about £2 10s. per morgen. He did not consider that the cutting of the large trees would be an advantage to the young trees. Nearly all the trees were cut within two or three feet of the ground. The trees that were cut were what might be called "Queens of the forest." If it had been a question of pruning for firewood, there was sufficient snow-broken branches lying about.

By De Villiers, C.J.: Ten shillings per load would be a fair allowance for cutting and transport, and that would bring the price down to £2 10s. per tree.

John Patterson, forester, residing at Carnarvon, said he was formerly employed in the Forest Department. He was well acquainted with the mimosa, and he went over the farm with Mr. Halse. He had heard part of Mr. Halse's evidence, and he agreed with what he heard.

[De Villiers, C.J.: We will have to know what part that is?]

Continuing, under examination, witness said that he found both belts of trees damaged. He estimated the value of the large trees at £5 each, and computed the total damage at something like £500.

Cross-examined by Mr. Burton: He agreed with Mr. Halse that the trees were worth between £1,500 and £2,000. He did not count the trees.

Ruben Diedrichs, builder and farmer, said that up till recently his father had a sub-lease on the farm from Brodie. He had cut mimosa and willow trees, but not many of the former. The kraal was made of mimosa trees.

Cross-examined by Mr. Burton: Mr. Brodie told him he might get firewood, but cautioned him against destroying any trees. He did not destroy any of the trees.

George Edwards, farmer, said that he went out to the farm Donkershoek with Mr. Wright for the purpose of counting the trees. Most of the 215 trees had been cut down within three years. He calculated the total damage at £500 or £600.

Cross-examined by Mr. Burton: He was reckoning the damage from all the trees cut down.

Re-examined by Mr. Upington: He took no notice of trees cut down beyond three years.

Mr. Upington closed his case.

Mr. Burton called

Richard Charles Brodie, the defendant, who said that he was the first tenant of the farm, which he had under a verbal lease for a year. There was an interval, and six years ago he got a written lease. Prinsloo was with him when he got the lease. Six years ago the belts of mimosas were in a similar condition to what they were in now. Prinsloo was cautioned by witness not to use many trees. Since 1900 Prinsloo had used no wood at all, and witness had only three loads during that time, and he obtained the supply by pruning. Witness never removed any wood from the farm. The mimosas had very much increased within the past fifteen years. In January, 1902, he went down to Queen's Town to see about a renewal of the lease, and he heard nothing further until he received a letter in March, when he again journeyed to Queen's Town. There he met Mrs. Wright and Mrs. Middlewick, and they told him he would have to advance the price if he wanted the farm, and witness agreed to pay the highest price, which was that of Prinsloo. It was arranged to draw up a new lease on the same lines as the old. The rent was to be £110 per annum, and all the rates. Mrs. Wright said they would have to let Prinsloo know that he could not get the lease. At the end of June Mrs. Wright said that she had thoroughly talked over the matter with her mother, and it was agreed to let witness have a lease. He had not seen Mrs. Wright until June this year, when the latter met him on the farm Dornhoek. Mrs. Wright said that she could not give a lease until she consulted her mother, as witness was destroying the farm.

Cross-examined by Mr. Upington: A definite arrangement had been arrived at in March, 1902. When he met Mrs. Wright and Mrs. Middlewick he never mentioned anything about the lease.

He denied that in December, 1902, Mrs. Wright said that she wished to know if the farm was all right before giving a lease. The first time he talked of a written lease to Mrs. Wright was at Donkershoek, on June 15. He received the letter of demand in March, but it was not after that he claimed a renewal of the lease. Prinsloo had no lease from witness. There was no reason for putting anything about the new lease into the prospecting agreement. He denied Mr. Halse's statement as to the number of trees cut down. It was not correct that he had pruned the trees off the face of the earth. He did not know that Mr. Huise was a man of great experience. Diedrich's instructions were not to cut any good trees.

Re-examined by Mr. Burton: The day after he received the letter to quit, his attorney wrote asking for a copy of the lease.

Laurence Stephanus Prinsloo, farmer in the Tarka district, said he formerly occupied the farm Donkershoek as sub-tenant under the defendant. He had seen that some trees had been cut down since he left the farm, about nineteen. He left in February of this year. He made an examination during the present month. He cut down some trees in 1898. After he became sub-tenant he did not chop down any trees. He cut off some of the branches for firewood purposes. As to the statement that he wanted a lease in February, 1902, he applied for the lease by going down to Queen's Town, inasmuch as he had heard that Brodie wanted to re-lease the farm. He went to see Mr. Visser.

Mr. Upington said he must object to any evidence being given of a conversation between the witness and Visser, as the latter was not proved to have been agent of the plaintiff at the time.

Witness said he saw Mr. Price, Mr. Visser's partner, who referred him to Mr. Visser, saying that the latter was acquainted with the family matters.

Mr. Burton read the letter sent by Mr. Visser, embodying the offer of the witness to the second named plaintiff, and urged that the construction was in favour of Visser being the plaintiff's agent. Visser acted as a broker between the parties. He was the intimate friend of the family on the one side, and he was the person to whom the witness went, under that impression, on the other. It was of importance that the answer given by Mr. Visser should be known.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Visser can be called and questioned as to what his position really was at the time.]

Mr. Burton said that, if he called him, he should be bound by Visser's answer.

[De Villiers, C.J.: The Court will call Visser.]

Visser (answering the Chief Justice) said he remembered writing the letter of the 15th February. He acted on instructions from Prinsloo. He did not hear anything from Mrs. Wright for a while. Afterwards, in March, Prinsloo called upon him. He believed he saw her before Prinsloo called, and as far as he remembered, she said that Prinsloo could not be given a lease, as Brodie was the tenant. He became the attorney to the plaintiffs in July, 1902. He was not acting for them in March, though he was a friend of the family. Witness told Prinsloo that Miss Middlewick said that he could not get the farm, as Brodie was the lessor.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Prinsloo may be asked what Visser told him.]

The witness Prinsloo (continuing his evidence) said he told Visser that he had heard Brodie had taken the farm. He was advised by Mr. Visser to increase his offer. He promised to increase it by £10, and all the expenses. Visser said he would do his best to get the farm from him. He subsequently saw Visser at his office again. He asked him what the reply to his application was. He said that it was no use taking further trouble, as Brodie had got the ground. Witness then gave it up, and went and bought a farm of his own, leaving Donkershoek in February, 1903.

Cross-examined by Mr. Upington: Excepting the load he took and the nineteen trees, no others were cut down. He could not understand the other witness speaking of a couple of hundred old trees.

By Kotzé, J.: On the second occasion, Visser told him to make a higher offer.

Joseph Roland Staples, farmer, residing in the Queen's Town district, said that he had fourteen years' experience of farming. He had a practical knowledge of mimosa trees. This month he inspected the farm Donkershoek, and he found on the north-west side thirteen trees cut with discretion. He did not think stock would do the younger trees any harm. Further on, he found half a dozen trees that had been cut about five years ago. Another tree was found cut, but the branches had been broken by the snow. All the trees in the neighbourhood had been more or less damaged by the snow. On the southern portion, he found one tree lying on the ground that had been damaged by the snow, and the others of recent cutting were, in some measure, damaged by snow. On the southern portion, he would say the trees had been cut about six months ago. The willows were suffering from drought, and the characteristic of that tree under such circumstances was that the branches fell away. He found no willows cut down. As a landlord, he would say that the farm had been well looked after.

Cross-examined by Mr. Upington: Although he did not make a systematic examination, he saw as much as Mr. Halse. The kraal consisted of freshly-cut mimosa branches. He did not see all the trees Mr. Halse referred to.

Petrus Johannes Waghner, farmer in the Sterkstroom district, said that he accompanied the last witness in the inspection, and corroborated his statement in every respect.

By Maasdorp, J.: Nineteen trees had been cut within the last six months, and the remainder had been cut a long time ago.

Mr. Burton closed his case.

Postea (October 31):

Mr. Upington (for the plaintiffs): Although there is no doubt some conflict of evidence as to the precise amount of damage done to the trees on the farm, it is abundantly clear that very considerable damage was done, and that we are entitled to be compensated for that damage. The only question is what should be the amount of compensation? At all events there can be no doubt that we have wrongfully and unlawfully been kept out of our property, and we are certainly entitled to substantial damages for that. Neither our own law nor English law regard with favour tenants who hold over in this way.

Mr. Burton (for the defendant): As to the renewal of the lease, I admit that the onus lies upon us to prove the renewal of the lease on July 1, 1903. On this point we have a conflict of evidence. On the one side we have the defendant's evidence and on the other we have, it is true, that of four witnesses. I submit, however, that the Court will not decide this case by simply counting heads. If the evidence of the defendant is to be believed, there could be no mistake about the matter. The four witnesses for the plaintiffs all belong to the same family. The old lady's evidence is clearly valueless. Mr. Wright tells the same story, and so does Miss Emma Middlewick. £The defendant gave his evidence in a very satisfactory manner, and it was not shaken in cross-examination. I submit that the Court will look at the whole of the surrounding circumstances of the case, and judge from them as to the probabilities of the case. The lease of 1900 has been put in, and the farm was not to be sublet, save to Prinsloo. In January, 1902, Brodie wanted to have the lease renewed. He saw Emma Middlewick and said he wanted a renewal. In February she communicated the defendant's message to the plaintiff; but before she did so Prinsloo had asked for the farm, and in February, 1902, Visser wrote to Annie Middlewick (Mrs. Wright) stating that Prinsloo wanted a renewal. Mrs. Wright knew that Brodie's lease expired on July 1, 1903. Brodie was not entitled to claim a renewal, and therefore it was no answer to Prinsloo to tell him that he could not have the farm "because Brodie was the lessee. Mrs. Wright's letter of March 7 does not agree with her evidence in Court.

[Council proceeded to argue further on the facts.]

Mr. Upington in reply.

De Villiers, C.J.: It is, the undoubted practice of the Court in all cases where parties claim a right to a lease, or where parties claim to purchase land, to require clear and distinct evidence as to such agreement of lease, or as to such sale, and, unless in any case the plaintiff can establish to the entire satisfaction of the Court that an agreement or a lease has been actually entered into, the practice of the Court has been to decide in favour of the person who claims that there is no such lease. In the present case, if we look only to the number of witnesses who deny the statement that an agreement of lease has been made, they certainly preponderate over the number who said that such a lease had been made. But, of course, it is not the number of witnesses, but the weight of the witnesses which should guide the Court, and where there is any doubt, where there is any difficulty in saying which set of witnesses is to be believed, the Court always attaches great weight to any extraneous evidence, to any evidence to be derived from documents for the purpose of assisting the Court in arriving at a conclusion Now, I must confess that if the decision of this case had rested entirely upon myself, I should have been greatly influenced by the evidence recorded by the documents produced in the course of the case. I shall not refer to all of them, but simply to a few, which will illustrate what I mean. On the 7th March, 1902, one of the plaintiffs, Mrs Wright, who really had the matter of the management of the estate in her hands writes to the defendant: "My sister has told me that you wish to hire Donkershoek. No doubt you know you cannot have it at the present low rental. What amount are you prepared to give. Kindly let me know as soon as possible, as we have had several applications for the farm." Now, this clearly was written with a view of bringing Brodie to the point. She is unable now to state what those applications were, and the only application that is proved to have been made is the application made by the witness Prinsloo, who, at the time, was a sub-lessee from the defendant. It appears that he had been in communication with Visser, and Visser, who was a friend of the plaintiffs, informed the plaintiffs of the application made by Prinsloo. There was no immediate answer. The defendant, upon receipt of the letter of the 7th March, at once went to see the plaintiff. That is common cause—that he did go. His evidence is that on the occasion of that interview a further lease was mentioned, his object in going was to have a fresh lease, the thing was mentioned, and an agreement was come to that he was to have such a lease that he was to pay an additional £10, which would square with the statement that Prinsloo had offered an increase of £10, and it was then arranged, according to his statement, that on the expiration of the former lease a fresh lease should be entered into giving him the right to a further period of three years, with a right of extension to five years. All the terms of the old lease were to be incorporated in the new One of the points in her evidence, which to me is wholly unintelligible, is her statement that at this interview nothing was said about a fresh lease. Prinsloo was pressing for an answer, she is pressing Brodie for an answer, this pressing letter is written to him, and yet she says that nothing is said about the lease. I confess, it may be, as stated by Mr. Upington, that there is an explanation, but I don't see it I should have thought that a much more probable circumstance is what is stated by Brodie, that getting this pressing letter, he goes there, enters into communication, and receives this reply that he could have it. Well, then, what is the answer ultimately given to Prinsloo? Prinsloo had asked, according to Visser's letter, for a lease from July, 1903. That is what Prinsloo had asked for. That is what the plaintiffs knew Prinsloo had asked for—a lease from July, 1903—and yet the message which the plaintiffs told Visser to give to Prinsloo is, "Oh, he is mad; the defendant already has the lease." The defendant then had the lease up to July, 1903, not for the period for which Prinsloo wanted the lease. Therefore, I cannot see what that had to do with it, what the fact that the defendant had a lease up to July, 1903, had to do with Prinsloo's application for a lease from July, 1903. It does seem, therefore, much more probable that the answer given was, "You are mad; we cannot give a lease, because we have already entered into a lease with Brodie from the 1st July, 1903, the period from which Prinsloo asked to have a lease." But then, it is said by Mr. Upington that it is an equally extraordinary circumstance that in July, 1902, the defendant had communications with the plaintiffs, that there was actually a document entered into for the prospecting rights of the farm, and yet that no lease should then have been entered into. If the defendant's version is correct, the whole thing is explained, because stamps and so on would have to be paid, and I can well understand that the parties would say there is no necessity for having any expense of putting stamps on the documents until the period has arrived when the fresh lease is to be begun, viz., July, 1903. If his statement is correct, that would immediately explain why in July, 1902, there was no document. These, I say, are the difficulties which would weigh with me in deciding upon the question whether the defendant's version is to be dismissed. At the same time, I admit that the defendant should clearly prove his case, and as my brethren, at all events, have a doubt upon that point, I am bound to agree to the view that the plaintiffs should succeed in this action. The next question, when the defendant should go. I think the defendant should have another month, and should quit on the 1st December, and that rent should be paid at the rate of £10 a month. That would make for the five months £50 for the use and occupation of the farm. I come next to the question of damages. There is no doubt, in regard to any damages for the trees, the defendant only had a right to take firewood, such firewood as could be taken by pruning, and I think he has gone further, he has cut down some trees entirely, which I do not consider to be pruning at all. Mr. Halse has given evidence as to the damage done, and I have no doubt that Mr. Halse has seen all these trees cut down, and that he has given his evidence perfectly conscientiously. But I have grave doubts as to whether Mr. Halse can be perfectly confident as to the dates when those trees were cut down. Those trees have not died, they are still alive, and I confess it must be a matter of the greatest difficulty in trees still alive to say when the cutting actually took place. There is great discrepancy in the evidence, but, on the whole, I am of opinion that there is no proof that more than nineteen trees had been cut down during the tenancy of the defendant, and the defendant clearly cannot be held liable for more than that number of trees. The Court is of opinion that the sum of £75 would compensate the plaintiffs for any damage done. There will, therefore, be judgment for the plaintiffs for the defendant to quit the premises and to pay damages to the extent of £75 and the costs of this action.

Maasdorp J.: As I hold rather a different view with reference to the evidence I should like to give my reasons for that view, and I should like to approach the conflict of evidence in this case from another point of view. We have in one portion of the case certain facts, admittedly proved, and I will inquire what bearing those facts have upon the evidence of Mr. Brodie. It has been proved from undisputed evidence that at least 19 trees were destroyed upon the farm within the last six months of the period of the lease, and those were trees of some size. Mr. Brodie was called upon to give evidence upon any trees that he might have removed, and he stated positively that during the whole of his tenancy he only took away three small loads. Now it has also been established upon the evidence that three small loads would only account for about six large trees. These trees had been destroyed, and the allegation is that they have been destroyed by the defendant. Anyway, the defendant has to explain how these trees were removed from the farm, and he meets it by a denial that he is responsible for the removal of these trees. It is suggested now that his evidence did not quite amount to that, because he has called other witnesses to prove that 19 trees were destroyed; but I find nowhere in his evidence that he admitted the truth of the evidence given by his own witnesses. Then, it is also suggested that these trees were destroyed by somebody else without his knowledge. Now, it is proved that these trees were destroyed from the belt of trees on the borders of his farm, but there were indications of trees having been removed to his place, and I am satisfied that Mr. Brodie knows more about the removal of these trees than he is prepared to admit. This evidence then leads me to the conclusion that I am not satisfied with the evidence given by Mr. Brodie in this case, but I may mention in passing also that I would have held upon the evidence of Mr. Halse that a far larger number of trees were actually destroyed during the tenancy, and that the responsibility lies upon the defendant. But, as a different view is taken by my brethren in this case, I yield upon that point. Now, having once determined that there is a point in the evidence which assists me in coming to the conclusion that Mr. Brodie's evidence is unsatisfactory, then I ask myself whether I can accept his evidence when it comes into conflict with four or five other witnesses. The other witnesses have suggested, among other things, that in July there was an interview, at which the lease was discussed, and they say that at that interview Mr. Prinsloo's name was brought up by the defendant himself as a very unsatisfactory tenant, and one to whom the lease should not be granted. If the name of a Prinsloo was brought up at that time by Mr. Brodie, then it is clear that the manner in which it was brought up proves that no agreement was entered into or concluded in March, because the effect of the statement made by Mr. Brodie is this: "Don't give Prinsloo the lease, because he has done something," which he describes as "cutting tuckies." When asked, "Has he done much damage?" he said, "Not much, but you cannot say now what he would do if he had a lease himself." I believe that statement made by Mrs. Wright and her sister, but the important point of that conversation is this, that a circumstance is brought to the knowledge of the lessors which runs through the whole case, and that is, that damage was being done upon this farm, and Mrs. Wright says that no sooner was that brought to her knowledge than it made an impression upon her, because she knew how these trees had been prized by her father at all times, and she also seems to have valued them. She always refused to enter into a lease until she had seen the extent of damage that had been done. Now, I believe those statements made by these witnesses, because there is no reason why I should not believe them. It was argued that Mrs. Wright and her husband came to the farm in June, 1903, and that then they, for the first time, saw that some damage had been done. Then the suggestion was that, after that they most falsely and fraudulently set about concocting three conversations at three separate times before that, by introducing a fact which had never come to their knowledge until long after these conversations. Under the circumstances, I come to the conclusion that the evidence given by Brodie leaves a doubt in my mind, but that the evidence given by Mrs. Wright and the witnesses who corroborated her is truthful, and that defendant, upon that ground, has failed to prove his case. There are features, but I shall only mention one, that seems to tell against the plaintiffs, and that is the conversation as to a lease having already been closed with Brodie, and that, consequently, Prinsloo could not have a renewal. That does not make any impression upon my mind. To my mind, the "madness" alluded to had reference to Prinsloo calling himself a tenant, and as a tenant asking for a renewal of his lease. Under all the circumstances of the case, I am prepared to accept as to the alleged renewal of the lease the evidence of the plaintiffs, and not that of the defendant. On the other features of the case, I concur with what has been said.

Kotzé, J.: I concur in the judgment.

[Plaintiff's Attorneys: Walker and Jacobsohn; Defendant's Attorney: V. A. van der Byl.]

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.).]

GENERAL MOTIONS.

Ex parte EDWARDS. { 1903. Nov. 2nd.

Mr. Close said that this was the return day of a rule granted by the Court on me a singular thing that the Magistrate made no order as to costs.

Mr. Burton: I do not dispute that plaintiff was entitled to his extras but I would like to call the attention of the Court to certain of the facts. There is no doubt that the wall in question was built very crooked. The plaintiff had a lot of work on hand, and he would be glad to avoid having to knock down and re-build the wall. Mr. Attorney De Waal said that the plaintiff seemed rather pleased to have the opportunity of avoiding that work, and that it was agreed he should do the extras for nothing. It appeared as if the bulk of the extras had been contemplated by the parties before the date of the meeting.

De Villiers, C.J.: The parties to this suit were careful when they entered into the original contract to reduce it to writing, and the memorandum of agreement was entered into specifying particular work, which the plaintiff was to do in consideration of which he was to receive the sum of £60. During the course of his work it was found that one of the walls was not square. Objection was taken to that, and it was ultimately agreed that the wall should remain as it was. But the question now in dispute between the parties is whether this agreement that the wall should stand was in consideration of a promise by the plaintiff that any extra work which the defendant might order would be done by him. The effect of the evidence given on behalf of the defendant is that there was really no limit to the work which the plaintiff would be bound to do because of this wall not being square. It is quite clear that it would cost the plaintiff only a few pounds to pull down the wall and make it square, and it seems to me most improbable that the plaintiff would take such unlimited liability on himself to save the trouble and expense of pulling down this wall, which would cost him, according to his own account, £2 10s., and, according to the defendant, about £5. I am satisfied, however, that there was some arrangement that some additional work should be done, but I am satisfied of this, that it is the duty of the defendant, who relies upon this fresh agreement, to prove how much of this extra work the plaintiff had agreed to perform. Defendant had an opportunity of giving his evidence upon the point, and the only item which he can specify as being clearly in contemplation between the parties, when this fresh agreement was made, was building the two fireplaces. The rest is mere speculation. It is possible that the walls of the kitchen may have been in contemplation, but, as I said, it is for the defendant to prove what really was in contemplation, and formed part of the contract between the parties. I am inclined to think that it was the extra work of building the two fireplaces which both the plaintiff and the defendant intended to be the consideration for allowing the defective wall to remain. I can find no specific evidence that this man undertook to do this additional work gratis and for nothing. It is not a question of the credibility of witnesses, but it is a question of inference from the evidence given, and I accept the evidence given on behalf of the plaintiff, and I do not think that there is clear and undoubted evidence as to the work agreed upon and performed without reward. The first item of £5 must be deducted from the claim of £20, and so must £1 15s., because the plaintiff claims for £3 10s. The sum of £6 15s., deducted from £20, leaves £13 5s. In my opinion, the appeal must be allowed, and judgment entered for the plaintiff for £13 5s., with costs in the Court and the Court below.

[Appellant's Attorneys: Herold and Gie; Respondent's Attorneys: Walker and Jacobsohn.]

Ex parte HILNA.

This was a motion for an order restraining the Registrar of Deeds at King William's Town from transferring a certain piece of land, the property of the petitioner. The petition set forth that the petitioner's attention had been called to a certain rule nisi granted on February 24. A certain piece of land, lot 160, near Stutterheim, was the property of petitioner, and had been transferred to him in October, 1865. Deponent had not disposed of or sold the said piece of land, which still stood registered in his name. He had been informed that the said piece of land had again been transferred in December, 1881, but under what circumstances he was unaware. The rule was published, but it was not served personally. These two transfers were not brought to Mr Justice Buchanan's notice when the rule was granted. The Registrar of Deeds in King William's Town made a special report to the Registrar of Deeds in Cape Town, and when that report was made it was necessary for the petitioner to come to Court, and ask for an order.

Mr. Benjamin (for the applicant) stated that the previous order had not been carried out, and suggested that telegraphic instructions might be sent to King William's Town to prevent transfer going through.

An order was granted that telegraphic instructions should be sent to King William's Town, restraining transfer of this property (lot 160), pending a further order of Court, the Registrar authorised, on consent being given on behalf of the respondent, Mart Mabuya, to issue an order for the publication of the rest of the lots mentioned in the Registrar's report, which have been ordered to be republished.

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP and the Hon. Mr. Justice KOTZÉ.]

POLE V. POLE.

This was an action for divorce brought by Peter Arnold Pole against his wife Elizabeth Pole (born Ross), on the ground of her adultery with some man unknown.

The declaration set out that the parties were married in community of property in Cape Town in July, 1881. There was issue of the marriage, a girl of about 20 years of age. In July, 1891, plaintiff was sentenced to a term of imprisonment on the Breakwater, and remained there until 1897, when he was released, and discovered that the defendant had had two children to some other man unknown. The plaintiff had never cohabited with his wife since 1891.

Mr. Wilkinson for the plaintiff; defendant in default.

Charles W. H. Smith, clerk in charge of the Marriage Register, at the Colonial Office, produced the original copy of the register of the marriage between the parties.

Peter Arnold Pole, the plaintiff, said that he was married in July, 1881. The register of marriage produced was correct. He lived with his wife up to 1891, and there was one child of the marriage. Certain circumstances compelled him to be absent from his wife for a number of years, and since that time he had no access to her. He discovered that she had two children during his absence of which he was not the father.

By Maasdorp, J.: Witness said he was in prison from 1891 to 1897 for theft.

Maria Collinson stated that the plaintiff's wife was her sister. She stayed with her a couple of months, and then went away again. At that time she had two children. One was born in 1899, and one last year. Her husband never came near the place. The defendant was mostly in service during the time plaintiff was in gaol. The man whom witness believed to be the father of the children was a man named "Sam." This man paid all the expenses of one of the children's illness. She had seen familiarities between the parties.

[Maasdorp, J.: Did this man stay overnight with defendant?]

Witness: Yes; he did.

Where was the husband at this time?

Witness: He never came near her.

[Kotzé, J.: Did this man's visit extend over a year or more?]

Witness: Yes; he was there during the time the child was born.

Decree granted as prayed.

LIQUIDATOR OF THE LIFE BRANCH OF THE S.A. FIRE AND LIFE ASSURANCE CO. v. THE BOARD OF EXECUTORS. — 1903. Nov. 2nd, " 3rd, " 27th.

Administering liquidator—Trust funds—Investment.

The directors of a certain Company having decided to liquidate the Company, appointed one H. as administering liquidator. In 1883, H. deposited the funds in his hands with defendants, who agreed to pay interest half-yearly at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum on such moneys. In 1888, the defendants gave notice that they would reduce the rate to 4 per cent., which they accordingly did. In 1895, they gave notice that in future they would pay no interest on these moneys. They again agreed to pay interest from 1899 at 4 per cent., to be reckoned yearly. The plaintiffs now sued the defendants for an amended account.

Held, that as the directors of the plaintiff Company had consented to the course pursued by the defendants, the account rendered by the latter must be held to be true and correct.

This was an action brought by Charles Christian de Villiers, in his capacity as sole surviving liquidator of the life branch (in liquidation) of the South African Fire and Life Assurance Company, against the Board of Executors, for a statement of accounts, and for the return of such moneys as might be found due to the plaintiff.

Mr. M. de Villiers (with him Mr. McGregor) was for the plaintiff, and Mr. Searle, K.C. (with him Mr. Gardiner) was for the defendant.

Mr. De Villiers narrated the principal facts of the case, and Mr. McGregor read the pleadings (for which see 13. C.T.R., 977).

Evidence was then called for the plaintiff.

Charles Christian de Villiers, the plaintiff, said he was the sole surviving liquidator of the South African Fire and Life Assurance Co. Producing the minutes, witness stated that these dated from 1880. The minutes referred to many other things besides those connected with the case. They were handed to him by "Mr. Roos." Witness read the resolution of May 3, 1881, connected with the appointment of the liquidators for the association. Several of those present at the meeting had a share in the Board of Executors. It was resolved to dissolve the old company, start a new company, and liquidate the life branch. It was also resolved that Mr. Hofmeyr should be chief liquidator. Subsequently unpleasantness arose between Mr. Hofmeyr and Mr. Watermeyer. It was then resolved that the Board would receive all premiums and pay out on the policies when they fell due. The policies were payable after three months' notice. Whilst Mr. Hofmeyr was administering the money was kept in the South African Bank. The cheques were all signed by Mr. Hofmeyr for self and liquidators. Witness then referred to a letter dated April 4, 1895, which showed how the liquidators dealt with claims, requesting policy-holders to send in papers connected with their claims. He understood that the defendants were prepared to take the money at the current rate of interest and make what overplus they could. Referring to the minutes of the Board of Executors, 13th November, 1883, he found that Mr. Roos was also a director of the South African Fire and Life Assurance Company. It was shown there that the liquidators were acknowledged as representatives of the funds. It appeared from the accounts that the South African Bank paid six per cent. on the 1st October, 1884. Notice was given that this interest would be reduced to five per cent. on January 1, 1895. Referring to the minutes of January 13, 1888, witness showed that it was resolved to reduce the rate of interest on capital. From time to time shareholders got refunds. In April, 1896, witness left for Europe, and returned towards the end of the year. The Board of Executors held his (witness's) private power of attorney. From January, 1897, to 1899, not a penny of interest was paid. Towards the end of 1899, a refund was paid, which he signed for at the Board of Executors' office. It was not correct to say that interest had not been charged. Mr. Farmer died in 1899, and Mr. Hofmeyr died in 1900. Referring to the minutes of the Board of Executors, witness stated that the resolution to reduce the interest on capital was not communicated to him. It was perfectly correct to say that he applied to the Board of Executors for a statement of affairs and accounts. The arrangement was, that the Board of Executors were to frame half-yearly accounts. They received the premiums, and paid out claims, as they arose. The objection was that they had omitted to render half-yearly accounts.

A great mass of correspondence was then read between witness and the defendants, respecting the matter of interest. One of the letters received in reply to a request for fuller details, respecting certain interest withheld, stated that the defendants had an agreement with the late Mr. Hofmeyr, and abided by that in their transactions.

[Maasdorp, J.: I wish to know whether it is your contention that the liquidators should pay six per cent. on unclaimed dividends.]

Mr. M. de Villiers: We do not state any particular amount of interest. The English courts place it at four per cent., my lord.

[Maasdorp, J.: Had the liquidators an office in the Board of Executors for conducting their business?]

Mr. Hofmeyr was chairman of the Board, and, of course, his office would be there.

Continuing, witness stated that he received a letter from defendants' attorneys, Van Zyl and Buissinne, in which the statement was made that defendants were prepared to hand over capital, together with uncashed cheques of the company on proof that witness was the sole surviving liquidator. On the 24th June, 1897, an account was furnished, and in that account £1,000 was debited against the liquidators on a claim named Caine. On the 14th November, 1898, W. Roos wrote in reply stating that the Board of Executors had handed over a cheque in settlement of this claim. That was 17 months afterwards, and during that time witness assumed that defendants had the benefit of this money. Respecting the query whether the defendants could have found means for profitable investment, witness stated that the defendants refused on one occasion to find money on the security of a certain farm, on which he (witness) eventually advanced £2,700 at 8 per cent. interest. He interviewed Mr. Roos with regard to the cheques not being sent out to shareholders in settlement of their dividends, and Mr Roos informed him that it was not his duty to find out people who were entitled to refunds. The dividends had been properly advertised, and it was the duty of claimants to call or apply for them. £225 was the amount that he believed had not been repaid on refunds by defendants. He could not give a complete idea of the amount of commission earned by the defendants, but believed it would amount to a very large sum. Taking the period from 1st January, 1890 to 1891, he found that the difference in the interest paid and received would amount to about £729. He, witness, received as emoluments £125.

Cross-examined by Mr. Searle: They had absolute confidence in the late Mr. Hofmeyr. It was understood at the meeting that Mr. Hofmeyr should be the administering liquidator. The liquidators occasionally had meetings, perhaps half a dozen in all. Mr. Hofmeyr kept a kind of minute-book. He was not aware that the Board of Executors were the executors under the will of Mr. Hofmeyr. They had not called a meeting of shareholders since they commenced to act as liquidators. He discussed the matter with Mr. Hofmeyr after the first dividend had been paid. Mr. Hofmeyr said he had all the books and papers. The shareholders seemed quite satisfied with what Mr. Hofmeyr did. Witness did not take any steps to communicate with the Board of Executors. Mr. Hofmeyr had those matters in his hands. The reduction of interest from 5 per cent. to 4 per cent. was not communicated to witness. It required no resolution; it came about automatically, because it was arranged that the current rate of interest on deposits should be paid. They had a large amount of money in the South African Bank. That bank paid them 6 per cent. The bank afterwards went into liquidation, but the liquidators were paid in full. The accounts as to the transactions with the Board of Executors, were rendered, and if the liquidators wished to see them they could do so. Witness received in June, 1893, by way of commission, £125. There was no notice given of that. Witness asked Mr. Hofmeyr if he was not going to call a meeting of shareholders, but Mr. Hofmeyr said he had all the papers, and if any of the shareholders wished for an explanation they could have one. A sum of £500 was distributed among the liquidators. On one occasion Mr. Farmer was away. Witness and Mr. Hofmeyr differed on a certain point, and Mr. Hofmeyr then said he gave his casting vote against witness, and that he must therefore give way. There was a distribution in November, 1899. Witness received £2 10s. From 1896 up to the beginning of the present year, there was a plethora of money, particularly during the past three years. The Board of Executors could have put the money into the Post Office Savings Bank at 3½ per cent. In 1900 Mr. Hofmeyr died. The funds were in the administration of the Board of Executors. The whole matter worked automatically. He required an indemnity from the Board before he would accept a cheque from the Board against any interest claimed from him by the shareholders. His objection to the will of Butler's was that the money should be placed in the hands of the Master, instead of being paid by the Board. The amount involved in that matter was upwards of £50. The Board required rebate if they paid out any refunds in less than three months. Since Mr. Hofmeyr's death no policy had fallen in.

By the Court: Mr. Hofmeyr knew when the Board decided not to pay any more interest, but he was there in his capacity as a director of the Board of Executors. Witness did receive an intimation, or he would have immediately taken steps to withdraw the money. As a matter of fact, no interest had been paid. He had been quite ignorant of that, otherwise he would have removed the money. Nothing occurred to put witness on his inquiry as to whether interest was being paid. Witness considered the resolution they passed was illegal, because he was not given notice.

Mr. M. de Villiers: Our position is that, supposing there had been the greatest negligence on the part of the plaintiff, it has nothing to do with the case, because he sues as representing the shareholders.

G. W. Steytler said he was secretary to the Colonial Orphan Chamber. He was interested also in the South African Fire and Life Association, and also in the Board of Executors. He considered that the terms offered by the defendants were liberal to the plaintiff. The Board of Executors had to invest their money in mortgages. In the years 1898 and 1899 money was very plentiful, and it would only have been possible to invest it at a low rate of interest, but not at call.

By the Court: By money at call he meant that if money were placed with the Board at call, people could withdraw it next day if they liked.

By Mr. M. de Villiers: He was quite prepared as a shareholder in the life branch of the company to forego his interest, as it only amounted to about 2½d. in his case.

Daniel Krynauw said he was a shareholder in the life branch of the association. He had received several dividends, but did not receive anything during the distribution in 1899.

Cross-examined by Mr. Searle: No mention was made of the cheque that was lying there for him. Since 1896, which was previous to Mr. Hofmeyr's death, he had had no intimation of any cheque being due to him for dividend Dividends were generally sent to him, but he went sometimes to the Board of Executors for his dividends. He was a shareholder in the Board of Executors. When he got the note from Mr. De Villiers he was much surprised to find that there was money waiting for him with the defendants.

Harry Gibson, an incorporated accountant, late manager of the South African Fire and Life Association, stated that money was plentiful in 1898 and 1899, but investments could have been made in mortgages. In the case of unclaimed dividends, these lay as a rule in a separate banking account, but in that case he did not think interest would be allowed.

Cross-examined: He had never had a case under his knowledge similar to this. In investments made on mortgage bonds, of course there would have to be three months' notice of withdrawal. It was only comparatively small amounts, of course, that could be taken in the Post-office Savings Banks.

By the Court: On several occasions he believed that money would be taken at call, and 4 per cent. allowed, but this would be a special case.

Francois Jean Hohne, Controller of the Post-office Savings Bank, stated that insurance companies and trust companies could invest large sums in the Post-office Savings Bank, subject to the approval of the Government. At present 3 per cent. was paid on ordinary deposits; formerly it was 3½ and 3½ per cent. An individual could deposit £1,000 on ten certificates, and this sum could be withdrawn subject to three months' notice, or a fee of 10s. per £100.

Cross-examined by Mr. Searle: One individual could not, on deposit and certificate accounts, have more than £1,500 in the Savings Bank, but as far as trust funds were concerned, these were practically unlimited, and could be withdrawn at twenty-four hours' notice. He could not swear that there were trust funds in the Savings Bank up to £5,000, but he believed there were.

By Mr. M. de Villiers: He could not say whether Mr. Hofmeyr had ever made any application for investments in the P.O. Savings Bank.

Johannes R. M. Smuts said he was an executor in the estate of J. G. Borcherds, and went to Mr. Roos on an intimation from plaintiff to collect the dividends belonging to the estate, but was told that these could not be paid. Of course, he had received dividends before at the offices of the defendants.

By the Court: He had never made any claim for 6 per cent. from the defendants.

G. Watermeyer, interpreter, said that in September he received notice that £12 10s. was lying at the Board of Executors for him. He went and saw Mr. Roos, and was referred to Mr. De Villiers. He had formerly received payments. Mr. Hofmeyr used to tell him when there was any money to be claimed.

By the Court: He had not yet received the refund. He did not raise any question as to the interest.

This concluded the plaintiff's case.

Johannes Ewen Neethling Roos, secretary of the Board of Executors, said he had occupied that post since 1897, but was previously acting secretary for a few years. He was well acquainted with the late J. H. Hofmeyr, who, except for a short period, was chairman of the Board from about 1875 until 1900. Witness knew that Mr. Hofmeyr, Mr. De Villiers, and Mr. Farmer were the liquidators of the Life Assurance. Mr. Hofmeyr was the only liquidator that they knew about officially or recognised. He remembered the minutes produced. He was a comparatively young clerk at the time, and the book was handed to him to extract certain particulars for Mr. Hofmeyr. It arose out of the payment of Mr. Watermeyer's pension as secretary in 1883. These minutes were not brought before the Board, and really had nothing to do with the Board. These papers belonged to the liquidators. All the accounts were submitted to Mr. Hofmeyr and investigated by him, and filed by him amongst his own papers. The books were kept by Mr. Hoffmann, who was the bookkeeper of the Board of Executors. On the payment of dividends, Mr. Hofmeyr used to insert an advertisement in the newspapers intimating the hours during which the dividends would be paid. All the cheques were made out at the same time when a dividend was payable, and the cheques were placed in the receipt book by Mr. Hofmeyr. The Board did not at any time deal with the other liquidators, either the present plaintiff or Mr. Farmer. On the 30th November, 1884, a resolution was taken to receive £20,000. Those moneys were to bear 5 per cent. interest. In 1886 the interest was reduced. In 1896 he was present at the meeting when it was resolved to discontinue the interest on the sum of £5,000 odd standing to the credit of the liquidators. They had large sums lying idle. In the following month they invested £17,000 in the bank at 3 per cent. It was impossible to find profitable investment for all the moneys lying in their hands. Even in that year they had a balance of £18,000 on current account after making the 3 per cent. investments. Supposing the arrangement come to at the meeting had not happened the Board would have given back the money. They resolved that they could only retain the money on the condition that it should bear no interest. The liquidators attended to all the policies and saw that they were in order. He did not find any liquidator's minute book in Mr. Hofmeyr's papers. After the charges for dividends had been made out the Board had nothing further to do with them. Mr. Hofmeyr would set aside a certain amount for dividends, and witness would make out the cheques. Mr. Hofmeyr, as managing liquidator, paid out the shareholders.

Cross-examined by Mr. De Villiers: He would contradict the plaintiff if he said that he wanted a statement of account on his return from Europe. His memory was fairly good, although he had overlooked two important instructions from the plaintiff prior to his departure for Europe. When Mr. Hofmeyr died he did not know under whose power the Board was acting. He had no trace of any notice having been sent to the other two liquidators when payment was suspended. After Mr. Hofmeyr's death they received premiums. He did not remember filing as a receipt with the life branch an acknowledgment of £1,005 paid to the credit of Mr. C. C. de Villiers The current rate of interest was allowed on the deposits, and the Board was responsible to the shareholders, and not to the liquidators.

Kotzé, J.: Do you know anything about £500 divided amongst the liquidators?—Yes.

How did that arise?—On instructions by Mr. Hofmeyr.

How was it divided amongst them?—Mr. Hofmeyr took £250, and each of the other liquidators took £125 each.

Did the Board get any benefit?—No, Mr. Hofmeyr would at least have had to pay £150 a year for a clerk.

Do I understand you to say at the time mentioned that the Board charged no commission?—None at all.

C. D. Hoffman, bookkeeper to the defendant Board, said he had been connected with the Board since 1861. The first sum was received from the association in July, 1883, and moneys were received until January, 1888. The first account was over a period of a year and a half. He framed the accounts, and most of them were handed over to Mr. Hofmeyr direct. Up till December, 1899, the accounts were drawn up half-yearly. He never had any instructions from Mr. De Villiers. At the end of 1396 there was a large amount of uninvested money with the Board. The difference between making up the accounts yearly since 1900 amounted to £7 14s. 3d.

Cross-examined by Mr. De Villiers: He would not admit that the accounts were wrong to the extent of £7 14s. 3d. For the first eighteen months, although only one account was made out, interest was allowed half-yearly.

Wm. Edward Moore, chairman of the Board of Executors, stated he succeeded Mr. Hofmeyr as chairman. With the exception of Mr. Van der Byl, all the directors of the Board in 1881, when the Board was entrusted with the affairs of the life branch, were dead. After Mr. De Villiers's letter to the Board they allowed interest at 4 per cent. merely on the ground of moral responsibility.

Cross-examined by Mr. De Villiers: The plaintiff's letter, thanking the Board for their acknowledgment of liability, came before the Board. The position the defendant took up was that, however scarce money might be, the Board was not legally liable for any interest.

This concluded the evidence.

Mr. De Villiers, addressing the Court for the plaintiff, said that as sole surviving liquidator the plaintiff was wholly responsible to the shareholders, and it would also have to be remembered that the plaintiff was a shareholder in the defendant board. On Mr. Hofmeyr's death the plaintiff consulted the secretary of the Board with a view of framing an account. When the plaintiff found that no interest had been paid for three years he inspected the accounts, and found that a large amount of refunds extending over a period of twenty years had been merged in the funds of the Board, and on which no interest was allowed. The nature of the agreement between the administering liquidator and the Board was that the Board was to undertake the administration of the funds, and invest the moneys in the manner stated in the pleadings, and in that way a contract was established between the administering liquidator and the Board of Executors. Counsel maintained there was an actual contract which could only be broken by mutual agreement. The position the defendant took up was that the agreement of 1883 was modified to such an extent that no interest was to be paid. The great factor in the case was that although he (counsel) had nothing to say about Mr. Hofmeyr, he was acting in the dual capacity, and counsel maintained no court of law would recognise the agreement he came to between himself and that gold mine, the Board of Executors. It was idle for the defendants to say they derived no benefit from the moneys during the three years, or that they derived no benefit during the sixteen years. The Board of Executors remained in possession of the funds, and derived the benefit of it under an arrangement, which should not have been made, and the profits should have gone to the shareholders.

Mr. Searle said, in regard to the question of interest, the Court would have to decide with whom did the Board of Executors contract, what was the agreement and could it be terminated. It was clear that the Board contracted with Mr. Hofmeyr, and it was significent that none of the shareholders had moved since the original meeting of shareholders since 1881. Among the Board's papers there was not a single reference to shareholders, and it was clear that the shareholders understood that Mr. Hofmeyr was the administering liquidator. There could be no doubt the money would have been returned in three months had it been demanded, and there could be no agreement that the contract could only be cancelled by mutual consent. Counsel submitted that the agreement was one that could be terminated or varied at reasonable notice by either side. If the agreement was unalterable the plaintiff should have claimed the original rate of 5 per cent. interest. Mr. Hofmeyr undoubtedly got notice of the cessation of payment of interest, and counsel contended that was sufficient for the shareholders, and submitted that the mere technicality of a letter not being written by Mr. Roos was not sufficient for the plaintiff's claim. It was quite lawful for the Board to pass the resolution, and it must be remembered at that time the Board had a surplus of over £20,000. There could be no breach of trust on Mr. Hofmeyr's part in not informing the other liquidators, and there was no evidence before the Court that there was any investment, as the policies would have to be paid within three months. Everything was fair and above board, and Mr. Hofmeyr, who had made a very favourable arrangement with the Board at the outset, could not be accused of colluding with the Board to the detriment of the shareholders of the Life Assurance. The question of the yearly instead of half-yearly interest was a subsidiary one, and only made an infinitesimal difference. If the Board had tendered to pay the interest for the three years, it was a mere matter of grace. On the question of the interest on the unclaimed dividends, counsel maintained that when the Board caused the cheques to be handed to the liquidator, their duty ended. If the money had been put in the bank on floating deposit there would have been no interest, and it could not be said that it was the duty of the Board to put it at fixed deposit.

Cur. Adv. Vult.

Postea (November 17):

Maasdorp, J.: It appears from the evidence in this case that in March, 1881, the shareholders of the South African Fire and Life Assurance Company resolved to dissolve the said company, to form a new fire insurance company, instead of the fire branch of the then existing company, and to liquidate the life branch of the company. On the 3rd of May, at a general meeting of shareholders, it was resolved that the sum of £25,000 be reserved for the shareholders' liability in the life branch. And a further resolution was passed to the effect that the liqcidation and working out of the life branch remain in the hands of the present sub-committee, consisting of W. M. Farmer, J. H. Hofmeyr, and C. C. de Villiers; and that all transfers of land, cessions of bonds, and other assets shall be signed by not less than two of their number; and that the sub-committee be vested with all the powers hitherto held by the chairman and deputy-chairman under the old trust deed. That all moneys received by them be invested in deposits bearing interest half-yearly, and that the general management and control be entirely left in their hands. Subsequently the members of the sub-committee agreed that Mr. Hofmeyr should be the administering liquidator. The liquidators carried on the work of liquidation themselves until November, 1883. The funds under their control consisted of moneys invested partly in bonds bearing interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum, and in fixed deposits in the South African, Union, and Cape of Good Hope Banks. The interest paid by the two former banks was 6 per cent., but Mr. De Villiers could not say what was paid by the last-named bank. The liquidators kept their account with the South African Bank. In November, 1883, Mr. Hofmeyr, the administering liquidator, with the knowledge, and we must therefore take it with the approval of his co-liquidators, made arrangements with the Board of Executors to carry on the work of liquidation. At that time the fund reserved for the purposes of liquidation had in the process of liquidation been reduced from £25,000 to £20,000. There was no written agreement containing the conditions upon which the Board undertook to administer the liquidation, and the only authentic document on the subject consists of the minutes of a meeting of the Board of Executors of the 30th November, 1883. It appears that the administering liquidator was also chairman of the defendant Board. The minute is to the following effect: "With reference to a conversation already had on the matter, the chairman now brings forward the application of himself and others as liquidators of the life branch to undertake the money administration and the receipt of the life premium, and refer to the Government advertisement of this day's date. The purposes of the admin istration will be: (1) To receive the premiums upon the unexpired life policies, as they fall due free of commission; (2) to receive a sum of £20,000 between the present date and the 31st March next (a portion of which has already been deposited here), these moneys to bear interest at the rate of 5 per cent., and to be capitalised at the end of each half-year when also the premiums of the past half-year will be added to the capital; (3) to pay the reassurances. Payments for life losses for reassurance of capital for distribution, or part thereof to be done under direction of the liquidators, who are the persons acknowledged as the owners or representatives of the fund. Resolution was passed unanimously to accept trust." The plaintiff said in his evidence that he understood that the profit which the Board of Executors was to make out of this transaction was to arise in the difference between the rate of interest they paid the liquidators and the rate they received from deposits. That the Board generally had their money out at 6 per cent. interest, whilst they were paying the liquidators 5 per cent., and later, when they reduced their charge to 5 per cent., they were paying the liquidators 4 per cent. The Board carried on the liquidation upon the terms mentioned in the minutes of the 30th November, 1883, until the 13th January, 1888, when they passed the following resolution: "The matters of interest on moneys under administration at 5 per cent. per annum being taken into consideration, it was resolved, taking effect from 1st of January last, to reduce the rate of interest from 5 per cent. to 4 per cent. on the capital administered for the South African Fire and Life Assurance Co.'s life branch in liquidation." In accordance with this resolution, the administration of the liquidation was carried on until the 18th of September, 1896, and accounts were rendered from time to time to the administering liquidators. There is no difference or dispute between the parties in respect of any of their transactions up to this time. There certainly was until then no room for objections to the terms upon which the work was done by the defendant Board in view of the evidence given by Mr. G. W. Steytler, who said in his evidence: "I was a shareholder in the Life Assurance Company. As secretary to the Colonial Orphan Chamber, I consider that the terms which the defendants were allowing to the Assurance Company were most liberal, one per cent. less than the current rate of interest in money at call is most liberal." That liberal terms were allowed by the Board to the liquidators is not surprising when we bear in mind that Mr. J. H. Hofmeyr was chairman both of the Board and of the Assurance Company, and was interested to see that no undue advantage was gained by one over the other. In 1896 the fund under the administration of the liquidators was further reduced in the process of liquidation to £5,124. At that time the Board, according to the evidence of Mr. Roos, the present secretary, found it impossible to invest their money profitably and, although they invested large sums at three per cent., they had a balance of £18,000 on current account at the end of the year. On the 18th of September, 1896, the Board passed the following resolution: "On the secretary's report that an account of £5.124 is standing to the credit of the liquidators, bearing interest at the rate of four per cent., it was resolved to give notice to said liquidators that interest on the capital will not be allowed after the 31st December, 1896." Until March, 1900, the liquidation was continued by the Board, and accounts of administration were rendered to the administering liquidators from time to time until then, in which no interest was allowed. In March, 1900, Mr. J. H. Hofmeyr died, and the plaintiff, who is the only surviving liquidator, says that it was not till this year that he discovered that no interest was paid on the fund in the hands of the Board. Upon that ground, he questioned the accounts. He wrote to the Board, who passed the following resolution on the 17th July, 1903: "The matter, as contained in C. C. de Villiers' letter of the 26th June, 1903, which stood over from the 3rd July, being again brought forward, it was resolved that, as the only liquidator with whom the Board dealt, viz., the late J. H. Hofmeyr, had approved of the account rendered up to and including 31st December, 1899, interest be allowed at 4 per cent. on the £3,500 balance capital from 1st January, 1900." Upon these facts, the issue in the case have been raised between the parties. Accounts have been rendered by the defendants bringing up interest for the whole period, except the years 1897, 1898, and 1899. The plaintiff claims that interest shall be brought up for these years also. The defendant pleads that on or about the 18th September, 1896, it was agreed between the Board and the administering liquidator that interest should not be allowed on the capital fund in the hands of the Board after the 31st of December, 1896, and the accounts rendered on that basis by the Board for the years 1897, 1898, and 1899 were accepted as correct by the administering liquidator; and that interest thereafter was allowed voluntarily by the Board, at the request of the plaintiff, without any legal obligation on the Board to allow such interest. The plaintiff replies that the administering liquidator, to the knowledge of the Board, exceeded his powers in entering into the abovementioned agreement, to the detriment of the shareholders of the Assurance Co., and that the transaction, to the knowledge of the Board, amounted to a breach of trust. Before entering into the legal bearing of this issue, it would be well to ascertain what the pecuniary effect of the alleged agreement was. During the three years in question the fund in the hands of the Board varied in amount, but was on an average about £4,400. The defendant says that for large amounts of money they could find investments in the beginning of the period in question at only 3 per cent. At that percentage, the interest on £4,400 would have been £132. Mr. Roos stated that to administer the fund, the liquidators would have required the services of a clerk at a salary of at least £150, and an office would also have been required, instead of the one used by the administering liquidator at the Board of Executors. The expenses of administering the fund would therefore have exceeded the interest on the fund at 3 per cent., or even at 3½ per cent.. if the administration had been taken out of the hands of the Board. The plaintiff does not insist on the payment of 4 per cent., because he says in his evidence that if the Board had no other way, they could have gone to the Post Office Savings Bank, and got 3½ per cent. on their money. If the administering liquidator had done so after removing the money from the Board, the change would have upon the above calculation resulted in a loss to the Life Branch in liquidation. Consequently, if this position is correct, the alleged breach of trust operated to the advantage of the Assurance Company. Moreover, I am not satisfied that upon a fund held at call, as this fund was, it would have been so easy to obtain the 3½ per cent. in the manner indicated. And it must also be borne in mind that the very operation of constant investment, and withdrawal from investment, is attended with some expense. The plaintiff contends that the liquidators had positive instructions from the shareholders to invest the moneys received by them on deposits bearing interest half-yearly, and that any deviation from that course was ultra vires, and a breach of trust. These instructions may or may not have been imperative, as far as the liquidators were concerned, although I am rather inclined to doubt that they were; but the question is, how do they affect the Board? The Board agreed to do the work of the liquidation for the liquidators in 1883, on certain terms. Those terms were varied in 1888, and in 1896 they gave notice that they would no longer pay interest on the capital fund. There can be no doubt that notice to Mr. J. H. Hofmeyr, who accepted accounts on that footing subsequently, was notice to the liquidators, including the plaintiff. It was open then to the liquidators to withdraw the fund, and take the administration of the liquidation out of the hands of the Board. It was contended on behalf of the plaintiff that an irrevocable trust was created on the part of the Board in the interest of the shareholders of the Assurance Com pany, making the Board liable for breach of trust to the shareholders. But in my opinion, the Board were nothing more than the agents of the liquidators in the work of the liquidation. Either party had a perfect right to put an end after reasonable notice to the agreement of 1883. If, after receiving the notice of 1896, the liquidators had allowed the fund to lie idle to the loss of the shareholders, they may have been guilty of neglect, but could not be said to have acted ultra vires, and the Board would have no responsibility in the matter. But it has been already pointed out that it was to the advantage of the Assurance Company to leave the liquidation in the hands of the Board, even on those terms. If it had been proved that the Board had made a profitable use of the moneys for their own benefit, the plaintiff might have been entitled to recover on that ground. But it appears that they had no use for the fund, which remained uninvested in their hands. I am therefore of opinion that the plaintiff must fail upon his claim for rectification of the accounts in respect of interest for the years 1897, 1898, and 1899, and the claim for half-yearly statement of interest must fail for the same reasons. This view of the facts of the case obviates the necessity of going into the questions of law raised at the Bar. The plaintiff alleges in his declaration that from time to time dividends by way of refunds became payable by the said Board to shareholders, that certain of those dividends remain unclaimed in the hands of the Board, and were merged in their funds, and that, consequently, the Board is liable to pay interest on these dividends. It seems to me incorrect to say that the Board became liable to shareholders, because the Board only undertook as agents of the liquidators to pay to the shareholders such dividends as they might be entitled to. No proof has been given in this case of the right of shareholders to interest on unclaimed dividends. Our Companies Act of 1892, which has, however, no application to the present case, provides, in section 76 of the third schedule, that no dividend shall bear interest as against the company. The amount of such interest would be very trifling, and the Board were prepared to honour at any moment cheques for dividends which were placed in the hands of the administering liquidators. Nothing has appeared to lead to the conclusion that the shareholders are entitled to interest on their unclaimed dividends. But, whatever the liability of the liquidators may be in this respect, I am of opinion that the plaintiff must, as against the defendant, fail upon the issue also. I come to the conclusion that the defendant has rendered true and correct accounts to the plaintiff, and tendered to plaintiff what is due on such accounts. Judgment is given for the defendant with costs.

Kotzé, J.: I am of the same opinion. I agree that the Court should be careful not to encourage a breach of trust by persons standing in a fiduciary position. I cannot, however, regard the Board of Executors as trustees. According to the evidence, the three liquidators of the South African Assurance Company were trustees for the shareholders, and the Board of Executors were simply the depositaries of the funds, and the agents of the liquidators, who could at any moment, upon reasonable notice, terminate the agency, and withdraw the moneys placed in deposit with the Board. In the same way the Board of Executors could likewise terminate the agency or notify to the liquidators that it would no longer continue to pay or allow interest on the moneys deposited with it. This the Board, in effect, did, by the resolution of September, 1896, when it was resolved to give notice to the liquidators that after 31st December, 1896, no interest would be allowed on deposits. We must take it that Mr. Hofmeyr, the administering liquidator, had notice of this resolution, and of the fact that from the 1st January, 1897, no inteerst was credited in the accounts, which were rendered him from time to time by the Board of Executors until his death in March, 1900. Such is the conclusion at which I have arrived after considering the evidence of Mr. Roos, the present secretary of the Board of Executors. Notice to the administering liquidator was notice to the other two liquidators, who, if they had inspected the accounts, would have at once discovered the true and exact position of affairs. After the taking of the resolution of September, 1896, by the Board of Executors, it became the duty of the liquidators to invest or put out the moneys at interest elsewhere, instead of letting them remain idle in the hands of the Board. It has been contended, on behalf of the plaintiff, that, by allowing the moneys to remain with it, without the payment of interest thereon, the Board became a party to a breach of trust by the administering liquidator. Assuming that there was a breach of trust, I fail to see how the Board can in any way be said to have been a party to it. I, therefore, think that, having given due notice to the liquidators that from the 1st January, 1897, no interest would be allowed on deposit, and the administering liquidator having acquiesced therein, the Board cannot be held liable in this action.

[Plaintiff's Attorneys: V. A. van der Byl; Defendant's Attorneys: Van Zyl and Buissinné.]

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Chief Justice, the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C. K.C.M.G., LL.D.]

SMITH AND ANOTHER v. SHARENOVITZ. 1898. Nov. 3rd.

Sale—Delivery—Hire purchase—Means of knowledge.

The plaintiff sold a bicycle to A. on condition that the bicycle should remain the plaintiff's property until the price was paid. A document embodying this condition was given to A. A. sold the bicycle to the defendant and shewed him the document, but, according to the defendant, he did not read it. The defendant sold the bicycle to another person, but was unable or unwilling to give the name of the purchaser.

Held, that as the defendant had the full means of knowing the condition on which, as between the plaintiff and A. the property was to rest in the latter, he was liable for the value of the cycle notwithstanding that he had parted with the possession.

Sadie v. Standard Bank (7 Juta 87) approved.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Resident Magistrate of Somerset West, in an action brought by the appellant against the respondent for the recovery of a bicycle, or its value, £13 13s., £5 damages for unlawful detention, and costs of suit.

From the record in the Court below, it appeared that the bicycle was sold to one Aston in July last, and had to be paid for by instalments, the first to be £1 cash down, and the rest by fortnightly instalments of 30s., the bicycle to remain the property of the sellers until the price had been paid in full. Aston failed to pay the plaintiffs the value of the said bicycle, and in August last he wrongfully disposed of the machine to the defendant, who was summoned for having wrongfully and unlawfully possessed himself of the said bicycle. Plaintiffs had demanded the return of the machine from the defendant, but he refused to comply. The Magistrate gave judgment for the defendant, with costs.

The Magistrate, in his reasons for judgment, said this was a case of purchase of a certain bicycle on the hire system, plaintiffs basing their claim on the agreement signed by the original purchaser, Aston. The opinion he formed was that the dominium had passed from the plaintiffs to the man Aston, by virtue of the sale and delivery of the bicycle, and the plaintiffs agreeing to give credit for the balance of the purchase amount, thus differing from the case of Daniels v. Cooper (1 Buchanan's E.D.C. Reports, p. 174), the plaintiffs, no doubt with the intention of pushing their trade, having given credit to Aston and thus taken the risk upon themselves. On the failure of Aston to pay the second instalment on the 3rd August, the plaintiffs took no action against him, although he was at his work at De Beers until the 18th August; nor after he left did they take even reasonable measures to trace the bicycle. The defendant appeared to have acted bona fide in the matter, and having ascertained that Aston was employed at De Beers, he had every reason to believe that the bicycle offered was the property of Aston.

Mr. Alexander (for appellant) contended that it was perfectly clear from the Magistrate's reasons that the Magistrate had founded his judgment upon a case which did not appear to apply to the present case, viz., Daniels v. Cooper. He should have followed other decisions in the Law Courts, where the principle involved in this case had been dealt with. In the case of Daniels v. Cooper (1 E.D. 174), it was an out-and-out sale. Counsel quoted Keyter v. Barry's Executor (Buch. 1879-175), Harvey and Another v. Martin (5 H.C. 167), and submitted that Aston had no property in the bicycle, that he could not pass property to the respondent, and that the respondent was properly liable, as being the last person in the possession of the property, and one who could not give an account of where the property had now gone.

Mr. Wilkinson (for respondent) submitted that this was not a question of whether the property in the bicycle passed to Aston or not. It was simply a question whether the plaintiffs could maintain a vindicatory action against the respondent, who no longer had the property in his possession, and who acquired possession in good faith, and had parted with it in good faith. The case of Sadie v. Standard Bank (7 Juta, 87) was decisive on that question. He contended that the defendant acted in entirely good faith throughout the transaction.

Mr. Alexander was not heard in reply.

De Villiers, C.J.: The action brought in this case was a vindicatory action. The plaintiffs claimed the bicycle or its value, upon the ground that the property still was in the plaintiffs. Now, the ordinary rule undoubtedly is that a vindicatory action should be brought against the person in possession of the property. The defendant admits that he bought the bicycle from Aston; he does not give the name of the person to whom he sold the bicycle, and the plaintiffs, therefore, proceeded against the defendant. If the defendant was free from blame in the matter, it is clear that the plaintiffs would have had no remedy against him, and the only question in this case is, was the defendant acting in good faith when he bought the cycle from Aston and resold it to a stranger whose name he is unable or unwilling to disclose? The contract between the plaintiffs and Aston is set out in the agreement, which is in the form of a receipt: "Received from Messrs. Smith and Woodville one free-wheel cycle, complete, for which I agree to pay the sum of 13 guineas, as follows: £1 cash, and the balance in fortnightly instalments of £1 10s., commencing the 3rd August, 1903; the cycle to remain the property of sellers until paid for in full." It is clear, then, that, as between the plaintiffs and Aston, the property would not pass until the purchase price was paid. It is unnecessary now to refer to the decisions as to third parties dealing with the purchaser under the hire-purchase system, because, as I said before, the sole question raised in the present case is whether there is perfect bona fides on the part of the defendant or not. Now, upon this point, the evidence given by the defendant himself appears to me to be perfectly clear. He says: "Aston showed me the agreement produced, but I did not read it; he did not willingly show me the document." Surely a purchaser under such circumstances cannot be held to be a bona fide purchaser. "Aston did not show me willingly." That was one important reason why he should have read the document. The fact that he did not show it willingly was notice to him that there was something behind it, and it was clearly his duty to have read this agreement; and if he had read it he would have seen that Aston was not justified in selling. I adhere to the view expressed in Sadie v. Standard Bank (7 Juta 92), that the sale and delivery of goods belonging to another with knowledge of the owner's claim is a wrongful act, which the person committing it cannot avail himself of as a defence to an action for the delivery of the goods on payment of their value. It is said that the defendant in the present case possessed no such knowledge, but he had full means of knowledge, for Aston, although unwillingly, showed him the document in which the plaintiff's rights of ownership are reserved. Having deliberately closed his eyes to such means of knowledge, he must bear the consequences. The Magistrate was wrong in his judgment, and the appeal must be allowed, with costs in this Court and the Court below.

Mr. Alexander: Does your lordship give judgment as prayed?

His Lordship: Not for the £5 damages. Judgment will be entered for £13 13s., with costs in this Court and the Court below.

[Appellant's Attorney: D. Tennant, Junr.; Respondent's Attorney: W. G. Coulton.]

BARRY V. CUMMING.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Resident Magistrate of Qumbu, in an action brought by the respondent against the appellant for £52 rent, a writ of ejectment from the premises hired by the appellant, and £100 damages for wrongfully continuing in occupation of the premises after receiving notice to quit. The Magistrate gave judgment for the plaintiff for £52 rent, £40 damages for illegal occupation, and an order for ejectment.

The Magistrate's reasons (from which the facts of the case sufficiently appear), were as follows:—

"In this case plaintiff (married to Mr. A. C. Cumming out of community of property), sues defendant for £52 rent, for a writ to eject defendant from the hired premises, and for £100 damages for wilfully continuing in occupation of the premises after receiving notice to quit.

For the plaintiff. A. C. Cumming states that in December, 1900, he bought from the insolvent estate of one Jas. Barry (father of the defendant), certain improvements on land occupied by Jas. Barry without title in the village of Qumbu. He states that these improvements consisted of a garden, 4 huts, a cottage, etc., etc. He further states that about the middle of December, 1900, defendant came to him with a view to hiring the land, that he hired the property to defendant for a rental of £2 per mensem, and that defendant paid £1 as rent for half December, 1900. Since that date defendant has not paid any further rent although demanded by Mrs. Cumming's attorney. In September, 1902, Mr. Cumming, on behalf of the plaintiff, sold the property to Mr. E. C. Goss for £100, and at the same time gave defendant notice to quit the premises by November 1st, 1902. Defendant telegraphed in reply, declining to vacate the premises, and disputing plaintiff's right to ownership of same. Mr. H. Batteson states that he was present when defendant came to hire the premises, that nothing was said about purchasing them, that defendant paid £1 as rent for December, 1900.

Mr. Alwyn Rein, R.M., Qumbu, states the meeting in Jas. Barry's Insolvent estate was held before him in June, 1900. At this meeting Jas. Barry was examined in regard to his insolvency, and that he gave evidence to the effect that he bought the improvements then under discussion for £60. Mr. Rein further states that the improvements surrendered and sold included the buildings at present occupied by the defendant.

For the defence, Mr. John Barry, defendant, states that he bought half the premises (formerly those of Mr. Ruthers) from his father in January, 1897, for £30, that he approached Mr. Cumming in December, 1900, with a view to purchasing the other half, occupied and surrendered by his father. Defendant states that Mr. Cumming informed him he would have to consult plaintiff before deciding to sell the property. Defendant further states that he hired the premises then for one month for £1 5s., in order to save his mother from being turned out. He says that Mr. Cumming promised to write to him and acquaint him with Mrs. Cumming's decision in the matter, but he never did so. In November, 1901, defendant received a letter from Mr. M. P. Milner, of Tsolo, plaintiff's solicitor, demanding rent for the hired premises, and calling upon him to enter into a formal agreement of hiring. Defendant put the matter into the hands of his law agent, who states that he interviewed Mr. Milner, who told him that he could give him no further information about the matter.

In coming to a decision in this case, I believed the plaintiff's version of the matter. I could not believe that defendant had bought half the property from his father in 1897. If such had been the case, he would have mentioned the fact to the Magistrate who examined and valued the premises when James Barry applied to have all the land surveyed. Mr. James Barry did not mention the fact either, although he knew the Government had consented to have the land surveyed on the first favourable opportunity. Mr. Rein positively asserts that all the buildings were under discussion, including those at present occupied by defendant, and that these buildings were all surrendered and sold. Defendant's action on receiving notice to quit was also peculiar. According to his account, he had only rented half the property from Cumming, and yet on receiving notice to quit, he disputes plaintiff's ownership in toto. In the face of the combined evidence of Messrs. Rein, Batteson, Cumming and Milner, there can be no doubt that all the improvements were sold by the trustee to the plaintiff.

In regard to the rent, even if the defendant had proved his ownership to half the property, which he has not done, and if he had only hired the place for one month for his mother, he would be liable for the period the buildings were occupied by his mother after the expiration of that month for allowing his mother to continue in occupation. Had he wished to free himself of further liability in regard to the rent, he should have given Mr. Cumming notice to the effect that his mother was continuing the occupation in her own name, instead of allowing her to hold over after the period had expired for which he alleges he had hired the premises. He never did this, and in view of Mr. Cumming's and Mr. Batteson's evidence, I have no alternative but to believe that the hiring was not for a fixed period but at the will of the plaintiff at £2 per mensem. It would seem that the arrangements referred to by Mr. Batteson meant the preparation of an agreement of hiring, which the defendant was called upon to complete by Mr. Milner.

The defendant's agent, in excepting to the summons, contended that it too vaguely described the premises, but I consider it would have been impossible to have described them more clearly. I therefore over-ruled the exception.

In regard to the claim for damages I was guided by the case of Nicholson v. Myburgh (14 Juta, 384). Mr. Goss bought the property in September last, and should have gone into occupation on November 1 last. I was guided by the claim he has made against plaintiff in arriving at £40 damages.

Mr. Benjamin (for the appellant) said there was no doubt that in 1897 the defendant's father John James Barry, who became insolvent, purchased this property. The whole of the dispute in the matter seemed to have arisen out of the unfortunate position that the property occupied by Barry, senior, the insolvent, and which he purchased, was an unsurveyed portion on the confines of the township of Qumbu. Had the ground been surveyed, no dispute in the case could have arisen. There was no doubt that in 1897 the insolvent purchased the property, and he would submit that the son, the defendant in the action, purchased the half of the property from his father, and that he was entitled to that half. He paid for that half, he said, the sum of £30. He made considerable improvements. The building was originally an old stable, and he converted it into a homestead. In addition to that, he appeared to have improved the land, so that he acted as if he were the owner. Some stress was laid on the fact that the insolvent in his schedule did not bring up his son as the owner of half the land. That was not to be wondered at, because the insolvent appeared to be an uneducated man. It was also very curious that this matter should have been allowed to drag on for two years without any rent being demanded. Subsequently the plaintiff came down for accumulated rent for over two years. Even if the Court were against him on the main point of the appeal, the amount of damages awarded was certainly excessive. The purchase price of the property was £100, and the magistrate actually awarded £40 damages.

Mr. Buchanan (for the respondent) said that there was overwhelming evidence to show that the defendant could not have bought this half property. He had only recently taken up this position.

De Villiers, C.J., asked whether the plaintiff's husband, in the letter he sent to the insolvent, did not bring improper influence to bear upon him. The letter said: "I suppose you know your son John intends to dispute Mrs. Cumming's claim to the ground at present occupied by him. As you know, Mrs. Cumming has a very strong case against you criminally, and it will depend to a great extent upon the action of your son in this matter" He tries to influence the son in this civil action, by virtue of his having a criminal action against his father—that is, by virtue of something else.

Mr. Buchanan said that he must admit that it was a most unfortunate letter; but, after all. the man was exasperated, no doubt, because of his being kept out of his property.

De Villiers, C.J.: The plaintiff is the wife of Archibald Cumming, who was the trustee of the insolvent estate of James Barry. In his capacity as such trustee he gave notice that he would sell certain property belonging to the estate. At the sale he, on behalf of his wife, purchased this property for £25. He received no transfer of the property, nor would it have been possible to receive transfer, seeing that the insolvent himself had no title to the property. It appears that the insolvent had made certain improvements upon the property, but he had never obtained title. After the plaintiff had so bought this property her husband entered into communication with the defendant, and the real question in dispute between the parties arises out of what took place at that communication. According to the plaintiff, from the property which she bought she let the property to the defendant at the rate of £2 per month. According to the defendant, the property was divided into two parts, one of them occupied by the defendant's father and mother, and the other occupied by defendant himself, and according to him he did engage to pay rent for one month, but he says that the reason why he did so was that Mr. Cumming (the plaintiff's husband), wished to see his wife before he could enter into any final arrangement, and it was only to tide over that period that he was to pay the rent. But he says that in regard to the property that he himself occupied at that time, and still occupies, he had previously bought it from his father and paid him £30. Then Mr. Pattison is called to corroborate the plaintiff as to what is alleged to have taken place, and Mr. Pattison, in my opinion, by no means corroborates the plaintiff, because all he can say is that he saw the money paid, but it was arranged that a further arrangement should be come to at a future time, so that Mr. Pattison does not in any way support the plaintiff's statement. that there was a definite agreement on that occasion under which the defendant was to hire the property from the plaintiff. After the defendant had been in possession for some time a dispute arose between the parties, a letter was written to the plaintiff claiming this property, but the defendant practically took no notice of the claim, and then the plaintiff, in order to indirectly influence the defendant to yield to his (the plaintiff's) demand, writes to the defendant's father that there was a criminal claim against him, and he brings that into connection with the claim against the defendant in order that he may be able to coerce the defendant into yielding on this action. Now, I mention this, not as conclusive in this case, but as showing the shift to which the plaintiff felt himself obliged to resort for the purpose of inducing the defendant to yield to the claim which he was making. Plaintiff proceeded with his action, with the result that in respect of the property for which he (the plaintiff) had paid £25, he gets a judgment from the Resident Magistrate that the defendant is to give up occupation, and to pay £52 rent and £40 damages. In the year 1900 he has paid £25 for this property, and yet the defendant is ordered to surrender to the plaintiff this property, and to pay him £92 for it, nearly four times what he paid for it. The Magistrate orders that this property is to be given up to the plaintiff, and £92 to be paid to the plaintiff. Well, such a judgment may be law, and if it is law, I am bound to protect it, certainly it would not be justice, but, in my opinion, it is neither law nor justice, and, under all the circumstances, it should be overruled. I am satisfied from the evidence that the defendant did purchase the portion of that property for £30, and I am in the same position to judge as to the credibility of the plaintiff's witnesses, at all events, as the Magistrate himself, seeing that the plaintiff's evidence was given by interrogatories. That evidence leaves a good deal to be desired, and certainly it should not weigh against the definite evidence given on behalf of the defendant that he paid £30 to his father three years before the plaintiff had bought this property from the insolvent estate. I am satisfied that the defendant throughout believed he had bought this property, and that when he entered into communication with the plaintiff in regard to the land, it was simply to tide over the month so as to enable Archibald Cumming to see the plaintiff in regard to the matter. Now, it is quite clear that so far as the portion is concerned which is occupied by the defendant's father, that that must be vacated by him, but the defendant does not appear to me to be in possession of that portion or ever to have been in possession, and, therefore, there should be no judgment against defendant in regard to that portion. If the plaintiff has any claim against the father, he may proceed to prosecute his claim, but, under all the circumstances, I am clearly of opinion that the judgment the Magistrate should have pronounced was to give absolution from the instance so far as the claim is concerned, which affects the property occupied by the defendant. As to the property occupied by the father, the plaintiff of course, can proceed against the father. As regards the other claim, I am of opinion that the Magistrate should not have given an order for ejectment and a fortiori he is not entitled either to the rent of £52, for which the Magistrate has given judgment, nor to the £40 damages which have been awarded. The appeal will, therefore, be allowed, and absolution from the instance given, with costs in this Court and the Court below.

[Appellant's Attorneys: Faure and Zietsman; Respondent's Attorneys: Findlay and Tait.]

TRIAL CAUSES.

KETS V. MANEVILL.

Mr. C. W. de Villiers said that this was an action brought for the recovery of the purchase price of certain land, which was sold, failing that, cancellation of sale. The defendant, since the institution of the action, had become insolvent, and his trustee had not yet elected whether he would go on with the action or whether he would consent to the cancellation of the sale. He wished to consult a meeting of the creditors, which would take place some time during this month. He applied for the substitution of the trustee for the defendant in the action, and for the case to be allowed to stand over until the 12th December.

De Villiers, C.J.: A definite date cannot be appointed, but the case will stand over sine die.

FARRELL V. WOODSTOCK MUNICIPALITY. { 1903. Nov. 3rd.

Negligence—Burthen of proof—Due precautions to prevent accidents—Municipality.

The Municipal Council of W., in the course of excavating a street, left a heap of clay lying in the street, over which the plaintiff stumbled during the night time.

Held, in an action brought by the plaintiff against the Council for damages for bodily injury occasioned by the fall, that the burthen of proving that due precautions had been taken to prevent the obstruction from being a source of danger to persons lawfully using the street during night time lay upon the Council.

This was an action brought by John William Farrell, a clerk, residing at Woodstock, against the Municipal Council of Woodstock, to recover £1,000 damages for personal injuries alleged to have been occasioned by the negligence of the defendants or their servants.

The declaration set out that the defendant Council was responsible for the roads situate in its Municipality. In or about the month of July, 1903, the defendants, their servants, or agents made or caused to be made certain excavations in Victoria-walk, and for the purpose thereof deposited upon the said road a large heap or mound of earth, gravel, and other material, and thereby obstructing the said road, street, or thoroughfare, and rendered it dangerous to passengers. It was the duty of the said Council to take reasonable precautions to ensure the safety of the public, and more particularly to indicate and give notice of the position of the said heap. The defendant Council neglected so to do. On or about the 24th July, wrongfully, unlawfully, and negligently, and in breach of their duty, the Council left the said heap wholly unattended, and without lamp or light to indicate the existence of the heap. On the morning of the 24th July the plaintiff, while it was dark, fell against the said mound or heap, and was thrown to the ground with great violence, and sustained a fractured rib, and was cut and bruised, and otherwise seriously injured in body and health, and had sustained damages in the sum of £1,000.

The defendant Council, in their plea, said that in July, 1903, they lawfully caused excavations to be made across the footpath of the said Victoria-walk, for the purpose of laying down the sewer to connect the drain from the public school with the sewer in Victoria-walk. The earth or gravel deposited on the road formed a heap 18 inches high. The excavation was duly covered with boards, and on the night of July 23 a lamp was fixed, so as to show a light on the heap. The lamp burned through the night, and was still burning at seven o'clock on the morning of the 24th July. The defendants said that they had no knowledge of the injuries sustained by the plaintiff, that any injuries that he sustained were received by his own negligence, and not through any act for which the defendants were responsible. They therefore prayed that the plaintiff's claim be dismissed, with costs.

Mr. Upington (with him Mr. Sutton) for the plaintiffs; Mr. Gardiner (with him Mr. Russell) for the defendants.

Mr. Upington produced the plan of the scene of the accident.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Does the defendant admit that there was a light?]

No, our evidence will be that there was no light, neither on that morning nor the previous evening.

[De Villiers, C.J.: That will be the main question, I suppose.]

Yes. There was a lamp further down, but our evidence will be to the effect that between this lamp and the mound against which the plaintiff fell there was thick foliage, which prevented the mound being seen.

John Wm. Farrell, the plaintiff, said he was a clerk in the Post-office, in receipt of a salary of £185 a year. He resided in Mountain-road, Woodstock. On the 24th July, about 5.50 a.m., he left his home for the purpose of proceeding to his duties at the Post-office. It was still dark. He was on early duty at 6.30 that week. He proceeded across Mountain-road into Earl-street, and then turned into Victoria-walk. He was walking slowly. He knew the road well. He was in the habit of going along Victoria-walk to the Toll-gate, and then taking a tram. He suddenly came into contact with a heap of earth, and was thrown to the ground, and he remembered nothing more till he was picked up. There was no light whatever near by. He could not see the mound. Mr. Aldred came up and picked him up, he believed. The first thing he remembered was Mr. Aldred telling him to go home. Witness felt a severe pain in his head and at his side. Witness said he would go to work, and he proceeded to the Post-office, leaving again at 11.30 a.m. He felt very ill. His breathing was difficult. He saw Mr. Aldred sitting on the stoep, and arranged for medical assistance to be called in. Witness went to bed, and Dr. Smith afterwards attended him. Dr. Smith had attended witness from the 24th July to the present time. He was unable to move his leg, and he was now only able to use it by the aid of a crutch. Dr. Smith's account up to the present would be £69 13s. 6d. Witness had had to expend a good deal of money on medicines. He had spent £40 in cash. He had received his salary from the Post-office. He believed that for six months he would draw full salary; for a further six months, he would receive half-salary, and at the end of that period he would have to go on pension.

Cross-examined by Mr. Gardiner: He usually went by that road when he was on early turn. He did not notice the earth in the road on the day before the accident. He passed on the previous morning in the darkness. He did not tell an official of the Council that the accident occurred at the junction between Earl-street and Victoria-walk. He said that he fell over a mound by the public school. He did not see a lamp on the mound, or anywhere near. There might have been a lamp there without a light.

John Aldred, who resided with the plaintiff, said he recollected the plaintiff leaving home on the 24th July. It was pitch dark when the plaintiff went out. Witness went out about five minutes afterwards, and turned into Victoria-walk. Just as he got to the mound, he found Farrell lying there. There was no light burning. The plaintiff was not conscious. The mound was sufficiently large to be dangerous. He escorted the plaintiff to the car. On witness's return he examined the heap, and he should say it was 2 feet 6 inches high. It was lying close up to the footpath. There was no light that would show anybody that there was a mound in the road.

Cross-examined by Mr. Gardiner: He had not been discharged from the Gas Company's employ for drunkenness. He had lived on his private means. The reason why he was out so early in the morning was that it had been his habit to rise early during the twenty years he had been in the Tramway Company's employ

John M. Blundell, hairdresser, said that on the evening of July 23, he passed along Victoria Walk on his bicycle. He saw some excavations going on, and he noticed a number of lamps at the side. He accordingly rode on the other side of the road, and collided with a heap o' earth. He was thrown off his machine.

Dr. Thomas Hector Smith said that prior to the accident plaintiff was a strong, healthy man. The witness described plaintiff's injuries. He attended plaintiff still. Plaintiff was in bed for three weeks. He was unable to bend his leg. Witness regarded his condition as very grave. There were indications of brain trouble. Witness's account for attendance was £69 16s. 6d., up to the 31st ult. This did not include medicines.

Cross-examined by Mr. Gardiner: There had been serious developments since witness gave his last certificate on the 17th October. No medical man could say, in plaintiff's present condition, whether he would recover or not.

Dr. Sidney Wm. Richardson also gave evidence. In addition to the partial loss of control of the leg, and of the arm, plaintiff had apparently suffered a loss of sensation in parts of the body. Witness considered plaintiff's recovery was uncertain, and that his progress was not likely to be rapid.

Mr. Upington put in the correspondence, and closed the plaintiff's case.

Mr. Gardiner called

Thomas Rushford, street inspector, in the employ of the Woodstock Municipality, who said there was very little traffic on Victoria Walk. In July some excavations were being made there in connection with the laying of drains. The excavation in the footpath was boarded over and the clay was heaped in the road. At the time of the accident it had been there about a week. It was 1 ft. 9 inches high, 2 feet broad, and 4 feet six inches wide. A lamp was hung on a fence pole at night. This was about six feet from the clay, and was 3 feet 6 inches high. This was the usual way in which clay was guarded. Witness had experimented with the lamp in this position, and could see a brick 30 feet away. A watchman was employed to look after these lamps. After the accident witness saw plaintiff, who said he was running to catch the tram, and had just turned the corner of Earl-street into Victoria Walk when he fell. Afterwards, plaintiff said it was down at a lower point that he fell.

Charles Frederick Holman, engine-driver, in the employ of the Woodstock Municipality, said he had gone to see if these lamps were lit on several occasions. At 9.30 on the night preceding the accident, all the lamps in the street were burning. The lamp on the railings threw a good light on the heap of clay The lamps burned for 22 hours with one fill.

John Steyn, night watchman, in the Woodstock Council's employ, said he filled and lighted the lamps every night Witness filled the lamp in question, and lit it on the night preceding the accident. He saw that the lamp was alight at 2 o'clock on the morning of the accident.

By the Court: Witness thought the lamp was put there to show the planks over the excavation. There was no danger from the planks. If the clay had not been there the lamp would still have been placed there to show the holes.

Isaac Graham, lamp-lighter, said he remembered seeing this lamp alight as he passed at 2 o'clock on the morning of the accident.

Robert Wm. Menmuir, M.I.C.E., and engineer to the Woodstock Municipality, said he had tested the lighting power of this type of lamp. Ordinary print could be read a distance of five yards. The clay could be seen very distinctly in that position. Witness thought it a reasonable precaution to take. The extreme end of the heap of clay was seven feet six inches from the lamp. There was no need for a lamp to show the planks; the only reason the lamp was there was to show the clay.

Edward P. O'Reilly, manager to the Cape Town Gas Works Co., gave evidence as to the illuminating power of the lamp. The clay would be well shown by the lamp.

Mr. Upington called

George Cornelis Carstens, controller of the Post Office, who said plaintiff drew a salary of £125 a year. By the regulations of the service he would be entitled to full salary until December 23, and thereafter to half his salary for six months. After that he would be entitled to a pension at the rate of one-fifth of his salary.

Counsel were then heard in argument on the facts.

De Villiers, C.J.: Whatever else may have been doubtful in the present case, there can be no doubt whatever that on the morning of the 24th July last the plaintiff sustained a very serious accident, and that the accident was caused by an obstruction in the road. The obstruction consisted in a heap of clay, which was placed there by the defendants; and in my opinion the burden of proving that due precautions were taken to prevent any accident by reason of the obstruction lies upon the defendants. It was their clear duty to take every reasonable precaution to prevent accidents from being sustained by persons who were lawfully using that road, and unless they can satisfy me that such due precautions were used, they should be held liable. The precaution which they say they took was to place a lamp about six feet from the obstruction. But the plaintiff, on his part, denies that there was a light at all, even within six feet. I should have thought that a proper precaution to take would have been to place a lamp, not six feet from the spot, but at the spot, so as to make sure that the light would shine upon every portion of the obstruction. And certainly this precaution was not taken, for, according to the admissions of the defendants themselves, the nearest light was that light at the fence, about six feet away. But I am not satisfied from the evidence that on the occasion when the accident took place that light was actually burning. The plaintiff himself swears that there was no light, and the very fact that an accident occurred supports him in the statement. It seems almost incredible that a man would have fallen over a heap of clay if there was sufficient light to have seen the clay. It is suggested that he might be near-sighted; but I do not remember that any question was put to him on that point. But there is the fact that he fell over this heap of clay, and he says that he could not see this clay; that there was no light in the immediate neighbourhood, and in this statement he is supported by the witness Aldridge, and by the bicycle rider who passed that place on the previous evening, and had an accident at that particular spot. It is suggested we should not believe them, but I do not see why we should not accept their statement more than the evidence given on behalf of the defendants. They speak of a positive fact, whereas the others might firmly believe that the lights were there. Under these circumstances, I am of opinion that the Court is bound to hold that due precautions were not taken by the defendants to prevent accidents there to persons lawfully using that road, and that the defendants are liable for the consequences of the injury done to the plaintiff. On the point of the damages, His Lordship reveiwed the medical evidence, and said he was inclined to think that Dr. Smith had taken a too serious view of the injuries, and that the view taken by Dr. Richards was the more correct one. At the same time, he was not inclined to consider it was any light injury. The man had been laid up for some time, and for some time he would probably be unable to do his work; but he (the Chief Justice) saw no reason to suppose that he would not, in the course of time, recover, and resume his occupation. Of course, it was impossible to say what would take place; but the Court could only be guided by actual evidence, and not by suppositions as to what might take place. Upon the evidence, he thought there should be judgment for the plaintiff for £400, with costs.

[Plaintiff's Attorney: G. Trollip; Defendant's Attorneys: W. E. Moore and Son.]

GENERAL MOTION.

Ex parte LANGHOEVEN.

Mr. Upington applied for leave to have certain witnesses subpœned before the commission appointed to take evidence in the case of Miriam Cohen v. David Langhoeven, pending in the High Court of the Rand. The commission had been appointed on the application of the plaintiff in the action.

De Villiers, C.J., said it did not appear that there was any authority from the High Court to take the evidence of these witnesses. Defendant should first get an order from the Transvaal Court, and then this Court could assist him.

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP and the Hon. Mr. Justice KOTZE.]

VAN DER HORST v. COLONIAL GOVERNMENT. { 1903. Nov. 3rd.

Mr. Searle, K.C. (with him Mr. Benjamin), for the applicant, moved for an order that the affidavit of discovery which the Court had previously granted against the respondent should be filed before 2 o'clock that day. The case was set down for Wednesday, and the documents would be useless if the plaintiffs did not have them in time for consideration.

Order granted, with costs.

CRAMER v. KLEINBACH.

Mr. Benjamin moved as a matter of urgency for an order restraining A. Metska from dealing with a certain draft, and the South African Banking Corporation from parting with any moneys alleged to be stolen by one Hugh Kleinbach, a partner of the applicant. A bill of exchange for £200 had been drawn on the African Banking Corporation at East London, payable at a German bank, and the order was asked for pending an action against Kleinbach for a statement of account. Kleinbach surreptitiously disappeared from Cape Town, and when arrested £100 out of £300, which he is alleged to have taken, was found upon him.

A rule nisi was granted calling upon A. Metska to show cause why he should not be restrained from dealing with a draft for £200 drawn upon the African Banking Corporation payable in Germany. The rule to be returnable on November 12, to operate as an interdict. An order was granted on the bank not to honour the draft or part with the money pending a further order of Court, with leave to either party to move to have the order set aside.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.), and a Special Jury.]

VAN DER HORST v. COLONIAL GOVERNMENT. { 1903. Nov. 4th.

Negligence of servant — Railway regulations — Dangerous goods.

H. and his wife were passengers by rail from S. W. to Worcester. On the way a case of dynamite was negligently delivered by one P., who had been permitted by an official of the Railway Department to carry it with him in the train. Owing to negligent delivery by P., the dynamite exploded, thereby inflicting serious injuries to H. and his wife.

Held, that the said official had been guilty of negligence by not strictly enforcing the regulations of the department and that the department was liable for his tort.

This was an action brought by Even Jean Jacques van der Horst, of Worcester, against the Colonial Government, to recover £5,000 damages for injuries received by the plaintiff and his wife through the negligence of the defendants' servants in October, 1902.

Mr. Searle, K.C. (with him Mr. Benjamin), was for the plaintiff, and Mr. Howel Jones (with him Mr. Nightingale) was for the defendant.

Mr. Searle drew attention to the negligence of the defendants in failing to comply with an order fixing a time for discovery given by Mr. Justice Maasdorp and Mr. Justice Kotzé, the previous day. The Court fixed 2 o'clock on Tuesday, by which the affidavit should be filed, and Mr. McEwen had made an affidavit that the departmental correspondence relating to the case was very voluminous, embracing the departments of the G.M., A.G.M., C.T.M., T.M. of the Western System, Engineer-in-Chief, and the Commissioner of Public Works, and that it was practically impossible to make a complete list of all papers relating to the case. He objected to produce the correspondence between the officials of his department, as it was privileged. Counsel said that he had not seen any of the documents.

[De Villiers, C.J.: On what ground does he object to produce the correspondence?]

Mr. Jones: On the ground that they are State documents passing between officials.

[De Villiers, C.J.: These are not State documents.]

Mr. Jones cited the case of Fraser v. Sivewright (3 Juta, 375), and contended that the documents passing between subordinate officials and superior officers were privileged.

De Villiers, C.J.: Hasn't it been decided that a responsible Minister should come into Court and inform the Court that they are State documents, and their disclosure against public interest. I think that case does not hold that every letter written by one officer to another is privileged. The Colonial Secretary came into Court and said that he refused to consent to the production of the document on the ground that it would be detrimental to the ublic service.]

I did not know this question was going to be raised, and I think my learned friend should have given us notice that he would raise the question as to whether this affidavit was sufficient. One does not know what this correspondence may contain.

[De Villiers, C.J.: This case of Fraser v. Sivewright is wholly against your contention.]

Unfortunately, I have not got it here with me, my lord.

[De Villiers, C.J.: If a responsible Minister comes forward and says it is a State document, and against the interest of the State then it should not be disclosed.]

Although that question was raised to some extent the only question was the sufficiency of the affidavit, and in the judgment of Mr. Justice Kotzé he did not think it should be made by the responsible head.

[De Villiers, C.J.: I presume the defendant will produce all the documents bearing upon the case in their possession. They should have the whole of the correspondence here. Has there been any subpœna to produce it?]

No, my lord.

Mr. Searle: The difficulty is that we don't know what the documents are, and I would suggest that all documents be brought into Court.

[De Villiers, C.J.: I think it is clear all the documents should be produced relating to the case.]

Mr. Searle: I suggest the defendant be instructed to bring in all departmental correspondence.

Mr. Jones: We have not got it. No doubt it is in the country, and it is quite clear from the affidavit of the General Manager he has not been able to collect the correspondence.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Whatever the Government has it should be produced in Court.]

Mr. Searle: I take it we should be entitled to see what correspondence they have here?

[De Villiers, C.J.: It is a pity you didn't mention it before the jury was sworn, then we could compel the Government to produce the correspondence.]

Mr. Searle: The reason, my lord, was because we did not want the case put off until next March.

The declaration set forth that the plaintiff and his wife and son were travelling by passenger train from Somerset West to Worcester, and owing to the neglect of the employees of the railway in allowing a parcel of dynamite into a passenger train contrary to the laws of the railway, they received serious injuries. The dynamite exploded near Artois Siding, and, as a result, plaintiff sustained permanent injuries to both legs and feet. Plaintiff was unable to attend to his duties, and his wife also suffered permanent injury to one of her feet. Both were seriously injured, and had been put to considerable expense. Wherefore plaintiff prayed for £5.000, with interest and costs.

The plea admitted the formal allegations, but denied that dynamite was carried and exploded owing to the neglect of any employee of the railway. The dynamite exploded owing to a breach of the law on the part of one Pearce, who was not employed by the Railway Department. The injury was admitted, but not to the extent of £5,000.

Mr. Searle proceeded to narrate the principal facts of the case, and said the jury would first of all have to say what the injury was due to, and if there was any neglect for which the Government was responsible, and, if so, what damage had been sustained. Mr. and Mrs. Van der Horst were travelling from Tulbagh-road to Worcester with their boy. At Tulbagh-road a man named Pearce got into the train, about four or five compartments in front of the one occupied by the plaintiffs. He had with him a box of dynamite, which he had received by the order of the assistant engineer on the line. The order was signed by Mr. Sparrow, directing the Government Storekeeper at Tulbagh-road to give the case of dynamite to Pearce. It appeared workmen were altering the line near Artois Siding, under a contract with the Government. As the train approached the gang Pearce dropped out a parcel of dynamite to the men, and it exploded under the carriage in which Mr. and Mrs. Van der Horst were travelling, blew a hole through the floor, and caused the injuries stated.

Evidence was then called for the plaintiff.

Even Jean Jacques van der Horst, plaintiff, gave his age as 51, and said he was superintendent of the Industrial School at Worcester. In October last year he was returning from Somerset Strand, and on the main line there were three others in the carriage, beside his wife and boy. Between Tulbagh-road and Ceres-road he was talking to his wife, when he felt a shock, and three others and himself were thrown on to the floor. He looked up, and saw his wife's dress all disarranged. He tried to get up, but could not move, on account of the injury to his left leg, which was smashed in three places close to the ankle. His wife could not move to his assistance. There was a hole in the bottom of the carriage sufficient to see the wheel. Dr. Hugo and Dr. Van der Merwe attended to him at Worcester. For three months he lay in bed, and for another three months he was wheeled about in a chair. Then he was advised to go to Aliwal North, and after three months he returned, and in July he resumed his occupation, with the aid of two sticks. It was impossible for him to carry out his work, and he intended to resign. His salary, in all, would amount to £350 a year. It cost him £34 for a nurse, but he had not yet received the doctors' accounts. He received no salary for a certain period, and had to find a substitute. His trip to Aliwal North cost him £60, and in all he was out about £200. He was constantly suffering pain, and it was with great inconvenience he could move about. The right foot was about an inch longer than the left. His health did not improve during the last few months.

Cross-examined by Mr. Jones: He had not taken any action against Pearce, or his employers, Howard and Co. He just brought an action straight against the Government. The £200 expenses included those of Mrs. Van der Horst, but he had not received the medical expenses yet. He could not stand for any time to explain things on the blackboard to the pupils. No School Committee would take him now.

Helena van der Horst, wife of the last witness, said that she was travelling with her husband when the explosion occurred. There was a shock, and she heard an awful noise. She could not stand on her feet when she tried to go to her husband's assistance. Her right foot was injured, and as a result, she was fourteen days in bed, and for three months she could not put her foot to the ground. Her foot was always painful, and was worse when she was walking. Her general health had suffered as a result of the injury, and she had been attended by Dr. Van der Merwe for six months.

Cross-examined by Mr. Jones: She would not say she was an invalid. Her real complaint was that she could not do her household work as well as she used to. She would not say she was getting better every day.

Dr. Hugo, railway medical officer at Worcester, said he proceeded to the train on the 7th October, and he saw Mr. and Mrs. Van der Horst. Mr. Van der Horst had a compound fracture of the left leg, just above the ankle, and contusion of the left and right feet. It was doubtful whether the foot would be saved, as the bones were splintered through the skin. He had not examined the plaintiff lately, and would not like to offer an opinion as to whether he would recover. Mrs. Van der Horst had contusions of both feet.

Cross-examined by Mr. Jones: He had been specially paid by the Government for his attendance on Mr. and Mrs. Van der Horst. It was possible Mrs. Van der Horst was still suffering from the contusions.

By De Villiers, C.J.: The understanding was that he was paid by the Government when an accident was due through the negligence of their servants, and in this case he was summoned by the stationmaster at Ceres, and claimed specially from the Government.

Dr. Van der Merwe, of Worcester, who attended to Mr. and Mrs. Van der Horst after Dr. Hugo, said that Mr. Van der Horst's left leg was broken, and he was in a critical state at the time, and he had thought of amputation. In Mrs. Van der Horst's case, the bone that was the key of the arch of the foot dropped down, and in Mr. Van der Horst's case, the right foot was knocked flat. It would have been almost better if Mrs. Van der Horst had had her leg broken, and neither she nor her husband would ever have the same power of their limbs they had before the accident. He had attended them for six months, and his charge would be something between £50 and £60.

Cross-examined by Mr. Jones: Mr. Van der Horst would improve in time. He did not know how a special boot could be made to prevent the pain.

Francis Roux said that he was travelling in the train when the explosion occurred. The man Pearce got into his compartment, carrying a small parcel, about nine inches long. A Kafir boy brought him a case about two feet long. The case was open, and was put on the floor in the centre of the carriage. The lid was loose on the top. Pearce asked witness to change places, as he wished to put out a parcel. Between Tulbagh and Artois, Pearce put his head out of the window, and shouted out to the railway men to look out. Then he dropped the parcel out. When the dynamite exploded, he said: "Oh, God; I'm in trouble." They were just outside the station then. The guard took the box out at Artois. Mr. and Mrs. Van der Horst were five or six compartments behind him.

Cross-examined by Mr. Jones: He did not see any railway officials speak to Pearce. Pearce was arrested, and witness gave evidence against him. Pearce got in from the platform side.

Re-examined by Mr. Searle: The box was labelled "Explosive—Dynamite," and any official could have seen him get in.

Alfred Watson, storekeeper, said that last October he was in Government employ near Tulbagh Station. Mr. Pauling was the engineer in charge of the reductions of the gradients between Tulbagh and Ceres-road. Mr. Pauling's headquarters was at Ceres-road. Mr. Sparrow was assistant engineer. Witness had control of the dynamite. On the 7th October witness was on the Tulbagh-road Station, when Pearce arrived, and handed witness a letter with an order from Mr. Sparrow to give Pearce a case of dynamite. Pearce said he wanted to get back to Ceres-road as soon as he possibly could with the dynamite. Pearce afterwards was talking to the railway officials about getting back to Ceres, and the stationmaster said he could go back by a goods train, which was the first train due for Ceres, but it did not arrive up to time. Witness proceeded to bring up the dynamite, which was clearly marked, and left the case on the seat. Pearce could not be found for fifteen minutes, and when witness saw him, he said that he had taken the dynamite. The dynamite was Government property for the works. In other cases witness handed over the dynamite to the railway officials for transit. He never knew of dynamite being sent by passenger trains. In some cases they had special trucks, made of iron, for the carriage of dynamite. The explosion took place about three-quarters of a mile on this side of Artois Siding. Howard was contracting at that spot, but two weeks after the accident, the Government took over the work.

Cross-examined by Mr. Jones: Witness knew Pearce was manager for Howard. Witness was not in the habit of supplying dynamite to Howard. Howard had to supply his own material, and it was only because he ran short of dynamite that he got that case. The stationmaster did not say a word about a passenger train. Pearce was found in the hotel, and said that he had taken charge of the dynamite.

Re-examined by Mr. Searle: He would not have given the dynamite to Howard without the signature of the Government Engineer. The stationmaster suggested that Pearce might put the dynamite in the van, which was in readiness for the next goods train.

Subject to his right to put in certain correspondence, Mr. Searle closed his case.

Evidence was then called for the defence.

Wm. Sparrow, assistant engineer of the Tulbagh-Ceres-road section, said that Howard and Co. were doing work at Artois under a contract with the Government. Witness had absolutely nothing to do with Howard's men, his duty merely consisting of seeing that the work was properly done. Howard had his own store. Howard and Co. had a permit for a small weekly supply of dynamite from the Colonial Secretary, and on the day in question, the work was stopped, owing to their supply not having arrived. Witness lent Pearce a case of dynamite to facilitate the work. On a previous occasion Howard had powder conveyed by road in charge of a native.

By de Villiers, C.J.: Pearce had not a free pass.

Cross-examined by Mr. Searle: According to the contract, witness had to supervise the work. He had nothing to do with Howard's men, and if anything was wrong, he spoke to Howard or his manager. He could call upon Howard to dismiss any man that was inefficient. He had heard that Pearce had since got a railway contract. He did not know that the dynamite would come back by train. Witness tried to hurry Howard on with the work. Pearce would have got back much quicker had he walked. Shortly afterwards Howard left for Johannesburg, and the Government took over the work. He had heard that Howard would not pay his men. If dynamite was sent to the Government works, it was always booked. The small quantity referred to was sufficient to blow up a whole train.

John Robert Reid, relieving stationmaster, said that on the 7th October he was at Tulbagh-road, and saw Pearce. Witness did not give him permission to travel by the passenger train. Witness did not see Pearce again.

Cross-examined by Mr. Searle: He knew Pearce was taking dynamite to Ceres-road. Witness told Pearce he could travel by passenger train, but the dynamite would have to go by the goods train. Witness was on the station when the train left, but he did not see Pearce leaving. He would stop anyone with a dynamite package.

By De Villiers, C.J.: He did not tell him that 24 hours' notice in writing was necessary, or that he must give the name and address of the proposed consignee. Witness suggested that it would have to be put in the dog-box. Wednesday was the day fixed for the conveyance of dynamite from Tulbagh, but he thought 56 lb. was a small quantity.

By Mr. Searle: The fact of it not being booked was purely a contravention of the rules. He took no further steps after he saw Pearce.

Re-examined by Mr. Jones: The only question he asked was about the first train, and the dynamite would have been perfectly safe in the dog-box.

Chas. Brown, guard in the employ of the C.G.R., said he was in charge of the train on which the explosion took place. A man asked to get into the van, but witness said there was plenty of room in the compartment. He had not a package in his possession at the time, and he mentioned nothing about dynamite. When the explosion took place, witness thought it was blasting, but when he looked out he saw the passengers signal to him to stop. The train was brought alongside Artois Siding, and witness handed Pearce over to the police.

Cross-examined by Mr. Searle: It was possible the boy with the box was standing behind Pearce when he attempted to get into the van. It did not strike witness as strange that the man wanted to get into the van. There was no mention of dynamite. All the windows of the carriage were smashed.

This closed the evidence.

Counsel having been heard in argument,

De Villiers, C.J., said that in deciding the question as to whether it was through the negligence of the railway employees the accident occurred, they would have to be satisfied that negligence had been clearly brought home to some official of the department. The Government had no such control over Pearce as to justify them in finding Pearce was a servant of the Government, and as such servant rendered the Government liable. The stationmaster at Tulbagh-road knew that Pearce was returning with dynamite, and he actually suggested that it might be put in the dog-box. In his opinion, Pearce would have been justified in putting the dynamite into the dog-box himself, and in concluding that he would be justified in taking dynamite on that precluded day, Tuesday. It was essential that every precaution should be taken with dynamite, and by the stringent regulations of the Railway Department they fully appreciated the danger. According to the regulations, it was imperative that a person should not wear boots with steel or iron nails, nor carry matches. Further, a special day was provided, and as Wednesday was fixed for Tulbagh-road, the stationmaster raised no objection to convey it on Tuesday. In his opinion, the stationmaster was the only person on the railway to whom negligence could be traced. If he had said to-morrow was the day on which dynamite could be received, Pearce would probably not have taken the dynamite into the train. If all the precautions had been fulfilled, the accident could not possibly have occurred. That was the simple ground on which the case rested. If the jury considered there was an absence of those precautions which ought to be used in the case of the carriage of such a dangerous article as dynamite by a responsible person at the station, then there was proof of negligence. If the explosion had taken place a little sooner, and the rest of the dynamite exploded, there was no telling what might have happened. It had been said that the Government was generous in such cases, but he had known of several cases where juries found the Government liable after they had refused to pay. If they found negligence, they should award such damages as to afford a warning to the department, and the officials of the department, as to the care to be exercised in the carriage of such dangerous materials as dynamite.

The jury retired, and after fifteen minutes' consultation found for the plaintiff in £2,500 damages, with costs.

Judgment was entered for that amount, and the plaintiff and his wife were declared necessary witnesses.

[Plaintiff's Attorneys: Van der Byl and Van der Horst; Defendant's Attorneys: Reid and Nephew.]

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP and the Hon. Mr. Justice KOTZE.]

Ex parte COHEN. { 1903. Nov. 4th.

Mr. Upington said that he desired to mention an application which he made to the Court on the previous day for leave to issue subpœnas to take certain evidence in the matter of Cohen v Langhoeven, before a commission of the High Court of the Transvaal now sitting in Cape Town. The difficulty arose that in this copy of the order of the Court of the Transvaal, there was an important omission, viz., that the plaintiff was given leave to call witnesses on her behalf at the commission. He understood that the commission was really joint. He now applied on behalf of the plaintiff.

Mr. Alexander opposed on the ground that notice had not been given to the defendant, at whose instance the commission had been appointed, and no particulars had been supplied as to the nature of the proposed evidence.

After hearing an explanation from Mr. Close, the commissioner in the matter, Maasdorp, J., said that an order would be issued for the witnesses mentioned in the affidavit to be subpœnaed before the commission.

SMIT V. BRINKMAN.

Principal and agent.

This was an action brought by Gideon Andries Smit, a farmer, residing in the division of Fraserburg, against L. B. Brinkman, who is an attorney residing and practising at Victoria West to recover £105, the price of certain sheep supplied to the defendant through his agent, one Murray.

The declaration set out that on the 29th November, 1902, the defendant, through his duly-authorised agent, one H. T. J. Murray, purchased from the plaintiff at his farm certain sheep for £105. The sheep were delivered by the plaintiff to the defendant, but, though frequently requested to pay the said purchase price, the defendant neglected, and refused to do so. Plaintiff claimed £105, with interest and costs of suit.

The defendant, in his plea, said that on the 27th November he, through one Murray, sent an order in writing to the plaintiff to sell to him (the defendant) certain sheep. The plaintiff sold and delivered the said sheep to Murray for £105, and gave credit to Murray, and took a promissory note for the price. Thereafter the said Murray delivered the said sheep to the defendant, and returned to him the said written order, and received from the defendant the price of the sheep, £105, for and on behalf of the plaintiff. He denied the allegations as to the sale, and said that the plaintiff still held the promissory note of the said Murray.

The plaintiff's replication admitted the order, which was signed by the defendant, for the purchase of the sheep, and as to the promissory note, he admitted that he accepted it from Murray, but said that it was given by Murray as agent to, and acting for and on behalf of the defendant. He said that the sheep were delivered to the defendant. He had tendered and again tendered the promissory note pending receipt of the money.

Upon the foregoing pleadings issue was joined.

Mr. Burton (with him Mr. C. W. de Villiers) for plaintiff; Mr. Buchanan (with him Mr. Gardiner) for defendant.

Mr. Buchanan said he should like it not to be understood that the replication was admitted to the effect that Murray was not the agent of the defendant for the purpose of giving the promissory note. He was agent for buying the sheep, under certain conditions, but not for giving the promissory note.

Evidence was called for the plaintiff.

Gideon Andries Smit (the plaintiff) said that in November, 1902, Murray came to his farm with a man named Pepler. Witness knew Murray, and he knew that he had no means. Murray produced an order from the defendant for some sheep. The defendant was to pay for the sheep. Witness sold 112 sheep at £1 each to defendant, and seven of the sheep were paid for at the time, leaving a balance due to witness of £105. He knew the order, because of the stamp, and the defendant's signature. Murray gave him a promissory note, which he (Murray) signed. Murray undertook to let him have the money in fifteen days, but witness did not receive payment. In January last witness wrote to Mr. Brinkman, applying for payment for the sheep. Brinkman replied by letter, saying that he gave Murray the money to hand over to witness, that he asked Murray afterwards about it, and that the latter said he had given the money to witness. Murray was away just then, but he (Brinkman) would speak to him again. Witness's attorney, Mr. Bolers, of Fraserburg, then sent a demand for the capital and interest, and enclosed a copy of the promissory note. Brinkman, replying on the 20th February, said that the only explanation he could give was that he paid the money to Murray to hand to Mr. Smit. Witness had since tendered the promissory note to Brinkman, but the latter declined to pay.

Cross-examined by Mr. Buchanan: Murray produced a letter from Brinkman. The letter did not say anything about a promissory note. It said that the sheep were to be sold to Murray for Brinkman, who would pay. The order did not mention a particular number of sheep. Pepler gave Murray the £7 that he paid to witness on account. Witness waited a time before he let Brinkman know that the money had not been paid, but as soon as he suspected that there was something wrong, he communicated with the defendant. The arrangement was that Murray should return and pay the money to him in fifteen days. Witness heard from his neighbour that Murray had called at his farm, and had only paid him part of the money that he owed him. Witness only got a post once a fortnight. He had not seen Murray since the transaction.

This closed the plaintiff's case.

Mr. Buchanan called

Lambert Hendrik Brinkman, the defendant, who said he was an attorney, and resided at Victoria West. In November he sent out Murray to buy certain sheep. Murray told him he could get ewes from Smit, and witness sent him there, limiting the number to be bought to 200. If he could not get the sheep from plaintiff, his instructions were to go to any neighbouring farms. For this reason the order was not addressed to any one individual. Witness gave Murray a written document, authorising him to buy sheep for him, and stating that he (witness) would settle all accounts for sheep bought by him. Witness's practice was to pay these accounts two or three days after, when the seller came to him.

Mr. Buchanan was proceeding to question the witness relative to what Murray told him about taking the money.

Mr. Burton objected.

The Court decided that the evidence was not admissible, unless agency was established between Smit and Murray.

Mr. Buchanan said he would call evidence later as to agency.

Continuing, witness said he did not give Murray authority to come back and fetch the money. He did not consider Murray was witness's agent, when he came for the purpose of getting the money. Mr Murray came back to witness, who gave him a cheque for the full amount of the sheep, and for £10 extra—£122 in all. Murray was a transport rider. This cheque was given immediately on receipt of the sheep, and of a certain message. Witness got back the order for the sheep from Murray; otherwise he would not have given the cheque. Witness saw Pepler, who came with Murray, and in consequence of what they told him he paid the money. Witness did not pay Murray's expenses out to take the money. The moment Murray brought the sheep, he had nothing more to do with witness, except to receive payment for his services in buying the sheep. Witness received a letter in January from plaintiff, and replied. After this transaction witness employed Murray for another deal. He questioned Murray, who said he had paid the money to Smit.

Cross-examined by Mr. Burton: Witness considered Muray became Smit's agent after he delivered the sheep. Murray showed him no authority from Mr. Smit to receive the money. Witness considered that in giving the money to Murray he was paying Smit.

By the Court: Witness gave no authority for the promissory note. Witness would not have given the money to Murray if what the latter said had not been confirmed by Pepler, and if he had not brought the order back.

Abraham Johannes Pepler said he bought sheep in November for Mr. Brinkman. He went with Murray to Smit's. After a price had been agreed upon, Murray showed Smit the order he had from Brinkman. Smit read it, and gave it back. He said to Murray: "I have no reason to go to the village; you must bring me the money here." Then the promissory note was drawn up. Murray did not write it. Smit gave Murray a time (15 days) in which to bring the money, and Murray left to fetch the money. Witness went with Murray to Brinkman, and heard the former ask Brinkman for the money. Brinkman gave a cheque, which Murray went to the Bank and cashed. Murray told defendant what Smit told him. He said he had given a promissory note, and must take the money to Smit.

Mr. Buchanan said that the defendant had made efforts through the Deputy Sheriff to find Murray, but had been unable to trace him.

Mr. Buchanan was then heard in argument on the facts.

Mr. Burton was not called upon.

Maasdorp, J.: The plaintiff in this case claims from the defendant payment of the sum of £105 as the purchase price of sheep sold and delivered by him to the defendant. It is stated in the declaration that this sale was effected through the agency of a man called Murray, who acted in the transaction as the agent of the defendant. It is not quite easy to follow the drift of the plea that has been put in by the defendant, but, on the whole, it may be said to amount to this: that the purchase is admitted through the agency of Murray, and the defendant alleges that payment took place by the delivery of the money to Murray on behalf of the plaintiff. The issue between the parties, therefore, now is whether Murray, when he received the money from the defendant, accepted it as the agent of the plaintiff or not. We need not go further, and inquire what the relationship was between the defendant and Murray. The defendant, upon his plea, has to prove that he paid the money to Murray, as the agent of the plaintiff. Now, I may say at once that there is no evidence at all in this case that the plaintiff appointed Murray as his agent to receive this money. The effect of the evidence as to what took place at the time of the sale seems to be this: that after the parties had agreed upon the number of sheep that were to be sold, and upon the price to be given, the plaintiff said to Murray: "The purchase price for the sheep must be paid on this farm"; which would naturally convey the idea that the plaintiff insisted that the defendant should come and pay him on the farm, or that the defendant, through his agent, should pay on the farm; and it cannot possibly be construed to amount to an appointment of Murray as agent to go and fetch the money. When we refer to the promissory note—upon the legal effect of which I wish to say nothing more than in so far as it bears upon the agency of Murray—this promissory note is given by Murray as agent for Brinkman. He promises that the money shall be paid on account of Brinkman, and in this promissory note it is provided that the money shall be payable at the plaintiff's farm. The effect of this is that Murray, as agent of Brinkman, promises, as such agent, to come and pay plaintiff the money on the plaintiff's farm. It appears then that Murray delivered the sheep to the defendant, and made certain representations to him. What these representations were, in detail, does not quite appear, but if we take Mr. Pepler's evidence it would amount to very little more than what the plaintiff himself has told us: that he told Murray the money was to be paid on the farm. Pepler says that that was the representation which was made. What more was said by Murray, and what more Mr. Brinkman might have been able to tell us, was said by Murray, we cannot go into, because the conversation between Murray and Brinkman was not evidence, the agency of Murray in relationship to the plaintiff not having been established. Upon the delivery of the sheep by Murray, he makes certain representations, and receives the money. Mr. Brinkman seems to have been under the impression that upon paying that money he was paying it to the plaintiff, which must mean that he thought he was paying Murray as the agent of the plaintiff. If he did so he must either have misunderstood Murray's position, or he must have been misled by Murray, and that may be for him a very unfortunate circumstance. The only question we have to decide is: Was any authority given by plaintiff to Murray to act as his agent to receive the money from the defendant? And I can only say again there is not a tittle of evidence to support that allegation. Under the circumstances, the payment to Murray was not payment to the plaintiff, and the plaintiff is entitled to recover this money, and judgment must be given for £105, with costs.

Kotzé, J., concurred.

[Plaintiff's Attorney: V. A. van der Byl; Defendant's Attorney: G. Trollip.]

VAN DER WESTHUYSEN v. LOCHNER. { 1903. Nov. 4th. „ 5th.

Building contract.

This was an action brought by Hendrik Jacobus van der Westhuysen, builder and contractor, of Moorreesburg, against George Philip Lochner, also of Moorreesburg, to recover £100 for work and labour done and materials supplied.

The declaration set out that on the 1st February, 1902, the plaintiff entered into a contract with the defendant to build for him a house at Moorreesburg for £100. The plaintiff carried out his part of the contract, and built the said house, and delivered the same to the defendant on the 30th June, 1902. The plaintiff claimed £100, being the contract price of the erection of the said building; or in the alternative, £100 for work and labour done and materials supplied. The defendant had paid £20 on account of the said building, leaving a balance owing of £80.

The defendant, in his plea, admitted that the plaintiff had been allowed to use and occupy gratuitously certain erven in Moorreesburg, the property of the defendant, during the defendant's pleasure, and said that the plaintiff had erected thereon for his own use and benefit a certain building. The plaintiff was given notice by the defendant that after the erection of the building, in the event of the said erven being sold, the plaintiff would not be entitled to or receive any compensation or payment for the said building. Thereafter the plaintiff proceeded with the erection of the said building, subject to the said condition. Defendant denied that he ever entered into the said contract, or that he had paid £20 on account of the said building. He admitted that he advanced the said sum of £20 to the plaintiff in September, 1902. The defendant sold the said erven to the Kerkraad of the Dutch Reformed Church at Moorreesburg, and the said use and occupation thereupon terminated. He claimed in reconvention for the sum of £20 for money lent.

Upon the foregoing pleadings, issue was joined.

Mr. Burton (with him Mr. C. W. De Villiers) for the plaintiff; Mr. Upington (with him Mr. Alexander) for the defendant.

The plaintiff, Hendrik Jacobus van der Westhuyse, a contractor and builder of Moorreesburg, said the defendant was his brother-in-law. He erected a building on certain property belonging to the defendant, who asked him to put up the building on 1st February, 1902. Witness agreed to erect a building for £100, and supply the materials. It was to be a two-roomed, plain building, for coloured people to dwell in. The site was a bare erf, where there was no camp or fence. He began building on the 26th April; he employed men and supplied material, completing the work on the 30th June. He produced an account showing his payments. He actually expended £95 on the structure. When the building was completed, it was let to two families of coloured people for 15s. a month. When the defendant gave him instructions to build, he said he intended to sell the place. Witness let the property on behalf of Mr. Lochner. On the 21st October, 1902, Mr. Lochner paid him £20 on account at his farm. Witness had asked him several times for the balance, but the defendant asked him to wait until the transfer to the Dutch Reformed Church was passed. The place was disposed of in August, 1902, the defendant telling him that he had sold it for £600. He saw defendant afterwards, but the latter told him he could not pay yet, as he had only received £15 on account.

Cross-examined by Mr. Upington: The house where he lived was built on an erf belonging to his wife. There was ground between the erf and the Dutch Reformed Church property. He had not been anxious to obtain this particular piece of ground. Mr. Lochner desired it. He did not know that the defendant was well off. He believed he was a "middle man." He had not received any rent from the tenants of the building. He told them to pay Mr. Lochner. He denied that he went to Mr. Lochner and asked him for the use of the three erven. He put up the building because the defendant asked him to do so. The defendant did not tell him that if he put up the building, it would be at his own risk and expense. He did not want the Kerkraad to exchange their property with the land in front of his wife's property. Mr. Lochner's erven were in front of the Dutch Reformed Church parsonage. It was not witness's desire that Mr. Lochner should effect an exchange, so that witness could get hold of the piece of land between his wife's property and the railway-station. He did not remember going to Mrs. Lochner to borrow £15 to pay wages. He might have sent a message to Mr. Lochner. He did not get a refusal from Mrs. Lochner. Mr. Lochner gave him £20 on account of the building. He had not had a loan from Mr. Lochner. Lochner told him that if they built a house on the land the Kerkraad would soon buy the land, or he would be able to effect an exchange for the land near the station. Lochner was anxious to obtain the land near the station.

Hendrik William Olivier said he was the chief mason employed on the building in question. He could not have put up the building at less than £100 if he had to supply all the materials and cart them to the spot.

Cross-examined by Mr. Upington. Plaintiff paid him 5s. and 6s. a day for his services. Another mason was employed there who received 4s. a day. Lochner told him that he should push on with the work. He was now employed by Mr. Albert Kotze, and was receiving 8s. 6d. a day.

Willem Laaker, brick contractor, Moorreesburg, said the house consisted of burnt bricks on the outside and raw bricks on the inside. He should not give an estimate of what the building was worth. His own house cost him £60, and he supplied his own bricks.

Cross-examined by Mr. Upington: The house, if well-built, should be worth £90 or £100. He did not know whether there were holes in the walls. He did not know whether the house was well built. His own house was built of raw bricks.

Floris Smit, farmer, said he went to the defendant's place last month to borrow £2 from him. He saw the defendant, who told him that he himself was in difficulties about money matters with Van der Westhuysen. Lochner told him that he owned money to Van der Westhuysen.

Albert Coetzee, building contractor, said he did not think the building, if well-built, could be put up for less than £100.

Cross-examined by Mr. Upington: He had not examined the building from the inside. He thought it would take about thirty days to erect the building if three masons and four labourers were employed upon it.

Mr. Burton read correspondence which had passed between the attorneys of the parties, in which the defendant, while denying all liability for the cost of the building proposed to settle the matter by paying the plaintiff £20, in addition to the £20 already lent to him. The plaintiff declined this offer.

Mr. Burton closed his case.

George Philip Lochner, the defendant, said he formerly owned three erven opposite the Dutch Reformed Church parsonage at Moorreesburg. Witness's sister owned land abutting upon ground belonging to the Dutch Reformed Church's property. Witness had a conversation with the plaintiff, who asked him to exchange the back erven for the erven in front of his wife's house. The ground of the Dutch Reformed Church was between the plaintiffs' wife's property and the station. The erven on which the plaintiff built had been occupied by the plaintiff. There was no truth in the statement that witness entered into a contract with the plaintiff for the erection of the house. He had not ordered the plaintiff to let the house to coloured people He had not received any rent for the building. He was approached by Mr. Krynauw, a member of the Kerkeraad, but nothing came of the negotiations. Mr. Basson came and saw him. In August Mr. Koch, of Malmesbury, came and saw him and at his request he sold the three erven to the Dutch Reformed Church for £600. He had tendered the sum of £40 in respect of the building He did this on account of the family relationship. The plaintiff was married to witness's sister, and witness's brother was married to plaintiff's sister. He only saw the house on the day that he sold it. For £40 a good building of that size could have been put up. After receiving a report upon an inspection by Mr. Kotze, he made the offer of £40 to the plaintiff.

Cross-examined by Mr. Burton: He bought the erven in 1895, and paid £27 for the three. The erven were situate opposite the D.R.C. parsonage. Witness had had no idea of forcing the hands of the Kerkeraad by erecting a house to be occupied by coloured people. He thought £600 was a fair value for the property. He believed the Kerkraad would have been prepared to pay £100 for the ground. The railway was not running to Moorreesburg when he bought the erven. He did not tell the mason Olivier to hurry up with the erection of the building. Smit did not come to his farm in order to borrow money.

Re-examined by Mr. Upington: Since the railway had been carried to Moorreesburg the value of the erven had considerably increased.

By the Court: He had three erven of his own opposite the D.R.C. parsonage Next to the property of the plaintiff's wife's there was another erf adjoining, which was ground of the D.R. Church, close to the station. The plaintiff wanted him to arrange an exchange with the D.R. Church of the erven near the parsonage for the land near the station, and witness was then to let plaintiff have a portion of the ground close to the station. The reason why the Kerkeraad bought the ground was not entirely because of the little building that was on it. Four years previously the minister himself wanted to buy it. No mention was made of forcing the hands of the Church by the erection of the little building on the erf close to the parsonage.

Louis Jacobus Kotze, builder and contractor, residing at Moorreesburg, said he knew both of the parties and the erven that formerly belonged to the defendant. He examined the building, and the foundation was not of the best of stone, and was of an average of twelve inches deep. It would take about fifteen cart-loads of stone to build the foundation, and the walls consisted of indifferently burnt bricks. The roof was flat and made of galvanised iron. The doors were of a common description. Witness considered plaintiff's account excessive. The whole place could not have cost more than £38 5s. Had he contracted for the place he would have made £10 out of an estimate of £40.

Cross-examined by Mr. Burton: At first he looked at the quality of the house in passing, but subsequently he entered the house without being asked. The building was bad enough even for a Hottentot. He would allow £10 profit.

Adrian Basson, general dealer, residing at Moorreesburg, said he had some knowledge of buildings, and calculated that the one in dispute would cost about £40.

Cross-examined by Mr. Burton: He considered the price put down far too high.

By Maasdorp, J.: It was only when the house was erected that the Church offered to buy the erven.

Christian Mostert, builder and contractor, of Moorreesburg, said that the walls of the house were partially washed out Johannes Jacobus Kotze, farmer, of Moorreesburg, said that he bought the building for £4, on condition that he would cart the stuff away. The walls were washed out, and only about 2,000 of the bricks could again be used.

Cross-examined by Mr. Burton: He only took the best bricks.

Helena Lochner, wife of the defendant, said she remembered a letter in which the plaintiff wanted to borrow £15.

This closed the evidence, and counsel having been heard in argument on the facts,

Maasdorp, J.: In this case, the plaintiff sues the defendant for the recovery of £100 as the contract price of a building erected by the plaintiff for the defendant, less the sum of £20 received on account, or, in the alternative, he claims £100 for work done and materials supplied upon this building, also less the sum of £20 received on account. The defendant states in his plea that the plaintiff, at the time he erected this building, was enjoying the use and occupation of certain erven belonging to the defendant, and he erected this building for his own use and benefit, and that it was erected upon the express condition that no compensation was to be paid in respect of it by the defendant to the plaintiff. The defendant also says in respect of the claim for work done and materials supplied that the work and the materials were not of the value claimed in the declaration, and, although he does not admit liability, he tenders the sum of £40 in respect of this building as the value of the work and the materials. Now, with reference to the defence set up by the defendant that the plaintiff was in use and occupation of this ground, and that while enjoying such benefits he erected the building for his own use, I may say at once that there is no evidence set up to support that allegation in the defendant's plea He himself has given no evidence that there was any agreement between him and the plaintiff that the plaintiff was for some reasonable time allowed the use and occupation of his ground. The ground seems to have consisted of three erven not fit for cultivation, and, consequently, without any building upon it, it could have been of no use to the plaintiff at all. In my opinion, therefore, the defendant has failed in the defence that the plaintiff put up this building for his own use and benefit on the ground of which he was then enjoying occupation. We have therefore to look for the motive on the part of the plaintiff for erecting this building, or, for the consideration he was to receive, in respect of it in some other direction. Now, as a matter of fact, the building was erected by the plaintiff on the defendants' ground, and, under the circumstances, when a man knowingly erects a building on the land of another, of which land he does not enjoy the use and occupation, one would draw the conclusion that the building was to be put up for the owner of the land. In this case the question arises whether there are circumstances to the contrary in the evidence which was given. It appeared that in the erection of this building there was a motive which moved either one or both of these parties, and whether in that motive we will find the consideration which induced the plaintiff to build for his own benefit we have now to inquire. It appears that these erven belonging to the defendant were situated opposite the Dutch parsonage at Moorreesburg, and that there certainly was a wish on the part of the defendant to dispose of these erven to the Dutch Church; but up to the time the building was erected, he had failed to do so. The plaintiff gives direct evidence that the defendant said to him that he wished to have a building put up upon the ground, which should be of such a character that it might be objectionable to the Church authorities, and they would be thereby induced to buy this ground. The plaintiff says it was suggested to him by the defendant that in that way they could bring pressure to bear upon the church. The defendant on his part says that he suspected such a motive to exist, but that it only existed in the mind of the plaintiff, and that he was displeased with that motive, and was certainly not a party to giving it effect. Now, upon the whole, we must gather from this evidence what both these parties contemplated as the object for which the house was being put up. I find no difficulty in coming to the conclusion that both of these parties had agreed to put pressure upon the Church, and, when we come to the conclusion that both were actuated by that desire, then it is not difficult to dispose of this case. There was an object, therefore, in the minds of plaintiff and defendant for the erection of this building; both of them were interested to some extent; and the question is, to what extent we think they were interested. The direct benefit of the disposal of this erf to the Church would have been for the defendant. There may have been some indirect benefit to the plaintiff, for I am inclined to think he had in view some indirect advantage. It is said if the ground was disposed of by the plaintiff, by way of exchange for some other erven, belonging to the Church, the plaintiff would gain some advantage promised him by the defendant. Consequently, both had something to gain; but the greater amount would be that of the defendant. With that object in view, I come to the conclusion upon the evidence that the defendant instructed the plaintiff to erect this building, but the circumstances under which he so instructed him, and the other evidence, leads me to the conclusion that it was to be built for a consideration, and the advantage expected by the defendant was sufficient to induce him to expend some money on the building. I feel convinced that the advantage to be gained by the plaintiff was not such that he would have expended such a sum on this building. The object of the parties was to erect a cheap and nasty building, and the instructions were given that a building was to be put up. That leads me to the conclusion that when the parties came to an agreement that a building should be erected, they did not agree that consideration should be given to the plaintiff in the sum of £100. It strikes me that that would be rather a large sum to be paid by the defendant for the benefit he was to gain, and that it would rather have taken the gilt off the gingerbread if he had paid so large a sum as £100 for a building that was to be destroyed afterwards for the purpose of inducing the Church to come to terms. The agreement to my mind amounted to a request on the part of the defendant that the plaintiff should erect a cheap building, and a promise to pay him for the work and material. The question, therefore, arises, what has he to pay the plaintiff, who, having failed in proving that the contract was entered into for the sum of £100, is now entitled to some consideration for work done and material supplied. He has put in a claim for the sum of £95, and the Court has now to decide whether he is entitled to receive it. Evidence has been given on the part of the defendant that the material and work could not have reached that high sum, because the material was of a very poor description, and the work ought not to have taken a very long time. Anyhow, this amount has been questioned, and in some respects successfully; for instance as to the value put by the plaintiff upon the timber supplied, and the stones and bricks supplied and plastering done. I come to the conclusion after listening to that evidence, that the sum charged by the plaintiff, is excessive, and, consequently, this amount must be reduced. The defendant contends that it should be reduced to £40, and upon that basis he makes his tender. We have the evidence of Mr. Kotze, who went into the items, that the work done and the materials supplied, would amount to about £38. Now, I do think, when he made that estimate he had forgotten to take into consideration remuneration to the plaintiff himself for his services, and he says if he put up a building of this description he would expect £10 profit. Consequently, upon that estimate the price should be fixed at something like £48. But I feel convinced that Mr. Kotze rather cheapened it on the one hand unduly in the same way as the plaintiff exaggerated it on the other, and something more should be allowed than £48. After considering all the circumstances, we have come to the conclusion that if we allow the plaintiff the sum of £60 he will be fairly compensated for the work done. Defendant has tendered £40 in respect of the building, less £20, money lent, consequently, the tender amounts only to £20. The plaintiff has admitted the receipt of £20, consequently, upon that estimate of the work, he is now entitled to the further sum of £40. The tender made by the defendant is, therefore, insufficient. The defendant has put in a claim in reconvention, which would not affect the figures in this case, because it would not matter now whether that sum was paid in respect of money due or whether it was money lent. It may have been important in this respect to consider whether he had paid it as money due upon the contract, because that would have proved that a contract had been made, but, as we have already decided, an agreement was entered into without fixing the price, it is unnecessary in that respect to decide on the claim in reconvention. We come to the conclusion upon the evidence that there was no money lent. This vague statement by the defendant that he made this advance of £20, is wholly insufficient, and the evidence of his wife is also of a very vague and uncertain character. We therefore find for the plaintiff for the sum of £60, with costs, and for the defendant in reconvention in the claim in reconvention.

[Plaintiff's Attorney: D. Tennant; Defendant's Attorneys: Walker and Jacobsohn.]

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.].

ADMISSIONS. { 1903. Nov. 5th.

Mr. Searle, K.C., moved for the admission of Peter Edward de Wet as an attorney and notary.

Application granted and oath administered.

Mr. Buchanan moved for the admission of Daniel Patrick Blanfury as a notary.

The matter was ordered to stand over.

PROVISIONAL ROLL.

HENDRICKS V. KEYSER.

Mr. Greer moved for provisional sentence on a promissory note for £165.

Order granted.

BRUEGER V. LOXTON.

Mr. Rowson moved for provisional sentence on a promissory note for £584 10s.

Order granted.

HANAU V. BUCHANAN.

Mr. M. Bisset applied for this matter to stand over.

De Villiers, C.J.: They had all better stand over en bloc. What is the ground in this case?

Mr. Bisset: I don't know the ground.

De Villiers, C.J.: The defendant might have something to say.

Mr. Bisset: The original application was for the discharge of the order. Negotiations are apparently going on between the parties with a view to a settlement.

The Chief Justice assented to the application.

At a later stage, Mr. Bisset moved for the provisional order for the sequestration of the defendant's estate to be superseded and discharged.

Application granted.

DENBIGH V. EDWARDS.

Mr. Sutton moved for provisional sentence for £16 18s. 2d., on a promissory note, with interest from the 4th February, 1903, and costs.

Order granted.

MALAN V. SMITH.

Mr. De Waal moved for provisional sentence on a promissory note.

Order granted.

STEYTLER V. KAHN.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £400, with interest at the rate of 6 per cent.

Mr. Williams, for the defendant, said that the person who held the defendant's general power of attorney had called on the plaintiff's attorney, and offered to pay the interest due and the costs of proceedings. In case provisional sentence were granted, Mr. Williams asked for execution to be stayed six months, until the defendant returned to this country from India.

De Villiers, C.J.: I must give judgment as prayed. The debtor should be here to protect himself, and to pay his debts. There is no sufficient ground shown for staying execution. Judgment will be granted, the property to be declared executable.

BROWN LAWRENCE AND CO. V. RAGOSIN.

Mr. Russell moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent.

Order granted.

BAM AND OLIFF V. BLOOM.

Mr. Alexander, for the defendant, moved for the provisional order for the adjudication of the defendant's estate to be superseded and discharged. Counsel said he was instructed that the defendant had settled the debt, and the costs had been paid. The defendant was away in the Transvaal.

Application granted.

SIVERTSEN V. HAYWARD.

Mr. Smith moved for provisional sentence for £143 6s. 8d., instalment of purchase price of land sold to the defendant, and for interest at the rate of 6 per cent. from the 9th February, 1903, and costs of suit.

Order granted.

HURITZ V. BRAUDE.

Mr. Gardiner moved for the confirmation of a writ of arrest and for provisional sentence for the sum of £40, due upon and by virtue of three promissory notes, each of which was for £25, and upon which £35 had been paid.

The defendant said he owed the money.

De Villiers, C.J., said that confirmation of arrest and judgment would be granted, but defendant was not to be kept in custody.

ILLIQUID ROLL.

HUXHAM V. BAKER. { 1903. Nov. 5th.

Mr. Van Zyl moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £46 10s., goods sold and delivered and costs of suit.

Order granted.

WILSON SON AND CO. V. LEW.

Mr. Buchanan moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £125 17s. 1d., balance of account for goods sold and delivered by the plaintiff to the defendant at his request during July, August, and September of this year, also for interest and costs of suit.

Order granted.

ZEEDERBERG AND DUNCAN V. BOSMAN.

Mr. Benjamin moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £81 12s. 10d., goods sold and delivered.

Order granted.

ESTATE DU PLESSIS V. GREEFF AND WALTER.

Mr. De Waal moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, on a claim that the defendant should give a true and full account of the administration of the estate of the late Mr. Du Plessis, and should produce all papers and so forth belonging to the estate. Counsel said that the plaintiff also had a claim for £100 damages, but this would be dropped.

Judgment in terms of the first part of the prayer, account to be rendered within one month.

AFRICAN AND UNITED COLONIES SUPPLY CO. V. FINLATOR.

Mr. Buchanan moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £325, being the final call of 10s. per share upon certain shares in the African and United Colonies Supply and Cold Storage Co., together with interest.

Order granted.

ESTATE WEIDNER V. BRAND. { 1903. Nov. 5th.

Practice — Action for account— Reference to an accountant as referee.

The plaintiff obtained judgment for an account against the defendant who paid the costs of the action. The defendant rendered an account verified by affidavit in which he also stated that he claimed the balance shewn in such account to be in his favour. The Court referred the account to an accountant as referee who found that there was a large balance in the defendant's favour.

Held, an application to confirm the finding of the referee that the defendant was entitled to judgment for the amount of such balance with costs of the reference without any fresh proceedings.

This matter had been before the Court on several occasions (see 13 C.T.R., 616 and 726). In the first instance, the plaintiff, Mr. Masterton, who was the assignee in the estate of Weidner, applied for judgment under Rule 329d. The matter was before the Court two or three times, for contempt of Court by defendant, in failing to hand over the papers and to give a full account. The defendant prepared an account, but he was afterwards directed to send in an amended account, which showed a balance due from the plaintiff to the defendant of £745 15s. 2d. The Court ordered that the accounts should be referred to an accountant, and Mr. Maynard Nash was appointed to go into the matter. He now made his report, in which he found that an amount was due by plaintiff to the defendant Brand, against whom judgment was originally given, and that the balance was on the side of the defendant, as he had claimed. In the first instance, judgment was allowed by the defendant to go by default, but on the matter being gone into, the defendant was found to be entitled to the money. Mr. Brand had paid all costs of previous proceedings. Mr. Close moved for judgment, in terms of the referee's report, for £745 15s. 2d.

[De Villiers, C.J.: This is the most extraordinary case I have seen.]

Mr. Benjamin, for the respondent Masterton, said he did not know what the position of his learned friend was now. No claim had been made in reconvention.

[De Villiers, C.J.: No, but then your client asked for an account, and he has got his account. The account shows that he owes the money to the other side.]

Mr. Benjamin said that the plaintiff had been compelled to bring these proceedings, in order to ascertain the real position of the estate, and that it was defendant's duty, in the first instance, to have furnished the required information.

De Villiers, C.J.: There is no doubt, up to a certain point, the defendant (Brand) was in default. He ought to have rendered the account at the proper time, and for his delay he has already paid the costs of the previous proceedings. Ultimately an account was rendered, and that account was referred by the Court, apparently with the consent of both parties, to Mr. Nash. Mr. Nash, after going fully into the account, has come to the conclusion that, so far from the defendant owing anything to the plaintiff, the plaintiff was indebted in a large sum to the defendant. The defendant gave notice that he claims this amount in respect of which the balance has been found in his favour. I think that the plaintiff had sufficient notice in the previous case that an application would be made for judgment. The ordinary practice, no doubt, is that a summons is issued for judgment, but that is not a hard-and-fast rule where, as in a case like the present, the Court has referred the question of an account to an accountant, and the accountant has found a balance in favour of the defendant, and the plaintiff had fair notice that an application would be made to the Court for confirmation of the finding of the referee. I think it would be really reducing technical rules to an absurdity to hold that, under the circumstances, the defendant is not entitled to judgment. The plaintiff must have known that the object of the present application is to obtain judgment for that amount. In my opinion, therefore, there should be judgment in favour of the defendant for £745 15s. 2d., with costs, including the costs of the reference.

[Applicants' Attorneys: Godlonton and Low; Respondent's Attorney: G. Trollip.]

REHABILITATION.

Mr. Benjamin moved for the rehabilitation of Wm. Patrick Rattray, who, he said, had formerly applied, and was then told to apply again in three months.

Application granted.

Ex parte WINTERBACH. { 1903. Nov. 5th

Derelict Lands Act—Opposition to rule.

A Municipality, within the jurisdiction of which derelict erven are situated, has a locus standi to bring to the notice of the Court any valid objection to a rule issued under the 7th section of Act 28 of 1881, for the registration of title to such erven being made absolute.

This was an application for a rule nisi, under the Derelict Lands Act, to be made absolute. The rule called upon all concerned to show cause why the petitioner should not be registered as the owner of certain five lots of land at Rietvlei and Scholefontein in the division of Tulbagh.

The affidavit of the town attorney to the Ceres Municipality stated that certain lots in question had been the subject of search by the Municipality, in order that the rates could be collected, but they had been unable to trace the owner, and the land had fallen to the Municipality as unclaimed.

Mr. Gardiner (for the applicant) submitted that the Municipality of Ceres had no locus standi to appear before the Court to show cause. Section 10 of the Derelict Lands Act gave Municipalities power to apply to Court and get the lands sold for rates in arrear. But here the petitioner had tendered to pay the rates, and was prepared to do so. Counsel thought the best course would be to ask the Registrar of Deeds to make a report on the matter.

Mr. M. Bisset (for the Ceres Municipality) submitted that the Municipality had ample locus standi in this matter, because, apart from their duty as custodians of the public interests, and the expense they had gone to in tracing the land, they had under the Act 45 (secs. 134 and 143) of 1882, power to lease derelict lands, and if no person came forward and paid the arrear rates after a certain period the land became the property of the Municipality. Counsel proceeded to urge that certain of the lots claimed had been dealt with, and submitted that so far from the applicant having established a prima facie case in support of his claim to these lots, it was perfectly clear, that, with regard to two lots, at all events, he had not a shadow of right, and that, with regard to the other three lots, they were actually deducted before the remaining extent was laid down.

De Villiers, C.J.: It would appear that these lots have for many years been practically derelict. The Municipality had notice of this application, I presume, seeing it advertised. They now oppose the application to have the rule made absolute. In my opinion, the Municipality has a sufficient interest in the matter to raise these objections. The derelict erven are within the jurisdiction of the Municipality, and although the Municipality may not claim title to the erven, it should not be debarred from bringing to the notice of the Court any valid objection to the rule being made absolute. Now, in the present case the applicant should prove that he has a prima facie right. In my opinion he has not made out such a prima facie right. The whole of the proceedings seem to me wholly unintelligible. If the applicant's statements are correct, I should have expected declarations of purchaser and seller, to have been annexed bearing out the statements he makes, but no such declarations are produced, and the one which is here is wholly inconsistent with the statements made by the applicant. The only declaration put in is a declaration made by Mr. Stamper. In that he alleges he bought the property from Brink for £1,700, and he declares that he bought the property jointly with the applicant from Brink on the 16th September, 1879. But he declares that the sale, as far as Winterback is concerned was cancelled. And yet this is the document applicant relies upon to establish his title to this property. Possibly there may be other declarations to show the sale was only partially cancelled as far as concerns applicant, and that he has a right; but I am not satisfied from the evidence that the lots in question were included in the property, which he says he purchased. It lay upon the applicant to establish this fact, and upon the evidence the whole thing is in the greatest obscurity. The rule will be discharged with costs.

[Applicant's Attorneys: Herold and Gie; Respondent's Attorneys: Tredgold, McIntyre and Bisset.]

Ex parte STEWART.

Mr. Benjamin moved for leave to the executors to mortgage certain property for the purpose of improving buildings thereon. Applicant had the life usufruct of the property, bequeathed to her by her mother, the property being willed to the children of applicant. It was provided in the will that applicant should not sell or mortgage the property.

[De Villiers, C.J.: You ask the Court to set aside an express provision of the will.]

The restriction was in favour of the children, and it is on their behalf the application is made. The provision in the will is that the applicant shall not alienate or mortgage her interest. The major children consent, and the Master, for the minors, reports very favourably. Counsel read affidavits by the executors to the effect that the improvements would be for the benefit of the heirs.

The application was granted in terms of the Master's report.

BARTRAM AND SON V. ATKINS AND LOVET, CHRISTMAS AND CO.

BARTRAM AND SON V. CAMPBELL, SHEARMAN AND CO.

Agency—Attachment of registration of trade mark rights ad fundandam jurisdictionem.

Mr. Searle, K.C., moved for an order on the first respondents (Atkins and Lovet, Christmas and Co.), compelling them to keep a statement of account of the sale of certain goods; and against the other respondents for leave to attach ad fundandam jurisdictionem, and to sue by edictal citation.

Mr. Benjamin appeared to oppose on behalf of Lovet, Christmas and Co.; the other respondents were not represented.

It was alleged that the respondents were wrongfully using a certain trade mark, "Golden Churn," the rights in regard to which the applicants alleged had been assigned to them in terms of certain agreements. The trade mark was registered by Henry Atkins in the name of Campbell, Shearman and Co., in the Colony, in 1895. The application was for authority to attach the rights of Campbell, Shearman and Co., under the registration of the trade mark ad fundandam jurisdictionem, and for an order on Atkins to keep an account of all sales of goods bearing the trade mark, pending proceedings being taken to compel Campbell, Shearman and Co. to assign the rights under the registration to the applicants.

Mr. Benjamin put in the affidavits of the respondent. Henry Atkins stated that he had had an agreement with the applicants conferring upon him the sole agency of the Golden Churn butter in South Africa, but this agency was subsequently cancelled in March, 1902, on the ground that the profits on the goods shipped to the South African market were too small. Subsequently, Campbell, Shearman and Co. entered into an agreement with another firm. At a still later date deponent received a further offer of the sole agency for five years.

Mr. Searle, having read an answering affidavit, submitted that the applicant had made out a prima facie case of their right to sue Campbell, Shearman and Co., and to an order against Atkins to keep an account.

De Villiers, C.J.: It is unnecessary to hear Mr. Searle further. At this stage I do not wish to say anything that will prejudge the case between the parties, but I consider that the applicants ought to have an opportunity of bringing their action against Shearman. It would be impossible to bring that action unless somewhere or another jurisdiction is founded because Shearman and Co. reside outside the jurisdiction of the Court, and, without the attachment of some property by the Sheriff, plaintiffs could not bring their action, and it is only in order to enable plaintiffs to bring that action that I consider it my duty to grant this order for attachment as prayed. If I refuse the order plaintiffs will be wholly without remedy, whereas by granting the order, though the respondents may be put, possibly, to temporary inconvenience, it will not last beyond the February term. Then in regard to the application for an account, I consider it will be impossible to prejudice the respondent to have to keep an account of what he sells. He would have to keep an account for himself, and it is not much to ask him to keep an account for the applicants. The Court will grant both applications as prayed, citation to be served upon Shearman personally, and to be returnable on the 1st February next, the question of costs of both applications to stand over.

Ex parte ATTRIDGE.

Mr. Searle, K.C., moved for an order authorising the Registrar of Deeds to amend a title deed of certain property, held by the petitioner (who resides in England), at Green Point, on the ground that the remaining extent of his land, which was in occupation, was incorrectly described. Counsel read several affidavits in support of the application. The Registrar declined to amend the deed without an order of Court.

Order granted as prayed.

TRIAL CAUSE.

BRYANT V. HENDERSON.

Principal and agent.

This was an action brought by Percy Barnes Bryant, of Cape Town, against Thomas Robert Henderson, also of Cape Town, to recover £36, for which the plaintiff had rendered himself liable to a third party as agent of the defendant.

The plaintiff's declaration was as follows:

1. The plaintiff resides at Cape Town. The defendant resides at Komgha, in this colony.

2. On or about January 27, 1902, defendant employed the plaintiff as his agent to purchase a certain gold ring from one Seale for the sum of £36 sterling, and requested plaintiff to become personally liable for the said sum to the said Seale, and agreed in consideration of the premises to pay to the plaintiff the said sum within a reasonable time thereafter.

3. The plaintiff, acting as such agent, duly purchased and the defendant received and accepted the said ring, and the plaintiff became personally liable to the said Seale for the said sum, payment whereof had been demanded from the plaintiff by the said Seale, but the defendant did not pay the said sum to the plaintiff within a reasonable time as aforesaid or at all.

4. All times have elapsed, all things have been done, and all conditions have been fulfilled necessary to entitle the plaintiff to claim payment of the said sum of £36 sterling from the defendant, but the defendant, after lawful demand duly made, refuses to pay the said sum, or any portion thereof.

Wherefore the plaintiff claims:

(a) Judgment for the said sum of £36 sterling, together with interest a tempore morae.

(b) Alternative relief.

(c) Costs of suit.

To this declaration the defendant pleaded as follows:

1. Defendant admits the allegations in paragraph 1 of the declaration, and says that at the time of the transaction hereinafter referred to, the parties were commissioned officers in the Cape Colony Cyclist Corps, then stationed at Middelburg, in this Colony.

2. Defendant admits that in or about the month of January, 1902, the plaintiff, at his request, obtained certain gold rings on approval from one Seale, a jeweller, of Cape Town, by pledging his (plaintiff's) credit; that defendant thereupon chose, purchased, and received a certain ring for the sum of £42, less 10 per cent. discount, or £37 16s. nett, which sum he undertook to pay to plaintiff, who was personally liable therefor to the said Seale.

3. He says that thereafter in the said month and at Middelburg, he duly paid the said sum to plaintiff. He admits that he has subsequently been called upon by plaintiff to pay for the said ring, and that he refused.

4. Subject to the above, he denies the allegations in paragraphs 2, 3, and 4 of the declaration.

Wherefore he prays that plaintiff's claim may be dismissed, with costs.

The plaintiff's replication was general.

Mr. Upington for the plaintiff. Mr. Buchanan for the defendant.

Mr. Upington said the defendant pleaded payment.

[De Villiers, C.J.: It will be for the defendant to prove his statement.]

Mr. Buchanan said that he accepted the onus of proof and called evidence.

Thomas Robert Henderson, a civil engineer (the defendant), said he had been in the employ of the C.G.R. as district engineer at Touw's River. He knew the plaintiff. Witness held a captain's commission in the Cape Colony Cycling Corps during the late war. Plaintiff was paymaster in the corps. He remembered being at Middelburg in January, 1902, and entering into an arrangement about the ring. Witness was engaged to be married at that time, and he wanted a ring. Witness had been on trek for some months. He met Captain Bryant and other officers at Middelburg, where the headquarters of the Cape Colony Cycling Corps were fixed. He told the plaintiff and the other officers that he could not get a ring, and Bryant thereupon told him that he knew Seale down in Cape Town, and that he would get a ring for witness. Three rings were sent up from Cape Town in the early part of January to the plaintiff, who handed them over to witness. Witness took the rings to his fiancee, who was living at Aberdeen, and, after she had selected one of the rings, witness took the other two back to Middelburg, and handed them over to the plaintiff. He received some cash from the corps, and was paid with an Imperial cheque for £86 12s. 6d. He sent an orderly to the Standard Bank to cash the cheque, and the messenger brought him the money. The cheque was handed to witness by Captain Bryant on the 28th January. He afterwards went into Captain Bryant's office, and paid him £42, less 10 per cent. Witness also paid Captain Bryant 12s. 6d., which he had paid on witness's account for washing in Cape Town.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Did you get a receipt?]

Witness: No, I did not. Continuing, witness said that on the 29th January he left Middelburg, and came down to Cape Town on ten days' leave. On returning to Middelburg, he saw the plaintiff the day after his office had been burned down. The headquarters of the corps were removed to Cape Town on the following day. A Board of Inquiry sat with regard to the fire. Witness came down with Bryant and the other officers, and the plaintiff made no mention on the way down about the purchase money of the ring. Captain Bryant, he understood, was suspended from the corps after that. The corps had to wait some time before they could be disbanded, in consequence of the destruction of the papers in the fire at Middelburg. Witness was afterwards about town for a while, and was within access, but the plaintiff made no application to him for payment for the ring. Subsequently he went into Seale's shop, and he was then asked to whom the ring was to be charged. He told him that he had already paid Captain Bryant for the ring. Later, witness saw the plaintiff at the Grand Hotel, and asked him about the payment to Seale for the ring. Witness was accompanied by a man named Bradley. Bryant shrugged his shoulders, and said he had forgotten, and he supposed it was all right.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Where is Bradley?]

Witness: Bradley absconded. He is doing five years on time, I understand. He was assistant paymaster to the corps. His attorney, Mr. Trollip, wrote to the plaintiff stating that he had proof that the money had been paid to him by witness. The proof consisted of a letter sent by Bradley, in which he said that he saw the defendant pay the money to the plaintiff at Middelburg.

Cross-examined by Mr. Upington: Witness did not ask Bryant for a receipt after the interview with Seale.

You were suspicious?—I was.

Then why didn't you get a receipt?—No answer.

In further cross-examination, witness said he never received a letter on November 14 from Bryant, asking for payment for the ring. He did not receive a letter again asking for payment in December. Witness received the registered letter, dated the 26th January, and handed it over to his attorneys for reply. When witness made the payment, Captain Bryant, Lieutenant Bradley, and the office orderly were present. Witness believed there was another person present. The ring cost £42, less 10 per cent. Witness asked Bradley to write a letter to Bryant for fear something would happen. Bradley handed him a letter, addressed to Bryant, in March, at the Grand Hotel. Witness gave this letter to his attorneys; he did not forward it to Bryant. Bradley left about October. Captain Bryant told witness that Major Owen-Lewis had written him (Bryant) a letter suspending him. This was in March. After seeing Mr. Seale, witness saw Bryant, and "had it out with him." Witness told him that Seale had said the money had not been paid, and that Bryant had told him (Seale) to charge the amount to witness. Bradley was present, and said he saw witness pay Bryant the money. Bryant said he supposed he had forgotten it, and that it was all right.

Why didn't you get a receipt from him there and then?—It never dawned on me.

Cross-examination continued: Bryant never asked witness for the money when in Cape Town.

Mr. Buchanan closed his case.

Mr. Upington called

Percy Barnes Bryant, the plaintiff. At the time of the ring incident, witness was adjutant and paymaster. Witness undertook to get the rings, and made himself personally liable to Seale. He never told Seale to debit Henderson. Defendant never paid witness for the ring. After February, 1902, when the headquarters were removed to Cape Town, witness asked Henderson casually whether he did not think it time that he paid witness for the ring. Henderson did not answer. Witness spoke to him on another occasion, but did not press for payment, knowing that Henderson had pay to draw. In November he wrote and posted a letter, which had not been returned through the Dead Letter Office. He wrote again in December, 1902, and January, 1903, the latter letter being registered. Witness was South African manager for G. and J. McLachlan, Glasgow.

Cross-examined: Witness did not remember Henderson paying him for washing. He had no recollection at all of any washing transaction. There was trouble about the fire. Witness was not suspended. He asked to be suspended. He was not worried at the time. He was ill for about a month with an affection of the head. In January witness was quite well. Witness was taken ill on the way down, on about the 17th February. The fire occurred a few days previously. Witness had not paid Seale, but acknowledged his liability. He had no recollection of the conversation in the Grand Hotel.

Henry Francis Seale, jeweller, deposed to having received a letter from Byrant relative to a ring. The letter asked witness to send up some engagement rings on approval for a friend; witness believed Henderson was the name. The letter had been destroyed by fire. Witness did not tell Henderson that Bryant had instructed him to charge Henderson for the ring. Witness remembered Henderson saying he had paid Bryant. Witness told Bryant of this, and Bryant replied, "No, he has not." This was a few months after the purchase of the ring—early last year.

Mr. Bryant (recalled) stated, in answer to the Court, that Seale mentioned to him at the beginning of this year that Henderson had told him he had paid witness for the ring. Mr. Seale must be mistaken in saying it was last year. If Seale had told him so this year, witness would have immediately written to Henderson. Seale told him this in about February or March of this year; witness remembered the occasion, because it was when he went into Mr. Seale's shop for a cup for competition at the sports.

[De Villiers, C.J. (to Mr. Seale): When did the fire occur at your premises?]

On the 27th June, 1902.

Was this before or after the fire?—Oh, before the fire, I think.

Mr. Upington closed his case, and counsel were then heard in argument on the facts.

De Villiers, C.J., intimated that he would like to have produced to-morrow (Friday) the carbon copies of the letters which plaintiff stated he had sent to defendant demanding payment for the ring.

Postea (Nov. 6th).

Mr. Upington informed the Court that a search had been made for the original carbon copies of the letters sent by the plaintiff to the defendant demanding payment of the debt, but the copies could not be traced.

[De Villiers, C. J.: That is very unsatisfactory.]

Mr. Upington said that he had a clerk in court who would be able to give evidence.

Algernon Basil Clarke, formerly a clerk in the plaintiff's employ, said that he made carbon copies of letters sent by the plaintiff to the defendant with respect to the debt. There were two letters written on November 14 and December 26, 1902. He made copies also from the carbon duplicates. He did not know what became of the original carbon copies; he believed Mr. Bryant took them away, and left them with his solicitor.

De Villiers, C.J.: This is an extremely painful case, for it affects the credit of two young gentlemen, who have been officers in His Majesty's Army, and to all appearance seem to be moving in respectable society. The case arose out of the purchase of a ring by the plaintiff on behalf of the defendant. It appears that both of them were officers in the Cyclist Corps, and were stationed at Middelburg in January, 1902. The defendant got engaged to a young lady, and, being anxious to purchase a ring for her, he mentioned the matter to the plaintiff, who offered to obtain a ring for him from Seale, in Cape Town. He accordingly wrote to Seale, holding himself responsible for the price of any ring that might be purchased. Seale sent out three rings to the plaintiff, who handed them over to the defendant. The defendant took them to his fiancee, who selected one of them, and, according to the defendant's version, he gave back the two rings—that is not denied—but, as to the ring which he purchased he swears positively that he paid the amount, which was £40, less 10 per cent. discount. He says that he had just received the sum of £86 from the plaintiff as paymaster of the corps, and that he paid the purchase price of the ring out of the proceeds of the cheque. He says, moreover, that a fellow officer (Bradley) was present when this payment was made. The plaintiff, on the other hand, positively denies that any such payment was ever made, and the painful duty rest upon the Court now to decide which is to be believed. The onus of proving payment certainly lies upon the defendant, and, accordingly, the defendant was asked to give his evidence before the plaintiff was heard. The defendant, in his evidence, stated, as I have already said, that Bradley was present. He does not, however, produce Bradley as his witness, and his reason is that Bradley subsequently went to England, and has there been convicted of fraud or forgery and sentenced to a long period of imprisonment. But he stated that he had a document of Bradley's in his possession, a letter written by Bradley, not to him (defendant), but to plaintiff, to the effect that the ring had been paid for. It would appear that this letter was obtained by the defendant from Bradley after the defendant had come to Cape Town. He went to Seale's, and being informed by Seale that the plaintiff had not yet paid him for the ring, he says he wanted some evidence to prove that he had paid for the ring, and accordingly he requested Bradley to write this letter. He says also that he subsequently met the plaintiff at the Grand Hotel, and there he spoke to the plaintiff about the payment for this ring, and informed him that the ring had not been paid for, and the plaintiff said, "Oh, it will be all right; I will settle up," or words to that effect. But the surprising thing, to my mind, is that the defendant did not at any time inform the plaintiff of this document which he had in his possession from Bradley. I am not sure whether Bradley was still in the Colony then or not—that is not perfectly clear—but if Bradley was still in the Colony, I should have thought that the first thing the defendant would have done would have been to take his friend—they were all fellow-officers—to take his friend Bradley to the plaintiff, and convince him, in the presence of Bradley, that the money had been paid; but he does nothing of the kind, nor does he produce to the plaintiff the letter which he says Bradley had written to him (the defendant). Now the object of Bradley writing the letter must have been to convince the plaintiff of this money having been paid, and yet the defendant does not show the letter to the plaintiff himself. That is a circumstance in the case which has not been explained, and which certainly needs explanation. The next circumstance is this, that on the 26th January of the present year, the plaintiff wrote to the defendant the following letter: "My Dear Henderson,—I am very much surprised that you have not yet replied to my repeated letters with reference to the ring I purchased for you, but for which I have not received payment. It is now over fourteen months since I did you the favour of getting the ring for you. Therefore, unless I receive payment for the same within fourteen days from date, I will take action in the Supreme Court without further delay." In this letter there is a statement that he (plaintiff) had repeatedly written to the defendant, and had received no answer. Well, what is the reply to that? Not a friendly letter from one officer to another, saying, "I have never received your letters"; nothing of that kind is said. Some question was raised whether previous letters had been sent, and the plaintiff said that he had taken carbon copies, which he had kept, and an opportunity was given to the plaintiff to produce those carbon copies, and he does not do so, and this circumstance is against the plaintiff; but it is not conclusive at all, because those letters, if what this clerk says is correct, were written. Now, in this letter of the 16th January, the plaintiff said he had written a number of letters, and the defendant in his answer does not deny it, though he now denies it in the box. He says this was the first intimation he had had from the plaintiff that he had not been paid. If it was the first letter—the two were friends, they had been fellow-officers—I should have thought what he would have done would have been to write saying, "I have never received your letters; you are entirely mistaken. I have paid the money, and meanwhile you should not proceed." But what is the answer? The answer to that is a letter from his attorney, on the 6th February, 1903, saying that he is instructed by Mr. Henderson to reply to his (the plaintiff's) letter, and that he repudiated the statement that he had not paid him for the ring. "My client," he added, "has witnesses to the payment, and does not intend paying the amount twice. Any action taken against him will be resisted. I have proof of payment in my possession, which you can see by calling at the office." As I said before, there is not a word about not having received the letters. But where is the proof? Bradley is not here, and the defendant must have known that he was not here. It does look very much as if there was an intent to make the plaintiff believe that defendant had witnesses which he had not at the time, and which he must have known that he had not. Bradley was not in this colony at the time. I asked him what he meant by that. What he said he meant was that he had that letter in his possession from Bradley to the plaintiff saying that the money had been paid, and yet in his letter he says, "I have proof of payment in my possession, which you can see by calling at my office." It seems to me that that was a kind of what is vulgarly known as "bluff" on the part of the defendant. That is the impression on my mind, I am sorry to say. Well, then, there is this further circumstance, which I cannot lose sight of, that the defendant says that when he went to Seale, Seale told him that the plaintiff had told Seale that he (Henderson) was responsible for the ring. Now Seale was called, and he denied that absolutely, so that Seale's evidence on this point was against the defendant. Unfortunately, however, on another point, Seale's evidence does not support the plaintiff's version, and that is the circumstance that I have carefully to consider in coming to a decision, because, according to the plaintiff, he was not aware that the defendant repudiated his liability until this year. He says he did not know early last year that the defendant ever alleged that he had already paid the money, whereas Mr. Seale says it was early last year when the plaintiff went to his shop, that he informed Seale that the defendant had told him that he (the defendant) had paid for it. That is a circumstance certainly against the plaintiff. But still, taking all the circumstances into consideration, I am of opinion, as I am forced to come to a decision, that on the whole the balance is in favour of the plaintiff, and, therefore, the judgment of the Court will be for the plaintiff, with costs.

[Plaintiff's Attorney: J. F. Bernard; Defendant's Attorney: G. Trollip.]

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP and the Hon. Mr. Justice KOTZE.]

FRIER V. DIVINE, GATES AND CO. { 1903. Nov. 5th. „ 6th.

Shipping agent — Negligence — Measure of damages.

Defendants, a firm of shipping agents, having received and accepted instructions to forward certain goods with all possible speed by passenger train to plaintiff at V., neglected for more than a month to do so.

Held (1) That defendants had been guilty of negligence and that plaintiff was entitled to damages.

(2) That the measure of such damages should be the difference in value at V. of the goods between what it would have been had they been timeously forwarded and their value when they actually arrived.

(3) That as there was no evidence on this point only nominal damages could be awarded.

This was an action brought by James Frier, of Victoria West, against Divine, Gates and Co., to recover the sum of £150 damages by reason of the defendants' delay in forwarding certain imported goods.

The declaration set out that in September, 1903, certain goods, the property of the plaintiff, arrived in Cape Town by the Carisbrook Castle. The shipping documents were forwarded to the Standard Bank, Cape Town, on September 30. The plaintiff paid in his cheque, and the bank delivered the said documents to the defendant, who was to forward the said goods to the plaintiff. The defendant was acting as shipping agent, and it was his duty to forward the goods immediately. On November 22 the plaintiff refused to accept the goods, and claimed £150 as damages sustained.

The plea admitted the first paragraph, but the defendant says that he knew nothing of the goods having been despatched from England and of the documents having been deposited with the bank. The defendant denied that on presentation of the draft to the bank the plaintiff paid the same. The Standard Bank at Cape Town handed to the defendant a bill of lading to clear and bond certain goods pending further instructions of the said bank The defendant denied that he was acting as shipping agent, and stated that the congestion on the line was the cause of the delay.

Mr. Close (with him Mr. Sutton) for plaintiff; Mr. Benjamin for defendants.

James Frier, plaintiff, said that in September last year he wished to set up business in Victoria West, and, with a view to that, he ordered certain goods from Bowman and Co., of England. He wanted the watch glasses and tools for the purpose of a jewellery business at Victoria West. In September last he received notice from the bank that the goods were in Cape Town. A cheque was lodged for the amount of the draft. On the same day, September 13, he wrote the defendants to forward the goods, and stated that he had paid the draft at the Standard Bank. In Beaufort West he had dealings with the defendants. Subsequently he received a letter from the defendants that the bank had no trace of the transaction. On October 5 he again wrote, pressing for delivery, and again stating that he had settled with the Standard Bank. On the 20th November the defendants wrote, saying that they had much pleasure in forwarding goods by passenger train. Witness immediately replied to the effect that he had pointed out to the importers that the goods had not arrived, and cancelling the order. On November 26 the goods arrived, and witness despatched them back at once. On December 27 the Railway Department again forwarded the goods, and witness sent them back again. When the goods arrived again he wrote the defendant that he would not accept them. In February the defendants wrote, saying that the goods were being stored for plaintiff. When the goods did not arrive he looked like a "fool."

Cross-examined by Mr. Benjamin: He did not know that Legg and Co. were acting as agents for Messrs. Divine, Gates and Co. He knew nothing of what happened in December last.

Gilbert Richard Maltravers, of the Standard Bank, produced the correspondence between the Bank and Divine, Gates and Co. On October 8 the defendants were again written to that they were to hold over the goods for the consignee's disposal. After Frier had paid his cheque there would have been no difficulty in releasing the goods if the Bank had the plaintiff's instructions.

Cross-examined by Mr. Benjamin: The bank received the bill of lading from their London office. The goods were not released until October 8. It was possible the defendants had inquired about the goods at the Bank, but he did not notice that the invoice was made out to "J. Frier, Cape Town."

By Kotzé, J.: It was not until October 8 that Cape Town received notice from Victoria West that the goods were to be released.

By Maasdorp, J.: He was positive he acted on instructions from Victoria West, and not from Divine, Gates and Co.

Horton Jenry, managing clerk to the defendant firm, said that on the 6th September he remembered receiving an order from the Standard Bank, and at the same time the shipping documnts to clear the goods. The invoice was made out to "J. Frier, Cape Town." There were no goods in their custody at the time the plaintiff first wrote. Enquiries were made at the time, and as a result he noted "No trace." A letter was written to the plaintiff to that effect on September 30. No notice was taken of the second letter. At that time there was a great congestion on the railway. He had complained repeatedly to the railway officials of the difficulty in procuring trucks. The case was still at the stores. The offer of £25 was conjointly with the bank, without admitting any liability whatever. He would not forward goods by passenger train except he received special instructions.

Cross-examined by Mr. Close: The case arrived on January 6, and he wrote to the plaintiff a month later.

Re-examined by Mr. Benjamin: His instructions were not to release the goods until October 8. In the ordinary course he would send an order to the storeman, who would complain if he could not get facilities from the Railway Department. Very often they were supplied with three wagons after asking for twenty. He did not make a sudden rush to clear the goods.

By Kotzé, J.: When he got the letter from Frier, and the bank told him they had no documents, he looked on the matter as closed. Frier originally issued summons against the bank, and as they did not want to go to court they offered a compromise, but he could not say why Frier did not insist on his action against the bank.

James Lebraunt, storeman to the defendants, said that in the ordinary course of things he would see goods went forward to the railway. He did not remember the case in question. There was a great rush at the time at the railway, and goods were only received for certain stations on certain days.

Cross-examined by Mr. Close: He had no record to show how often cases were sent to the railway, but it was a common practice to send small consignments by passenger train.

Walter Powis, in the employ of the defendant firm, said he remembered seeing Mr. Maltravers in November. Mr. Maltravers instructed him to send the goods by passenger train, and on the 19th they were forwarded to Victoria West. The storekeeper had complained to him that he could not get wagons.

Gilbert Maltravers, recalled, stated that he told the defendants on October 8. to send the goods forward as speedily as possible, but he could not say whether he specified goods or passenger train.

Mr. Close said that the agency had been clearly established by the letters of instruction sent on various dates in September and on October 1 to clear the goods and forward them by passenger train. The letter of October 1 must have reached the defendants by October 3 or 4, and been fresh in their mind when the bank informed them of the release on October 8.

[Maasdorp, J.: Then do you only claim that the delay began on October 8, or do you say it was on September 13?]

Mr. Close said that in view of the distinct order of the bank to hold the goods till further order, he must leave the delay before October 8 in the hands of the Court.

[Maasdorp, J.: When the agency began on October 8, all instructions had been given before that. Was he not bound to wait for further instructions?]

The instructions had been received from plaintiff, and became operative as soon as the bank gave informations of the release.

Mr. Benjamin argued that the defendants were bound to await instructions after the bank had released the goods. They had no relation with the plaintiff up till that time. When notice was received, the goods were dispatched with all attainable speed.

Maasdorp, J.: In this case the plaintiff alleges in his declaration that the defendant undertook as his agent to despatch certain goods from Cape Town to Victoria West on or about 13th September, 1902, but that through negligence the defendant failed to despatch these goods until about November 19. The plaintiff says, in consequence of this delay, he has suffered damages, which he seeks to recover in this case. It seems that the goods in question were consigned by Messrs. Bowman and Company from England to the plaintiff, who resides at Victoria West, and they were consigned upon a bill of lading accompanied by other necessary documents, which were sent to the Standard Bank, and the bill of lading was made out to order. This bill of lading and other documents were to be held by the Standard Bank until the consignee honoured or paid a draft drawn upon him by the consignor for the price of these goods. Upon the arrival of the goods the Standard Bank instructed the defendant to place the goods in bond, to be delivered up only upon the written order of the bank. The defendant, acting upon behalf of the bank, placed the goods in bond. On the 13th September, when the draft was paid by the plaintiff he became entitled to receive all the necessary documents, which he required in order to obtain possession of the goods. He wrote to the defendant, instructing him to obtain the necessary documents, and obtain delivery of the goods and despatch the goods for him to Victoria West. That letter was dated the 13th September on the same day upon which the draft was paid. Upon receipt of this letter by the defendant someone on his behalf proceeded to the bank in order to obtain the necessary documents, and I think it is quite clearly proved that at that time the bank informed the defendant that the goods could not be traced and they were not in a position to hand them over to the defendant for despatch to the plaintiff. The defendant on the 30th September informed the plaintiff of this, and the matter remained in that position until the 8th October. On the 8th October the bank for the first time gave the necessary written instructions to enable the plaintiff to obtain his goods. These written instructions were sent to the defendant, who was authorised to hold the goods at the disposal of Mr. Frier. Up to that time it was clearly impossible for the defendant to deal with the goods on behalf of the plaintiff as the plaintiff's agent. The bank had failed upon the request of the plaintiff's agent to put the defendant in possession of the documents which he required in order to do his duty in despatching the goods. Consequently, whatever the position of the defendant was as agent up to the 8th October, it was certainly not owing to his delay that the goods were not sent forward, as the bank was unable to comply with his request to deliver up to him the necessary documents. On the 8th October the goods were placed at the disposal of the defendant, on account of Mr. Frier, and it then became the duty of the defendant to forward the goods, if he was acting as the agent of the plaintiff; but I think he is precluded from raising that question upon the pleadings, where it is admitted that on the 8th October the defendant became the shipping agent of the plaintiff. I think, however, there is sufficient before the Court to show that the instructions given to the defendant to send forward the goods by the letter of the 13th September, and again by the letter of the 1st October, must have been in the contemplation of the parties when the goods were placed at the defendant's disposal, for Frier, and, although they might not have had inspection at the time, they were aware of the instructions given them, and they were prepared to act upon these instructions. If we refer to a letter written by the defendant to the bank, when the question arose between the bank and defendant, it appears the defendants admit that they received instructions on the 30th September to forward goods by passenger train; but, as they then found no goods in the name of Frier, he looked upon the matter as closed. Here they admit having received instructions, and when the goods were placed at their disposal they proceeded to act as agents under those instructions. The question now is whether they were guilty of negligence in forwarding the goods after the 8th October. It seems that the instructions given them in both the letters of the 13th September and the 1st October were that the goods should be forwarded by passenger train. Now, if we once hold that these were the instructions under which they became agents, we must take the instructions to the full extent, and conclude that they were instructed as agents to forward the goods by passenger train. The defendants say that they made the best efforts to send the goods by goods train, but owing to the congestion of traffic, they failed for more than a month to find carriage by rail from Cape Town to Victoria West. Now, it is almost admitted by the counsel for the defence that the evidence on that point is very unsatisfactory. No one in the employ of the defendant was able to state whether they made any efforts to send these particular goods, or to get accommodation for that particular case. The conclusion I come to is that the case was really lost sight of, and that it was no one's special duty among the clerks to see to it; but whatever the defendants may have done with a view to forwarding by goods train, it was the duty of them to send the goods by passenger train. This was ultimately done, and in that way the goods reached Victoria West, and, consequently, there was delay on the part of the agent in despatching the goods after the 8th October. That delay would be of some five or six weeks, and if an agent fail in performing his duty, and cause any loss to his principal, he is bound to make good that loss. The plaintiff claims damages, and bases his damages upon the value of the goods which should have been delivered, together with the profit he might have made if the goods had arrived in time. The measure of damages generally when goods in trade are despatched from one place to another, and where negligence has prevented the delivery in time, is the difference between the market value of the goods at the time they should have arrived and at the time that they did arrive. That general rule is only departed from when there is special evidence that the parties had something else in contemplation. The defendants could only be aware they were sending some goods in connection with a watchmaker's establishment. The plaintiff would therefore be entitled to the difference between the value of the goods when they should have arrived and the value when they did arrive shortly after the 19th November. There is no evidence before the Court as to this value, consequently the Court cannot measure the damages or estimate the damages by the guidance of such evidence. The conclusion we therefore come to

is that the amount of damages has not been proved; but there is no doubt there has been a breach of contract, and that the plaintiff was put to a great deal of inconvenience, and that some loss was incurred by him. Under all the circumstances, he is entitled to damages for breach of contract, but the Court can only allow him nominal damages, and judgment will be entered for the plaintiff for £5 damages, with costs.

Kotzé J.: Two questions arise for decision. The first is the liability of the defendants as agents of the plaintiff. Quite apart from the plea, which admits that the defendants acted as agents for the plaintiff, it seems clear to me upon the facts that, on and after October 8, the day on which the Standard Bank informed them that the case of goods was released and that they would therefore hold the goods for and on behalf of the plaintiff, the defendants became and acted as the plaintiff's agents. It appears that Bowman and Co., of London, sent out the case of goods, consisting of watchmaker's tools, to the Standard Bank under a bill of lading to order, accompanied by a draft on the plaintiff. The bank sent the draft to the plaintiff at Victoria West, who duly paid it by cheque on the 13th September, 1902. On the same day the plaintiff wrote to the defendants, who, as shipping agents, had cleared some goods for him on a former occasion, informing him of the consignment of the case of goods, and that he had paid the draft, and requesting them to forward the case without delay by passenger train to Victoria West. The defendants thereupon made inquiries at the Standard Bank, Cape Town, and were told that the bank had no trace of the case of goods. This the defendants communicated to the plaintiff by letter of 30th September. On the 1st October the plaintiff again wrote from Victoria West to the defendants referring to his former letter, and requesting the despatch of the case of watchmaker's tools by passenger train to Victoria West. For some reason, which does not quite clearly appear, the letter was not posted for two or three days. At any rate, it was received by the defendants shortly before the 8th October. It is contended on behalf of the defendants that they are not bound by any instructions contained in these two letters, which were written and received at a time when the defendants were not yet the agents of the plaintiff. But if such a contention is to be allowed, it will follow that, if a consignee who lives in the country were to write to shipping agents at a port with instructions how they are to deal with or forward his goods, and such instructions are received a day before the bank notifies to the shipping agents the release of the goods, the shipping agents who thereupon agree to hold the goods for the consignee may with impunity disregard his instructions, and if damage is suffered in consequence by the consignee, may successfully plead that the instructions, having been received a day before they undertook the agency, are not binding upon them. I think, therefore, that we must hold that as the defendants untook the agency they were bound by the express instructions given by the plaintiff. It consequently became the duty of the defendants to forward the case of goods by a passenger train instead of by a goods train. Owing to the congested state of traffic on the railway in October, 1902, the case could not be forwarded by a goods train, although it was quite possible and an easy matter to have sent it on to Victoria West by a daily passenger train, as directed by the plaintiff. The defendants are therefore liable to the plaintiff for the loss and damage suffered by him in consequence of the delay.

The next point is to what amount of damages is the plaintiff entitled? He adopted the unusual and extraordinary course of sending the case back by rail from Victoria West to Cape Town, intending to re-ship it to England. It would have been more correct to have sold the goods, for which he no longer had any use, and to have notified the defendants that he held them responsible for the difference in price. This course was, however, not adopted; nor do we know the market value of the goods, and whether at the present moment they are not of greater value than in October, 1902. The plaintiff also claims for loss of profit and business which he might have had and made had he received his watchmaker's tools in proper time. Even assuming that this is a case in which loss of profit can be taken into account, a matter which is certainly open to doubt, then there is no satisfactory evidence of such loss of profit on business before us.

There is the general statement of the plaintiff that he made a working profit of £20 per month, but this is not supported by the production of any books, nor is it substantiated in any other way. The plaintiff also says that in October and November, 1902, there was a large number of troops, amounting to several thousands, stationed at Victoria West, and he could reasonably have made up to £40 a month profit as a working jeweller and watchmaker, if he had possessed the necessary tools, which were in the case of goods in question. But a mere vague and general statement of this kind is not enough to justify the Court in awarding anything substantial by way of damages. I, therefore, agree with my brother Maasdorp in holding that only nominal damages can be awarded to the plaintiff to the extent of £5 and costs.

[Plaintiff's Attorney: G. Trollip; Defendants' Attorneys: Van Zyl and Buissinné.]

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.).]

ILLIQUID ROLL.

HARDY V. WILKES. { 1903. Nov. 6th.

Mr. Benjamin applied for judgment for the sum of £60, upon a dishonoured bill of exchange, or, in the alternative, money lent, and costs.

No appearance was entered for the defendant.

Judgment entered as prayed.

VAN HEERDEN V. SCHOLTZ.

This was a motion for judgment in default of plea against one Scholtz, who resides in German West Africa, for transfer of certain two plots of ground at the top of Longmarket-street, Cape Town, purchased by the plaintiff on a broker's note from the defendant's broker, Pfeiffer, in July, 1899, and also for £100 damages. Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers was for the plaintiff. The defendant was barred from pleading.

Daneel Cornelius van Heerden (the plaintiff) said he bought the property from the broker, under the broker's note. He paid £10 in cash, and afterwards sent a cheque for the balance of £60. Witness received a letter from Mr. Pfeiffer, returning the cheque, and saying he could not give witness transfer then. Further correspondence ensued between witness and Pfeiffer. He had repeatedly demanded transfer from Pfeiffer, who always told him that he could not get hold of Scholtz. On the 17th August witness's attorney wrote to Freeman, who held defendant's general power of attorney, demanding transfer of the land. Witness re-sold the lots in August of last year. He had other three lots as well, and he sold the whole for £340. His attorney had been asked for transfer.

By the Court: The reason why he had only brought the action now, four years later, was that he had been promised transfer. He had got occupation of the land. He had sold the property to Combrinck. Combrinck had not threatened him with a claim for damages. He should be satisfied if he got immediate possession of the ground.

Judgment for the plaintiff, with costs. transfer to be passed within two months.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

MUSICAL COPYRIGHT COMPANY V. SIMMONDS.

Mr. Gardiner moved on notice for an interdict restraining the respondent from selling, exhibiting, or disposing of certain pieces of music, which were alleged to be the copyright of members of the plaintiff association, pending an action to be brought. Counsel read an affidavit in support of the application.

Mr. Greer, for the respondent, contended that the applicants had made out no prima facie case on the affidavit put before the Court to grant an interdict. There was no allegation that the pieces of music were copyright in this colony. The plaintiffs admitted, in their affidavit, that the pieces were not already registered in this colony. According to the law of this colony, the importation of books, which were not registered under section 3 of Act 2 of 1873, was prohibited, but there was no prohibition attached to pieces of music that were not registered.

Mr. Gardiner said that there was another case—Boosey and Co. v. Simmonds—in which a similar point was raised, and the question was whether both cases should not be heard together. His learned friend, Mr. Searle, was engaged for the applicant in the other case. He had been under the impression that his learned friend, Mr. Greer, intended to apply for a postponement.

Pending an action to be brought by plaintiffs, an order was granted requiring the respondent to keep an account of such sales as were mentioned in the notice.

FLAUM V. GERHARD AND HAY.

Mr. Gardiner moved for an order against the Bank of Africa, or any other person, firm, or company, in this colony, for the attachment of any funds in their possession belonging to the defendants from the sale of any goods, being portion of the consignment forwarded by the S.S. Rostock, from parting with the same, to enable the petitioner to found jurisdiction for an action to be brought by him against the defendants. It appeared that a dispute had arisen between the parties as to a contract for the forwarding of a cargo of timber from Russia, the amount demanded on the bill of lading being more than the plaintiff said that he agreed to pay.

Rule granted, calling on the respondents to show cause on the 12th November why the money from the sale of the said goods should not be attached ad fundandam jurisdictionem, the rule to operate as an interdict in the meantime.

WIENER AND CO. V. VAN DER PASS AND CO.

Mr. Gardiner moved for an order for the attachment of certain goods and money belonging to the defendants, and now in the control of Valentine Dusseau and Co., of Cape Town, in order to found jurisdiction, pending an action to be instituted by the petitioners, and for leave to sue by edictal citation. Petitioners said that the defendants owed them £481 6s. 1d., upon the adjustment of certain accounts with them.

Rule granted, calling upon Valentine Dusseau and Co. to show cause, on the 12th November, why an order should not be granted as prayed.

Postea (Nov. 19):

Mr. Buchanan, for the respondents, said that he did not object to the plaintiff's suing Van der Pass and Company. Counsel put in an affidavit from the manager of Valentine Dusseau and Co. The affidavit of the manager set forth that with the exception of 20 cases of beer and 4 cases of compressed vegetables, they had no bona fide property of the respondents. The respondents had paid dues, rent, and other charges, and were willing to hand the goods over on payment of same. They had no moneys in their possession.

Order granted to attach the 20 cases of beer, the property of the respondents, in the hands of Valentine Dusseau and Co., and leave granted to sue by edictal citation, return day fixed for the first of February, costs to be costs in the cause, respondent appearing to pay his own costs.

Ex parte DON.

Mr. De Waal moved for leave, on behalf of the petitioner, who resides in Cape Town, to sell certain landed property situate at Port Elizabeth, without the leave and assistance of her husband, to whom she is married in community. Petitioner was married at Kimberley to Alexander Don; they lived happily together for a time, but subsequently, in 1898, they agreed to live apart, in consequence of her husband's cruel treatment. Since 1898 applicant had had no communication with her husband, and the last she heard as to his whereabouts was that he was in Port Elizabeth about a year ago. Petitioner had had certain property bequeathed to her in Port Elizabeth, and she desired to sell this by auction, and invest the proceeds in landed property, in or near Cape Town.

A rule was granted, calling on Alexander Don to show cause on the 12th December why an order should not be made as prayed, rule to be served personally on the respondent, failing which one publication in a Port Elizabeth newspaper.

Ex parte INGRAM.

Mr. M. Bisset moved on behalf of the petitioner, who is executor dative of the late John Ingram and his spouse, for an order confirming the sale by auction to the petitioner of certain property in the division of George, and authorising the passing of transfer.

De Villiers, C.J., said that the purchase price (£165) was less than the Divisional Council valuation of the land, and he could not make an order upon the present application. If the applicant was prepared to pay the Divisional Council valuation, then he would make an order.

Ex parte HATTINGH.

Mr. Alexander moved for an order authorising the Master to pay out certain moneys standing to the credit of the petitioner, who is a minor, to enable him to purchase stock to the amount of £600, to prosecute his farming operations.

Order granted as prayed.

Ex parte MULDER.

Mr. Van Zyl moved for the appointment of a curator ad litem, to represent one of the lower riparian proprietors in a water dispute in the division of Oudtshoorn.

Order granted as prayed.

Ex parte RAGMAR.

Mr. Van Zyl moved for the petitioner for leave to raise £200 on a mortgage on property at the corner of Pepper-street, Cape Town, belonging to an estate of which he is executor testamentary.

Order granted as prayed.

Ex parte FOUCHEE.

Mr. Burton moved for leave to sell certain property in the district of Wode house, of which petitioner's eight children are heirs. The children are entitled to a tenth share in a certain farm, and as it would be impossible for them individually to utilise their share, and petitioner had been offered £400 for the said portion, he asked for authority to accept the offer. Counsel admitted that there were difficulties as to the division of the farm, raised by the will of the testators.

The matter was ordered to stand over and notice to be given to all interested as to the application.

GROOM V. HERMAN.

Mr. Alexander moved for leave to attach certain money standing to the credit of the defendant, Charles Herman, in the Bank of Africa. Petitioner went into partnership with the defendant, advanced £50 upon a promissory note, defendant had left the Colony, and petitioner had obtained judgment in the Magistrate's Court. A warrant of execution was issued, but a return of nulla bona had been made. A sum of £16 14s. 6d. was standing to the defendant's credit in the Bank of Africa, which petitioner asked to be allowed to attach.

Order granted as prayed.

BANGEE V. DUSTAY.

Mr. Burton (with him Mr. Upington) moved for a rule nisi to be made absolute, restraining respondents from disposing of certain goods at Lady Grey, in the division of Aliwal North, pending an action to be brought by the plaintiff.

Mr. Alexander, for the respondents, Whitaker, Pattison, and Brooke, assented, but asked that they should be relieved from all obligations as to costs.

Rule made absolute, no order as against the respondents, Sali and Whitaker, Pattison and Brooke, costs as against the defendant Dustay to be costs in the cause.

Ex parte KOHNE.

Mr. Pyemont moved, on behalf of the petitioner, for leave to raise £500 on mortgage upon land at Claremont Flats to enable him to build two houses. Minors were interested in the matter.

The Mater's report was favourable.

Order granted in terms of the Master's report.

TUROK V. CHRISTOPOULUS AND ANOTHER.

Mr. Alexander moved for leave to alter and amend a certain contract of lease so that in the preamble the description of the premises let by the applicant for a term of three years to the respondents should read "165 Commercial Buildings, Albert-road, Woodstock." instead of "161, Commercial Buildings, Woodstock." The petitioner said he was the owner of the property in question, and that he had by mistake described the shop he intended to lease to the respondents as No. 161, whereas he now found that it was No. 165. The respondents pressed to have the right to occupy No. 161, and threatened an action in the Supreme Court for damages unless the terms of the lease were observed. Petitioner supposed that the reason why the respondents wanted No. 161 was because it was a corner shop. This shop was occupied by an Indian coolie.

Mr. Pyemont, who appeared for the respondents, who are Greeks, read their answering affidavit, which was to the effect that No. 161 was the shop intended to be leased, and that they had been promised the corner premises by the applicant. They had occupied the shop No. 165 for some months, but they only went there temporarily, the applicant informing them that at the end of the tenancy of the present occupier they should be allowed to have No. 161, and that No 165 would not be let to anybody engaged in the fruit trade. Respondents had tendered the rent of No. 161 to Messrs. Silberbauer, Wahl and Fuller, attorneys to the applicants, with a demand for possession.

Mr. Alexander read the replying affidavits of the applicant, denying several of the statements made by the respondents.

After hearing counsel in argument on the facts,

De Villiers, C.J. said that the probabilities seemed to be in favour of the applicant, but as the respondents seemed to wish the case to be tried by action, he would order the applicant to proceed by action, costs to be costs in the cause.

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP and the Hon. Mr. Justice KOTZE.]

WELLS V. DELBRIDGE. 1903. Nov. 6th. „ 7th. „ 10th.

Negligence — Servant — Scope of employment — Independent contractor.

The defendant had contracted with one I. to do certain work, and he gave his foreman D. general instructions to do "any little job" on the premises which I. might require. Pursuant to these instructions D. cut down a certain tree and left a portion of it lying across a public footpath. The plaintiff fell over this in the dark and sustained serious injuries.

Held, that D. had been guilty of negligence, and that as he was a servant of defendant (an independent contractor and not a servant of I.), and had in cutting down a certain tree acted within the scope of his employment, the defendant was liable for his negligence.

Semble: If an employer instructs his servant to do any service for another and the servant is guilty of negligence in the performance of that service, his ordinary employer must be held liable, unless he can show that at the time the work was done his servant was under the direction and control of such third person.

This was an action for the recovery of £4,000 as and for damages. The declaration set forth that the plaintiff now resides at Beaufort West, and was postmaster at Lower Paarl at the time the cause of action occurred. The defendant was a builder and contractor, residing at Wynberg. On the 5th December, 1902, the defendant cut down certain trees in front of the premises of the Standard Bank at the Paarl. These trees were allowed to be in the public footpath, and at night time the plaintiff, while lawfully using the footpath, came into violent collision with a tree, and was seriously injured. He alleged that the injuries were due to the negligence of the defendant or his servants, and claimed the sum of £4,000 as damages. The defendant in his plea admitted that the trees referred to were cut down. He denied that he allowed the trees to lie across the footpath. They lay within the boundary of certain private property belonging to the Standard Bank, and defendant alleged that the injuries were caused by plaintiff's own negligence when trespassing on the said private property. He denied that he or his servants were guilty of any negligence.

Mr. Benjamin (with him Mr. Gardiner) for plaintiff; Mr. Searle, K.C. (with him Mr. Upington) for defendant.

Kotzé, J. (to Mr. Searle): Do you admit that the trees were cut down by you?

Mr. Searle: No; we deny that. We say that the trees were cut down by a man, who was not in our employ, but who, at the time of cutting them down, and in cutting them down, was acting for someone else. We did not know of it until about a year afterwards. We say the man who cut them down was acting for one Green, whom we shall prove paid him for cutting down the trees, and who had the benefit of the trees.

Kotzé, J.: That is not your plea.

Mr. Searle: Our plea denies that we did it. I am only stating this in order to explain the position we take up.

Frederick Wells, the plaintiff, said he was formerly postmaster at the Lower Paarl, but at present lived at Beaufort West. On the evening of the 5th December witness was going from his residence to the Library. In front of the Standard Bank there was an open piece of ground, belonging to the bank, contiguous to which was the pathway. The Standard Bank ground was somewhat lower than the pathway. Between the path and the road there was a small furrow. The night was dark, but there was a gleam of light from a chemist's shop opposite, immediately in front of the tree. This was at 8.30 p.m. Witness suddenly collided with the tree. He was not on the Standard Bank property at the time; he did not notice the position of the tree then; but he noticed on coming back from the Library that it was placed right across the pathway. When witness collided with the tree he lost consciousness. He recovered afterwards, and proceeded to the Library, where he rested. He informed the librarian. He managed, with difficulty, to get home, and went to bed. He resumed duty next day, but was unable to work, and called in medical assistance. Dr. Retief examined witness. He was in bed for nine weeks, and when he got up he could only walk with the aid of a stick. He was not able to work at present. He was now working at Beaufort West as a telegraph operator, but was not able to perform the work properly. The salary was the same. He was paid his full salary while he was ill up to the 29th August. He was transferred to town, but could not do the work there. The service doctor ordered him a month's rest. Witness's right arm and leg were numb. Dr. Retief's account up to the end of last year was £20; witness expected to have to pay more than that for the doctor's attendance during the present year.

Cross-examined by Mr. Searle: Witness was certain the tree was in the footpath; he did not go off the footpath. Witness did not strike the trunk of the tree. He came into a branch of the tree. He inspected the tree going home that night with the light of a match. He went to see the manager of the bank next day. He afterwards put the matter in the hands of Mr. Van Eyk, attorney. Witness did not know whether there was any communication with Mr. Green on the matter. Green, who was the contractor for the gaol, was now dead. Witness came to Cape Town in July. His salary was now £230 a year, which would shortly be increased by £10. Witness believed the telegraph wires were between the footpath and the road, and not between the footpath and the Standard Bank ground. He was walking inside the telegraph wires. He was walking very fast at the time.

Re-examined by Mr. Benjamin: Wherever the telegraph wires were, he was sure the tree was over the footpath.

Isaac Davis said he was in the employ of the defendant. He was foreman in charge of the works at the Standard Bank, Paarl, for which defendant was contractor. Defendant instructed witness to carry out the work according to the plan, and to oblige the manager in any way he could. The manager asked witness to cut the trees down. Witness ordered the men to cut them down. He subsequently disposed of the trees as they stood. Witness cut them down for Mr. Green, who agreed to cut them down as they stood. Mr. Green gave witness £1. Witness kept part of this, and divided the rest amongst the boys.

Mr. Benjamin: Have you always made that statement?

Witness: On oath, I have.

Have you given any different statement at any other time?—Yes, I have.

Did you make any other statement to Messrs. Faure and Zietsman?—No.

Have you made any other statement to Mr. Moore?—I have.

A different statement to what you are now making?—No.

Did you not tell Mr. Moore that you had got £2 for the trees, and that you had given it to the defendant?—No, I never said £2.

A few pounds? And that you had entered it in the book which you had given to Mr. Delbridge?—No; I said I received a sum, and I didn't know exactly how much it was, as it was so long ago.

And that you entered it in the book? —Yes.

Do you produce that book?—No.

Mr. Benjamin pointed out that the witness had been subpœnaed to produce that book.

Witness said, in answer to further questions by Mr. Benjamin, that the book belonged to his employer. Witness never made any entry regarding these trees. He entered in the time-book the wages paid to the men who cut down these trees. Mr. Moore asked witness questions, and he answered them. Mr. Moore wrote down witness's statements. Witness told Moore that Delbridge would not deny he was paid by witness. Witness paid the boys for cutting down the trees and for other work with this money. He got the price of cutting down the trees from Green, and paid the boys with this. He entered the money received from Green in the time-book. That book was destroyed when it was filled.

Cross-examined by Mr. Searle: The cutting down of the trees had nothing whatever to do with Delbridge's contract. Witness was asked by Mr. Irwin (the manager of the bank) to cut the trees down, and witness asked if, as a personal favour, he would allow witness to sell them if he could. Mr. Irwin told him that if he could make a profit, he was at liberty to do so. Witness saw Green, who was the firewood contractor at the gaol, and Green agreed to cut them down, and said he would give witness a box of cigars. Afterwards Green told witness that he could not get any men to do the work, and asked witness to allow his men to do the work, saying he would pay the cost of the labour. Witness received a sum from Green—he did not know how much—and entered it as wages for the work the men did in cutting down the trees. Green afterwards removed the trees. The tree did not lie in the footpath. It was impossible. Witness cut off all the branches, and after this the tree could not have been more than 12 or 13 feet long. The tree which Wells spoke of as lying across the path was not cut down at that time. That particular tree was still standing on the night of the 5th, and stood for a week afterwards. It was quite a different tree to that indicated by Wells that was cut down that day. If the tree which fell on the 5th had been long enough to fall across the footpath, it must have broken the telegraph wires in falling. A clerk from the office of Messrs. Faure and Zietsman had given witness a sovereign to go into town to the office. When witness went there, there was no one there. Witness had previously cut down trees at the back for Mr. Irwin.

By the Court: If Green had sent men to cut down the trees, witness would have seen that they were felled properly. He would have done this because of Mr. Delbridge's instruction to him to do all he could to oblige the bank manager.

Henry Philip van Eyk, attorney, Paarl, said he had not written certain letters to the Municipality or the Standard Bank with regard to this matter. Witness's office was part of the Standard Bank Buildings. The inside row of trees was cut down. They were lying with their points towards the street. Some of the trees projected over the sidewalk. On the 5th December Mr. Faure (an attorney) and himself went to his office late in the evening. Afterwards they went to the cafe, and had to pass the trees on the way. They got clear of one tree, and witness had a narrow escape from running against another, which was lying across the footway.

Cross-examined by Mr. Searle: He had no correspondence between the plaintiff and the Municipality or the Standard Bank. Witness spoke to the Mayor about the matter on behalf of the plaintiff a few days after the accident. Witness did not see the manager of the Standard Bank, because he had never considered the Standard Bank liable. He should think that it was about three months since Green died. The tree was across the path the morning following the accident.

Re-examined by Mr. Benjamin: The trees had been lopped. The loppings were lying about.

By the Court: He was positive that there was more than one tree there.

Andreas M. Moll, merchant, Paarl, said that he heard of the accident the morning after it had occurred. On the previous day he noticed that the loppings of the trees were lying about, and that one tree was across the path. He reported the matter to the police. In his opinion, the tree was very dangerous. That was the only tree lying across the path.

Cross-examined by Mr. Searle: The tree was across the footpath, and he had to go into the main road to pass it. He did not know how many trees were down. There was a beam of light from the chemist's shop, and anyone coming along the road would have been unable to see the trunk. The trunk was behind the beam, and was not visible to those passing through the light.

Alexander John Lewis, attorney, Paarl, said his office was close to the Standard Bank, on the Lady Grey Bridge side, and he noticed a tree lying across the footpath. He heard of the accident, and he noticed the tree the day after the accident had occurred.

Cross-examined by Mr. Searle: His attention was not directed by anyone to the matter. He should say that the tree was lying on the Lady Grey Bridge side, between the third and fourth tree, about the same place as had been indicated by Mr. Van Eyk on the plan.

Jacobus Christian Faure, attorney, said that in December last he was at the office of Faure and Zietsman, at the Paarl, at a late hour on the night of the accident. On coming out, they rounded one of the trees, and as they went along, he felt Mr. Van Eyk's hand on his chest drawing him to one side. Mr. Van Eyk told him to look out, as there was a trunk in the way. Earlier in the evening he had noticed that a tree was lying right across the pavement. He did not remember whether there was more than one tree cut down, but he noticed a good number of branches lying about.

Cross-examined by Mr. Searle: He was absolutely certain there was not more than one tree lying across the pavement. In his opinion, the tree was the third from the Lady Grey Bridge side.

Dr. Pieter Jacobus Retief, of Paarl, said that the plaintiff called at his surgery on the night of the accident. Witness found that three of his ribs had been fractured, and his right lung, diaphragm, and liver had been injured. Witness did not think plaintiff would recover. He was extremely sensitive on his right side. He could not use his right leg properly. The plaintiff had becoming worse lately. The plaintiff had great pain in the back and the lower dorsal region. The medical charges, he thought, would be about £50 or £60. He thought the plaintiff would now require special treatment.

Cross-examined by Mr. Searle: Plaintiff was now suffering from traumatic neurosis. He thought the nervous organ of the spinal cord was affected. The case was one for a specialist in nervous diseases.

By the Court: The plaintiff had been a very steady, sober man, as far as he knew.

Dr. Fritz W. Weeber said he saw Wells in March, and found him suffering from a complex of nervous symptoms. The right side was over-sensitive in one part, and numb in other parts. Witness had made two or three examinations since. There was no improvement. In his opinion, there was no immediate chance of improvement.

Cross-examined by Mr. Searle: In his opinion, Wells should have quite a year's rest. There might be an improvement, but not for years.

Mr. Benjamin closed his case.

John Delbridge (the defendant), said he was a builder and contractor, of Wynberg. He had a series of contracts to do at the Standard Bank Buildings at the Paarl last year. The first contract was to do the necessary repairs to the bank itself, and the next was to generally renovate and repair the manager's house, and the third was for the offices occupied by Mr. Van Eyk. There was also a contract for doing the ceiling inside the bank. None of his agreements had anything to do with the cutting down of trees, either in front of or behind the bank. As to the trees at the back, there were two which interfered with the building. He had a conversation with the bank manager, and offered to let his men cut down the trees. Witness used to go to the Paarl at that time once a week. His foreman (Davis) was in charge of the work. Work, he believed, was commenced in October. Witness instructed Davies to cut down the two trees at the back. That was done. Witness received no payment. He did not know what became of the trees. He did not remember having any conversation with the bank manager about the trees at the front. He went to the Paarl on the 6th December, the day after the accident. When he arrived there, he found that one of the trees adjoining the manager's residence was cut down. Witness had measured the trees. The first one cut down at the back was 21 inches diameter; another was 24 inches; the third was 12½ inches; the fourth, 26 inches; while the one still standing was 19 inches diameter. At the front, the tree cut down was 24 inches diameter; while the other two were each 24 inches diameter. The stumps of the trees which had been cut down were 18 inches high. The tree at the front was not across the footpath when he saw it on the following morning. He did not receive the slightest intimation that he was liable for the accident until he received the letter from plaintiff's attorneys in August of this year. After he had finished at the Standard Bank, he executed two other jobs at the Paarl. It was true that he had told Davies that if there was any little job the bank manager wanted done, he was to do it. Witness got no benefit whatever from the trees. Witness saw Mr. Van Eyk after he had received the letter, and asked him what he meant by sending him such a letter. Mr. Van Eyk said: "Can't we settle it now?" Witness told him that he would not pay a penny. Mr. Van Eyk told him that he had always held that Mr. Green was responsible.

Cross-examined by Mr. Benjamin: His workmen were paid by the day, and received their wages weekly. He had not his original time-book. Witness had destroyed that book, and transferred the items into his cash-book. He would not deny that he might have had conversations with the manager about the removal of the trees from the front of the bank.

B. Marais, Government land surveyor, swore to the accuracy of a plan prepared of the Standard Bank and trees in the vicinity.

Edward Irvine, son of the Standard Bank manager at the Paarl, said he remembered Mr. Davis cutting down the trees at the front of the bank. Witness helped to pull down the corner tree nearest the dwelling-house on the Paarl side. Mr. Du Toit (a clerk), Mr. Davis, two coloured boys, and two carpenters, he believed, were present. They drew down the tree at an angle. Witness did not remember assisting in pulling down other trees. They were simply standing about, and they gave Mr. Davis a hand. There was a chemist's shop almost opposite the bank, and the lights from the lamps were reflected right across the road. Witness produced a sketch indicating the direction and course of the beams.

Jacob Petrus du Toit, clerk at the bank, also gave evidence as to the position of the trees.

William Koch Irvine, manager of the bank, said that his intention was to have the trees cut down by woodcutters, but their prices were too high. He mentioned the matter to Mr. Delbridge, who said, "Oh, I will have it done for you," and witness understood that remark referred to all the trees. The back trees were first cut down, and sold by witness to Green. As to the front trees, witness told Davies that he could have the trees for himself. It transpired that Green wanted the trees for the gaol, and then Davies said that Green could have them if he would give him a box of cigars. Witness could not say whether the tree cut down at the front projected over the footpath.

Cross-examined by Mr. Benjamin: He thought the understanding with Mr. Delbridge included the cutting down of all the trees. The trees at the back were used for the improvement of the bank's property. They did not get anything for the trees at the front. Witness pointed out to Davies the trees which were to be cut down.

Re-examined by Mr. Searle: The bank's property extended to the outer row of trees.

By the Court: He had no doubt in his own mind that the arrangement with Delbridge was that he should point out to Davis which trees were to come down. The portion between the bank and the footpath was frequently used by people, but they were trespassing.

Cornelius Rosslyn, a painter, said he was working at the bank at the Paarl for the defendant last December. He saw the trees cut down. He saw the tree at the corner nearest the manager's house removed. It fell slightly towards the Paarl. The tree was about four feet away from the footpath. He was sure no portion of the tree was across the footpath.

Cross-examined by Mr. Benjamin: He sat on the tree after it had fallen in the evening until 9 o'clock.

Dr. Alfred Edward Thompson stated that he examined the plaintiff two or three days ago, and at the beginning of July. Witness was medical officer for the Post Office. The plaintiff, in his opinion, was not suffering from any organic disease of the spine, but was suffering from nerve weakness following shock. He thought the plaintiff should have several months' rest for recovery. He saw no difficulty in the plaintiff's ultimate recovery. If the plaintiff had been thrown out of a wagon it would aggravate the complaint.

Cross-examined by Mr. Benjamin: When witness saw the plaintiff in July he recommended him to go to the hospital, and after resting with a friend for a month witness recommended him for a change up-country. He would recommend a complete cessation of work for some time. Very often when the legal proceedings were over, and the mind relieved from litigation, the patient recovered rapidly. He would recommend massage treatment, but he would not say that the plaintiff could not be properly massaged in this country. A wagon accident or running against a tree might bring on his present condition.

The plaintiff (recalled) stated, in reply to Mr. Searle, that in March last he slipped from a wagon, and received a shock to his nervous system.

Re-examined by Mr. Benjamin: He would not say that he got any worse from that day.

Mr. Searle closed his case.

Counsel having been heard in argument on the facts,

Maasdorp, J.: The plaintiff in this case seeks to recover from the defendant the sum of £4,000, as damages suffered by him through injuries sustained because of the negligence of the defendant's servants. The plaintiff alleges that the servants of the defendant were engaged in felling a tree next to the main street at the Paarl, and that the tree was allowed to fall across the footpath adjoining the main road, where it remained until the darkness of the evening at which time the plaintiff was passing along this footpath. The plaintiff says he came in collision with a snag projecting out of the trunk of the tree, with such violence that he was seriously hurt. The defendant denies that the trees were felled by his servants, or that the injury was occasioned through the negligence of his servants. He also says that at the time the plaintiff was hurt he was actually trespassing upon private property, and that it was upon that private property that he came into collision with this branch, and got injured. The first fact we have to ascertain in this case is with respect to the actual position of that portion of the tree with which the plaintiff collided, and I must say that there seems to me no difficulty upon the evidence in this case to arrive at the real facts. It may almost be said that the evidence is wholly in favour of the plaintiff. The witnesses who gave evidence on behalf of the plaintiff in this case were almost all of them disinterested. They were very intelligent men, and I think we must also say they were very respectable gentlemen. Their evidence agrees in the main, though there may be some discrepancy in some particulars. The plaintiff says that in passing along the footpath adjoining the street in the darkness of the evening he was suddenly struck a blow, but he was unable at the time to ascertain from what it proceeded. He ascertained afterwards upon examining the spot again that there was a branch of a tree lying across this footpath. He positively states he was not upon the adjoining private ground, but was walking on the public footpath, where he had a right to be. As to the position of this branch, he is corroborated by four other witnesses, and in such a manner that we cannot doubt the accuracy of their evidence if we take it that they are truthful witnesses. It appears that Mr. Moll saw the top branches of the tree, which had been felled during the afternoon lying across the footpath, and he was so struck with the dangerous character of that obstacle that he at once proceeded to the police. Now, I have no doubt that Mr. Moll's evidence in that respect is truthful, because I can see no reason for suspecting that he had any bias in favour of the plaintiff in this case. That same afternoon the branch was observed by Mr. Faure, and when Mr. Faure and Mr. Van Eyk, in the darkness of the evening, passed up that road Mr. Van Eyk drew the attention of Mr. Faure to this branch, and Mr. Faure then recollected he had observed this obstacle already in the afternoon. Then there is also Mr. Lewis, an wholly disinterested witness—and being an attorney, we must take it that he is an intelligent and observant man—he saw this branch lying across the road the next morning, and Mr. Van Eyk, who had seen it the evening before, observed it again next morning; so that it was not only in the darkness of the evening that this branch was observed, but also in the light of next day. Upon the whole, then, I find no difficulty in coming to the conclusion that the tree had fallen across the footpath. It was lying across the footpath in a very busy thoroughfare, in which there was constant passenger traffic up and down. and, being close to the bank, I should say this branch must have been lying across the footpath in a very busy portion of that street. To allow an obstacle of this kind to obstruct the thoroughfare in this way is an act of negligence. This tree had been felled by Davis, and had been allowed to remain there by him, consequently, the negligence was negligence on the part of Davis. We have next to ascertain whether the defendant was responsible and liable for that negligence of Davis. To ascertain that, we must inquire whether Davis was the servant of the defendant, and was acting under his control or not. The question has been raised in this case whether he was not the servant and acting under the control of Mr. Irvine, the manager of the bank, or a Mr. Green, who had purchased the trees. We have now to decide in whose service Davis was. Now it is quite clear he was in the general service of the defendant, working for him in the repairs to the bank building; but it doesn't follow from that that when he performed this particular work, he was acting within the scope of his duties. We have to ascertain that from the rest of the evidence. Mr. Irvine says that the defendant, who had entered into a contract with him for repairs and alterations to the bank, had observed that he was negotiating with someone for felling these trees, and when he discovered that, he voluntarily came forward to Mr. Irvine, and said it would be very much better that he should fell the trees himself, because he could do it carefully with his workmen. Mr. Delbridge admits that he made use of these expressions, but he says they were confined to two trees behind the bank, and not to the particular trees felled in the front of the bank. Mr. Irvine, on the other hand, says that it had general reference to all the trees, and that Mr. Delbridge knew it was necessary that all these trees should be taken down. But, however that may be, this much Mr. Delbridge admits: that he gave Davis instructions that if there was any little job which Mr. Irvine might want to have done on the premises, Davis was to do it, and in giving these instructions, he gave them to Davis as his servant, and if they were carried out, they were carried out by Davis as his servant. I wish to remark at this stage that when he gave that evidence, Mr. Delbridge gave it very frankly, because it was certainly a damaging piece of evidence against himself, and he gave it without the slightest hesitation. What the legal effect of that statement may be, we have to decide. Davis says that, though he did the felling, he cut down these trees to oblige Mr. Irvine, because he had been told by the defendant to do anything which might oblige Mr. Irvine. If we take only that statement of Davis, then it is clear proof that in cutting down these trees he cut them down under instructions from the defendant. It is said that in one portion of his evidence he makes the rather contradictory statement that he was working for a man named Green

It may be that that is not a direct contradiction, because it appears that after he had arranged with Mr. Irvine to cut down these trees, and was acting under the general instructions he had received from the defendant, the question arose as to the disposal of the timber, and the result of the discussion between Davis and Mr. Irvine was that he could dispose of the timber, and the timber was then disposed of to a man named Green; but from the evidence generally, I conclude that the felling of the trees was not in consequence of the agreement with Green, but in consequence of what had already been agreed upon, that the work should be done for Mr. Irvine under the direction of Mr. Delbridge, and that, after the trees were felled, Mr. Davis could dispose of them. Under these circumstances, therefore, I must come to the conclusion that Davis was acting as the servant of the defendant. Defendant himself was not the servant of Mr. Irvine; he was an independent contractor, over whose work Mr. Irvine had no special control. I come to the conclusion, therefore, that neither Mr. Irvine nor Mr. Green had any control over Davis, and that the work he did was under the direction and authority of defendant. It follows, therefore, that the injury which was received by the plaintiff was in consequence of the negligence of the servants of the defendant. The defendant is, therefore, liable to make compensation, and the next question arises, what the amount of that compensation should be. The medical evidence is very uncertain, and speculative in its character, but it is quite clear that the plaintiff has suffered a serious injury, which has caused such an affection of his nerves that he is suffering some spinal injury. The doctors say that that has not caused any organic disease, and, on the whole, they seem all to agree that it is merely a matter now of serious nervous affection. Mr. Retief has some doubts as to whether he will recover. Mr. Weeber thinks he might recover, but he cannot form any opinion as to the period, and Mr. Thompson, who gave evidence for the defendant, also looks upon his sufferings as of a serious character. The difference between them is whether he will require a longer or a shorter rest to recover from the effects of this injury, and the period that they mentioned seems to range from six months to two years, that he would require a rest of about that period in order to thoroughly recover. He has proved that he has already incurred expenses in the sum of £60. The salary he receives from the Government amounts to £230 a year. If, therefore, we come to the conclusion that he would require a year's rest that would amount to a sum of £300, but I think we cannot limit the period to twelve months considering that two of the doctors think that it would take a considerably longer period, and that after a rest of eighteen months is allowed for, there might, perhaps—though there is still some doubt—be a perfect cure in this case. During that eighteen months he will require to go to some expense for further treatment, and we come to the conclusion that we should allow him the sum of £450 as damages. Judgment will, therefore, be given for the plaintiff for £450, with costs.

Kotzé, J.: I am of the same opinion. There is, unfortunately, some discrepancy or contradiction in the evidence with reference to the facts. For instance, the witnesses contradict each other with reference to the particular tree which was cut down, and had fallen on the afternoon of the 5th December. Some say that it was the tree nearest the Paarl Station, and others that it was the tree nearest Lady Grey Bridge, but, be that as it may, it is clear that a tree had been cut down, and now the next question is whether that tree lay across the public footpath. There, too, there is some contradiction, but, after weighing the evidence carefully, I am satisfied in my own mind that the tree did lie across the public footway for some little distance. I see no reason whatever not to accept the evidence of Mr. Faure and Mr. Van Eyk and Mr. Moll on that point, who corroborate the plaintiff, and therefore we have a tree lying in a dangerous position across the public footway in the Paarl, a footway that the public were in the habit of using night and day, and the plaintiff coming into contact with that tree was injured. That the plaintiff was very severely injured is clear from the evidence. Now the principal point is whether the defendant is liable for the injury sustained by the plaintiff? Well, that will depend upon the question whether he is liable for the negligence of Davis, who cut down the tree in question. The evidence is that Mr. Delbridge had a contract for repairing the Standard Bank Buildings at the Paarl, and that he went there some time last year, and had a conversation with Mr. Irvine, the local manager of the bank. Mr. Irvine spoke to him about some trees standing at the back of the premises, and said that he was anxious to have them removed, and that someone was willing to remove them, but wanted payment for so doing in addition to the timber. Mr. Delbridge, the defendant, then said to Mr. Irvine. "Why not wait until my men are here, because work of that kind requires some amount of care?" Mr. Irvine has told the Court that Mr. Delbridge made an arrangement with him that Davis (the foreman) was to cut down such trees as Mr. Irvine (the manager) desired. Mr. Irvine wished certain trees to be cut down in front of the premises, and Davis cut down the particular tree which fell across the footpath. There is no doubt that in so cutting down this particular tree, he was guilty of negligence by allowing it to fall across the footway, and to remain there during the night. It seems to me, if Mr. Delbridge had given direct instructions to his foreman to cut down the trees, he would have been liable, and so, in the way, by agreeing with Mr. Irvine that Davies should cut down whatever trees he might point out, if Davis acted on the request of Mr. Irvine, he was actually in law acting on the instructions of Delbridge himself. I can see no distinction between the two cases. Of course, the material question is whether Davis, in cutting down the tree, was acting as the servant of Delbridge? This depends upon the further question: who controlled Davis at that moment of time? The trees were cut during working hours; they were cut upon instructions given by Delbridge to Davis that he was to carry out the wishes of Mr. Irvine (the manager) in that respect, and it cannot be said that Davis was at the time under the control either of Green, who eventually got the timber, or of Mr. Irvine. He was the local foreman on the spot, acting in the absence of Mr. Delbridge, and he was really acting in the same way as if he had got direct instructions from Delbridge himself to cut down the trees. As a matter of law, I think that if an employer instructs his foreman or his servants to undertake or do any service for another, and in the carrying out of this work the foreman is guilty of negligence, the employer must be held liable, unless the employer can show that at the time the work was carried out his foreman was under the control and direction of the person for whom the service or work was performed. That seems clear, from the case of Donovan v. Laing (1893—1 Q.B. 629), cited by Mr. Searle, for, although the circumstances in that case may not be quite parallel, at the same time I think the present case falls within the same prinoiple. At any rate, what I have stated is not inconsistent with the decision in Donovan's case. Consequently, I have arrived at the conclusion that Mr. Delbridge must be held liable for the injury which has been sustained by the plaintiff. As to the amount of damages, I agree, after considering the evidence of the two doctors on the one side—Drs. Retief and Weeber—and Dr. Thompson on the other, that the plaintiff is entitled to substantial damages, and the amount mentioned, viz., £450, is a reasonable amount. I therefore concur in the judgment, for £450 damages and costs.

Mr. Benjamin applied for the plaintiff's witness expenses as a necessary witness.

Maasdorp, J. intimated that these would be allowed.

[Plaintiff's Attorneys: Faure and Zietsman; Defendant's Attorney: G. Trollip.]

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP and the Hon. Mr. Justice KOTZE.]

HILLS V. COLONIAL GOVERNMENT. { 1903. Nov. 10th.

This was a motion for notice of appeal to the Privy Council against a judgment of the Supreme Court on the 3rd

August, 1903, in which judgment was given for the plaintiff in the sum of £75,000. Mr. Searle, K.C. (with him Mr. Close), was for the applicant, and Mr. McGregor was for the respondent.

Mr. Searle said the question raised would involve the sum of £60,000.

Mr. Justice Maasdorp: What is the urgency of this?

Mr. Searle: The three months' notice is up to-morrow, but, of course, if that is waived, the case might be left in the hands of the Court.

Mr. McGregor said if the judgment was given on the 6th March, instead of in August, he did not know whether it would be competent to give the leave to appeal.

The case was ordered to stand over.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.), and a Special Jury.]

RIES AND OTHERS v. WILLETTS. { 1903. Nov. 11th.

Slander.

This was an action brought by H. M. Ries and Others, of East London, against H. N. Willetts, also of East London, to recover the sum of £2,500 each as damages for slander at a public auction sale in April last.

The declaration was as follows: The first-named plaintiff is an hotel proprietor and dealer in land, residing in East London. The other plaintiffs are potato, grain, and produce merchants, carrying on business in East London. The defendant is an auctioneer, carrying on business in East London.

Prior to dates hereinafter mentioned plaintiffs have on several occasions jointly bought land, which they sold through defendant.

Prior to 11th April, 1903, plaintiffs were jointly interested in certain land purchased from a certain Mrs. Klein, and they entered into negotiations with defendant for the sale thereof, and on 6th April, 1903, plaintiffs informed defendant that they would not sell the said land through him as auctioneer.

Thereafter, on 11th April, and at a public auction at East London of other land, not the plaintiffs', and in the presence of E. Cordner and a large number of persons then and there attending the sale, the defendant, who was acting as auctioneer at the said sale, wrongfully, unlawfully, maliciously, and with intent to injure the plaintiffs, spoke of and concerning the plaintiffs the following false and defamatory words: "You may have seen advertised another sale, which is Mrs. Klein's property, by my friends the Ries party (meaning thereby the plaintiffs). I don't like their mean tricks. I told them they could go elsewhere with their dirty underhand business." The defendant meaning and was so understood to mean by the said words that the plaintiffs had been guilty of mean, dishonest, and dishonourable conduct, and that the sale advertised by the plaintiffs was a dishonest and underhand business.

By reason of the premises each of the plaintiffs has suffered damage to his good name and character and in business to the extent of £2,500. Wherefore the plaintiffs claim: (a) For each of them the sum of £2,500 as and for damages aforesaid; (b) alternative relief; (c) costs of suit.

To this declaration the defendant excepted as follows: Before pleading to the plaintiff's declaration, the defendant takes exception thereto on the ground that, even if he used the words therein complained of, the said words are not defamatory, and cannot support the plaintiff's action in law. In case the above exception be overruled, and not otherwise, the defendant says, for a plea to the declaration: He admits paragraph 1 of the declaration, save that he says the first-named plaintiff is not an hotel proprietor, but the manager or one of the managers of the National Hotel at East London. As to paragraph 2, he admits that he has sold land for the firm of H. Ries and Co., the partners of which are the second and third-named plaintiffs, but the defendant has not known the first-named plaintiff in connection with any of the said sales. As to paragraph 3, the defendant admits that prior to the 11th of April, 1903, the said firm of H. Ries and Co. entered into negotiations with him for the sale of the land in the said paragraph referred to, and that on the 6th of April, 1903, the said firm informed him that they would not sell the said land through him, but otherwise he denies the third paragraph. The defendant denies the allegations in paragraph 4, and says that he did not make use of the words therein set forth. He also denies the innuendo contained in the said paragraph. The defendant denies paragraph 5 of the declaration. Wherefore the defendant prays that the plaintiffs' claim may be dismissed with costs.

Evidence was then called.

Sir H. Juta, K.C., for plaintiffs; Mr. Burton for defendant.

Michael Joseph Ries, part proprietor of the Hotel National, East London, said that he and his brothers had dealt in property. Mr. Willetts had acted in a couple of joint transactions for him. In August last they bought Mrs. Klein's property for the purpose of disposing of it in building lots. Mr. Willetts was approached with regard to the disposal of this property. His brothers and himself had an interview with Mr. Willetts, who knew that the brothers were interested in the property. In April they decided not to employ Mr. Willetts. A sale took place on April 11, and the auction-room was full. After Mr. Willetts had sold a couple of lots, he said, "Gentlemen, you may have seen advertised another sale," etc., of which witness took a note at the time. Witness and his brothers were well known as the "Ries party," in East London. Witness borrowed a pencil from Mr. Cordner, and the remarks were shown to several others, who corroborated them. Several people left the room, and he was repeatedly spoken to about the statement. He had constantly to explain what it was all about. His business, he believed, had fallen off as a result of the statement.

Cross-examined by Mr. Burton: The Hotel National belonged to his mother, but, by a special arrangement, he was a part proprietor. When he was brought before the Magistrate at East London for a contravention of the liquor laws, he stated that he was "manager." The defendant must have known that witness was part owner in another property. It was more convenient to have the property transferred to his brothers. The Wilsonia property was a mile from Mrs. Klein's property. The defendant must have known that witness was interested in that property. The defendant had asked witness if he would be one in giving him the sale of the property. Witness was positive that he discussed the sale of the property with Mr. Willetts along with his brothers. They wanted defendant not to advertise any other property, while he was selling theirs. He was positive that his brother did not make remarks threatening to spoil the Wilsonia sale to the defendant. The interview took place a day or so after the second letter, but he did not think that the advertisement appeared until after the interview. Between April 11 and the middle of July no further advertisement appeared. From a business point of view they put in the advertisement on the day the "Wilsonia" sale was taking place. He would swear positively that the name of Ries was mentioned in the defendant's statement. Rendle made an excuse when the note was shown to him that he was rather deaf. The defendant did not say that it would be a low, mean trick if he let the Wilsonia sale fall through. Mr. Paterson said to witness, "It serves you right." There was a rumour that bubonic plague had broken out in the hotel a fortnight after the sale.

Edward Cordner stated he was present at the sale of the Wilsonia Estate. After two plots had been sold the defendant stopped and used the remarks attributed to him, with the exception of that before he said, "I don't like their dirty tricks," the defendant said, "I don't do such dirty tricks."

Cross-examined by Mr. Burton: Witness was not a greater customer at the Hotel National than any other hotel, and he was not given to intemperate habits, although his clothes had been left on the beach, and he was reported dead, as the result of a practical joke. He was sober at the sale. He did not hear the defendant say it would be a low, mean trick on his part to throw up the Wilsonia sale.

George Baker corroborated the other witnesses as to the remarks attributed to the plaintiff. Mr. Ries borrowed a pencil, and wrote down the remarks on one of the plans of the sale. He understood the "Ries party" to mean the three brothers. He did not know what was the dishonest thing referred to.

Cross-examined by Mr. Burton: The defendant never made any reference to a low, mean trick on his part.

Re-examined by Sir H. Juta: When the defendant said he had correspondence in his office to prove it he made the statement after he had completed all his remarks.

By De Villiers, C.J.: Witness did not understand what was meant by "I don't do such dirty tricks," which was uttered after the reference to the abandonment of the Wilsonia sale.

Henry Jelly, who was also present at the sale, confirmed what was written down by the plaintiffs.

Cross-examined by Mr. Burton: The remarks gave witness the impression that by the correspondence the defendant could prove all he said. He heard something about "striking below the belt," and he would swear that the name of Ries was referred to. Witness impressed on Michael Ries the necessity of clearing his name at once.

By De Villiers, C.J.: He would not consider it honourable of the defendant to give up one sale for another.

Edward Stewart stated that when he heard the remarks he thought the Ries brothers had done something dishonourable. When the paper was shown to him he would not look at it, as he did not want to have anything to do with a law case.

Cross-examined by Mr. Burton: When he got his subpœna he began to think seriously of what had been said. He did not remember the defendant mention "Klein's property."

Alfred John Ries, one of the plaintiffs, stated that he was not present at the sale, but the charge of the defendant was the subject of general conversation in East London. The defendant must have known that the three brothers were interested in the property.

Cross-examined by Mr. Burton: He did not remember his brother saying that he would have the sale on the same day as the Wilsonia property. Several people had spoken to him about the statement.

Re-examined by Sir H. Juta: The auctioneer put the advertisement in the paper himself.

Henry Ries, one of the plaintiffs, stated that the defendant's statement was a general topic of conversation. He had heard the remarks in England and Germany. A day or two after March 31 Mr. Willetts was in witness's office, and Michael was sent for. The defendant knew perfectly well that Michael was interested in the property. It was absurd to think that he threatened to have the sale on the same day as the Wilsonia property, even should he give the land away.

Cross-examined by Mr. Burton: He met Mr. Carl Malcolmess in Berlin, and he made mention of the remarks, as also did a commercial traveller in England. He did not tell the defendant that he would do his best to spoil the sale. He had nothing to do with the advertisement which stated that the property was part of the Wilsonia township.

By De Villiers, C.J.: He did not know that the defendant had the Wilsonia sale before he offered his.

Sir H. Juta closed his case.

Mr. Burton called the defendant,

Henry Willetts, who stated that the sale of the Wilsonia township was placed in his hand in November last year. He was first spoken to about Klien's property about the end of January. Henry Ries knew that he had the Wilsonia sale in hand. Witness had no instructions prior to the correspondence. At the interview, witness pointed out that it was ridiculous to expect him to throw up the Wilsonia property, but Henry Ries said, "We will have ours first," and threatened to spoil the Wilsonia sale, and witness reminded him that the result of it would be a failure for both. At the sale, witness explained why he did not have the plaintiffs' sale, and made no use of the words "Ries's party." "Low, mean trick" referred to himself if he had thrown up the Wilsonia sale.

Cross-examined by Sir H. Juta: He had been giving out that he was going to have the plaintiffs' sale, and he was in a perfectly amiable manner when he made the statement. The public only knew about putting off the sale when he told them, and he referred to no one when he said "dirty trick." He was speaking generally when he said "they can take that sort of work elsewhere." He meant to inform the public that he would not try to do anything that was not above-board. The "dirty work" referred to was the request of the plaintiffs to put their sale in front of the other. He did not see a number of people go out with Mr. Ries. He did not think two sales of that sort at the same time would come into conflict.

Arthur George Rendle stated that he was present at the sale, but he did not know anything about the Klein property. The defendant in his remarks said "that would have been a dirty act on my part," and he was positive no names were mentioned. Arthur Ries asked for a pencil, and commenced writing. He then read a few words to witness, and asked him to sign it as being correct, but witness refused to sign it, as he had heard nothing about the "Ries party." He did not recognise the words in the declaration as those which Ries read out to him at the time.

Cross-examined by Sir H. Juta: He unfortunately signed the statement produced in Mr. Wynne's office, when he was in a hury for a train. Mr. Gately wrote down the statement, and witness read it over and signed it. Nearly all the words were put to him by Mr. Michael Ries, and he did not think anything would come of the case, although he had given a different statement to the other side.

Edmund Bryant said that all he heard was, "Gentlemen, I could have had that sale if I would forego this one I am now holding. That I could not do. That would be a mean action on my part." Only Mrs. Klein's name was mentioned, and he never heard the name of "Ries."

Cross-examined by Sir H. Juta: There was nothing said about dirty work.

Dr. Rolston said that what he heard was: "No doubt, gentlemen, you have seen in the paper about the sale of Mrs. Klein's farm. I could have had that sale if I had foregone the present sale, which I consider would not be an honourable thing or a straightforward thing for me to do. I have been in practice for twenty years here, and I don't do dishonourable things of that sort, and persons who want me to do work of that class may take it elsewhere." There was no mention of "Ries."

Cross-examined by Sir H. Juta: He did not know whether there was going to be a row or not, and he did not want to have anything whatever to do with it. He considered there was nothing objectionable in the statement. He feared a lawsuit, as the Ries family were fond of the law. He heard nothing about dirty tricks.

Richard Currie stated that the remarks he heard were: "Gentlemen, you may have seen a large sale advertised, and I could have had that sale if I had liked to give up this one, and I have already had this sale in hand some six months, and therefore I would consider it would have been a dirty trick on my part." There was some reference to "striking below the belt."

Cross-examined by Sir H. Juta: Witness understood that "striking below the belt" meant to apply to the defendant taking up the second sale.

George Beaucamp understood the remarks to mean that the auctioneer would consider it a mean thing on his part to forego the sale. There was no name mentioned.

Cross-examined by Sir H. Juta: He did not think anything of the remarks at all. The defendant might have mentioned Mrs. Klein's property. He heard nothing about "dirty work," but he heard, "God bless them."

Ernest Harris stated that he heard the remarks, and there was no name mentioned whatever.

Cross-examined by Sir H. Juta: "God bless them," he took it, was meant to apply to anyone offering business not on the square. The defendant said he was not in the habit of taking dirty work, and people who offered it could take it elsewhere.

Charles Thompson said he heard only Mrs. Klein's name mentioned.

Cross-examined by Sir H. Juta: He understood by dirty work, something dishonourable. The benediction at the end, he took it, applied to anyone bringing dirty work.

Wm. Patterson, draper, Cape Town, deposed that in April last he resided at East London. He was at the sale, and heard Willetts speak. He did not hear Ries's name mentioned. After the sale, witness was in the hotel. Mr. Michael Ries came in, and asked him if he heard the remarks Willetts had made about them. Witness replied that he had not. Witness told him he could not be bothered about the matter.

Cross-examined by Sir Henry Juta: Witness was quite sure Willetts never used the word "underhand." He was not certain whether Willetts made use of the word "dirty"; he believed Willetts said "dishonourable."

Mr. Burton closed his case, and counsel then addressed the jury.

De Villiers, C.J., in summing up, said that throughout the great anxiety of the plaintiffs was that their sale should precede that of the "Wilsonia" estate. In his opinion, the defendant acted correctly in refusing to postpone the sale. The question had been raised in the Supreme Court whether the words complained of were capable of a defamatory meaning. The Court held that they were capable of such a meaning, but that did not conclude the question so far as the jury were concerned. It was still competent for the jury to decide whether the words were used in a defamatory sense, and to decide this question, they should consider the context in which the words were uttered. If the defendant merely meant to convey that what he was asked to do would be a dirty trick on his part, the jury would be justified in finding for the defendant. He considered it an improper thing for him to throw up a sale for the purpose of obtaining the lucrative sale offered to him by the plaintiffs, and was quite justified in saying so. To his mind, the difference between the versions of the witnesses was not so great. If they looked at the statement as a whole, it was for them to say whether the words were defamatory or not. Everybody at the sale knew what the plaintiff had asked him to do, and the defendant considered it dirty business. The witness Rendle was confronted with a document which he stated he signed in a hurry, and it seemed extraordinary that the plaintiffs did not subpœna him themselves. It did not follow when he made a statement under oath that they should discredit him. He did not think it was a case where credibility was of great importance, and if they found that the words were defamatory there was sufficient to connect them with the plaintiffs. If they held that the defendant's intention was merely to magnify his own virtues, in refusing to accept a second sale by postponing the other, then they would find for him.

The jury retired, and after about fifteen minutes' absence returned with a verdict for the plaintiffs for one shilling damages.

Sir H. Juta moved that judgment be entered for the plaintiffs, with costs, as that was evidently the intention of the jury.

De Villiers, C.J.: The plaintiffs could not possibly get costs.

Sir H. Juta said that no doubt the jury had considered the question of costs, and had embraced them with their verdict.

De Villiers, C.J.: No doubt they might intend it, but it is not within their province to decide the question.

Sir H. Juta urged that they must have taken that into consideration in fixing the amount. He would ask His Lordship to put it to them, and they might consider the point.

Mr. Burton objected to that course being adopted. The jury had given its verdict for one shilling, which was contemptuous damages. The question of costs lay with his lordship. He submitted the verdict was for one shilling damages.

Sir H. Juta, in reply, said that the jury had brought in their verdict, and it was clearly one of a shilling damages, with costs.

De Villiers, C.J.: The only question submitted to the jury was a question of damages. They have found for the plaintiffs in one shilling damages. As to costs, there will be no order, each party will have to pay their own.

Judgment was entered accordingly.

[Plaintiffs' Attorneys: Silberbauer, Wahl and Fuller; Defendants' Attorneys: Fairbridge, Arderne and Lawton.]

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP and the Hon. Mr. Justice KOTZE.]

EMBERSON AND SON v. MAXWELL.

1903.
Nov. 11th.
Dec. 1st.
" 3rd.
" 4th.

Building contract—Bill of quantities—Extras and deductions.

This was an action brought by Emberson and Son, plasterers, Woodstock, against James Maxwell, builder and contractor, Cape Town, to recover £107 4s., on a contract entered into in terms of bills of quantities, or, in the alternative, for work and labour rendered and materials supplied at the special instance, and request of the defendant.

The declaration stated that the defendant was the contractor for the erection of certain buildings in Barrack-street, Cape Town for Messrs. Robertson and Co. The plaintiffs said that the defendant entered into a contract with them for the performance of certain work, and the accepted tender was £334, which would, therefore, be the amount payable for the work according to the bills of quantities. The plaintiffs had to do the work in terms of the bills of quantities in which the contract was embodied, but plaintiff for the greater certainty, craved leave to refer to the terms of the written tenders when put in. The contract was entered into in December, 1902, and the work was begun in January, 1903, and finished in May last. In addition to the contract work—the plaintiffs said they had performed the contract, save as to certain portions of work which should, admittedly, be omitted, and for which a deduction was made later on—there were certain extras, and the plaintiffs said that they were entitled to claim in respect to these £83 17s. The defendant, in his plea, said that the amount of the extras should only be £23. While the plaintiffs' declaration said that the extras were extras for which the plaintiffs were entitled to claim at the rate provided in the said quantities, the defendant in his plea said, that extra work was not work set out in the bill of quantities. It appeared that there were no prices at all agreed upon until after the work was finished. There was a lump sum of £334 agreed upon for the work at the outset, but, with regard to the incidentals and other prices, no agreement was made. In the course of the work, two subsidiary contracts were entered into. One was for cement flooring, £127. The defendant took exception to an item of 960 yards of flashing. He said that 60 yards were omitted to be done by the plaintiffs, and he himself took off £7 17s. 6d. for 60 yards. The plaintiffs, on the other hand, said they were entitled to claim £13 2s. 6d. for 35 yards of granite cement flooring, and he set this off, although it was a larger amount, against the deduction defendant said should be made. The other subsidiary contract was for tuck pointing, £57. That item was not disputed. The next point in dispute was with regard to the deductions to be made, both as to values and measurements. The plaintiffs said that the amount of the deductions should be £54 19s. only, and the defendant said that the amount to be deducted was £92 5s. 9d. There was a dispute as to an item for keystones, there being a difference of £4 14s. between the parties under this head. The plaintiffs claimed £107 4s. The defendant said that £6 10s. 6d. represented the total amount owing by the defendant to the plaintiffs. He had tendered this amount in full settlement of the plaintiffs' claim, but plaintiffs refused to accept the tender. The defendant still tendered £6 10s. 6d. The plaintiffs in their replication admitted an error in the deductions to the amount of £4 14s., making a total for deductions against their account of £59 13s. With this amendment they asked for judgment as prayed.

Mr. McGregor (with him Mr. Russell) for plaintiff; Mr. Close (with him Mr. Smith) for defendant.

Evidence was called for the plaintiff.

Henry Emberson (the plaintiff) said he was one of the partners of the plaintiff firm. Witness spoke as to giving tenders to the defendant for the work in question. Nothing was said before work was commenced about extras. Witness did extras from time to time. Mr. Maxwell told him that all the extras would be paid for. Witness worked according to the bills of quantities. The work was finished in May. On the 11th June they sent an account for the balance, treated as contract account, for £83. He had received certain sums on account. He had no intention at that time of charging anything for extras or deductions. The account was sent back, and his son told him that it was not a proper account, and that a lot of deductions were to be made. Witness came to the conclusion that Mr. Maxwell wanted a detailed account. He went into the figures, and on the 13th June sent a further account, in which he brought up all the differences, showing both extras and deductions. Defendant objected that the prices of the bills of quantities were not shown; he wanted what was generally termed a schedule of prices. Witness sent a full statement on the 22nd June, giving bill of quantities and schedule of prices on which he had originally tendered.

Mr. Close objected that this was merely hearsay evidence, and the witness had not got a proper understanding from his son.

Mr. McGregor said this evidence was merely given in order to show the history of how the second account was sent in.

Witness (proceeding) said that he afterwards saw the defendant's son, and in consequence of what was said to him, he sent in one original schedule. In the tissue bills of quantities produced, on which witness tendered, there appeared prices which witness had not inserted. Up to that time they had not agreed upon any prices as to "extras." They had only made an agreement as to the lump sum. When he sent in the tissue bill of quantities to Mr. Maxwell, he did not receive any answer, and after waiting, he wrote to the defendant on the 8th August applying for a settlement. Mr. Steer wrote on the 20th August, on behalf of the plaintiffs, and the defendant replied that there was a little difference of opinion with regard to certain items, and that the plaintiffs ought to call and see if an agreement could be arrived at. Further correspondence ensued, in which Mr. Steer applied for details as to the items in dispute, and the defendant replied that they were quite willing to go into the matters with the plaintiffs if they called. Witness arrived at the extras by measuring the building and comparing the measurements with the details given in the bills of quantities.

Mr. Close intimated that the contention of the defendant was that the plaintiffs took the work on an inspection of the specifications and the plan, and that they took the responsibility for any difference.

Witness (continuing) gave evidence in support of various items in his claim and his deductions.

Maasdorp, J. (interposing) said it seemed to him that the questions were such as could not be settled by the Court without the assistance of an expert. One party said one price should be allowed, and the other party said another, and it would really be for an expert to decide.

Mr. McGregor admitted that there would be considerable difficulty in arriving at a fair basis.

Witness (continuing) said he got the tissue paper from Maxwell for the purpose of framing his tender, and on that he framed a tender for £334. He made a copy. Witness put down figures on the tissue paper in the money column; but these had reference to another job. He could not say what particular job this was. Witness afterwards rubbed the figures out.

By the Court: When witness returned the tissue paper to Maxwell on the 22nd June, the figures which now appeared on it were not there, to his knowledge.

Cross-examined by Mr. Close: The figures witness sent in on the stouter paper were taken from his book (produced). He made the book up before he sent in the tender. It was not agreed that the 35 yards of granite cement was to be treated as though it were ordinary cement. The cement thickness was an inch; the granite cement was two inches thick. The figures of the tissue were like witness's. Witness's eyesight might have been bad, and he might have thought that he had rubbed the figures out when he had not actually eliminated them from the paper. At all events, the figures on the tissue were not the figures he gave for the work.

Re-examined by Mr. McGregor: Witness sent the account showing extras on the 13th June. Maxwell had not asked for a schedule before this, nor had any prices been agreed upon. The granite cement was outside the 900 and the 960 yards, and witness's contention was that if 60 yards of cement were left undone, this would be covered by the extra granite cement.

By the Court: The granite and cement covered an extent of 960 yards.

Henry Alexander Emberson, son and partner of the last witness, gave confirmatory evidence as to the extra work done and the fairness of the charges. In June witness's father sent him with a short account, showing £83 to be due to Maxwell. The amounts for the deductions were fair.

Cross-examined by Mr. Close: He had not made any of the measurements on which the account was based. He had seen the tissue bills of quantities previously, but he had not observed the figures which now appeared in the document. He did not know whose figures they were, though he admitted that, in a sense, they looked like his father's. When deductions had to be made for work not done, they were always made on the basis of the prices in the bill of quantities.

Edmund James Sherwood, architect, Cape Town, said he examined the memorandum of extras and deductions in this case. He had looked at the matter from the point of view of values. He thought the flashing should be charged at the rate of 9d. per foot. He could not give a definite opinion as to the charge to be made for the moulding, though he should say, from the description given, that plaintiffs' charge of £5 15s. was reasonable. The charge of £3 4s. for the circular work was very reasonable, and the charge of £6 for four scrolls was also very reasonable. Witness expressed the opinion that the other charges made by the plaintiffs for extras were fair and reasonable. With regard to deductions, the prices in the bills of quantities formed the basis upon which all adjustments of differences were made.

Cross-examined by Mr. Close: He had not examined the building, but had simply looked into the schedule of prices. Anything outside the four corners of the bill of quantities was charged for or deducted at the current trade prices.

By the Court: In a case where a lump sum tender was accepted, the contractor could charge practically anything for extras so long as they were considered reasonable in view of the current trade prices. Where there was no agreed schedule of prices and a dispute arose such as this, he considered that it should have been referred to an expert.

Kotzé, J.: The Court is of the same opinion.

Evidence was then called for the defence.

James Maxwell (the defendant) said that when he arranged with the senior plaintiff about the contract, he showed him the plan and the schedule of quantities. They agreed to a tender of £334. After the work had been done some talk took place about a settlement, and witness asked for the original bill of quantities. After some delay he was supplied with the tissue-paper copy. He had not made any entries on this copy. The figures in the money columns were there when the copy was handed to him. He compared the figures with the account rendered, and found that there was a difference. He had been perfectly willing to adjust the accounts. Witness finally tendered £6 10s. 6d., in accordance with the account annexed to his plea. He arrived at this amount by the prices set out in the tissue-paper copy of the bills of quantities. There was an item of extra circular work in the cornice that he had not been able to take into account. He could not find that any extra circular work had been done. All contracts were lump sum contracts. In some cases the architects called upon the successful tenderer for his schedule of prices. At the end of the work the architect in some cases required the schedule of prices to be produced for the purpose of adjusting extras or deductions. He had been a builder in Cape Town for 20 years. Extras outside the schedule were paid for at current trade prices. Witness was being further examined as to the measurements of the work done by the plaintiffs, when Maasdorp, J. interposed, and suggested that it would be a very much better if a number of these points could be settled by an inspection of the building by some independent architect, to be agreed upon by the parties. This architect could then present a report for the guidance of the Court.

Mr. Close, after a consultation with his client, said he was prepared to consent to the suggestion. He thought, perhaps, that the architect of the building would be able to render useful assistance.

Mr. McGregor did not approve of this suggestion, and urged that a quantity surveyor of good standing should be appointed for the purpose.

It was agreed between the parties that the items in dispute in the document put in should be referred to Mr. A. D. Babbs for report with a direction to ascertain the measurements and the reasonable value of the work therein referred to.

The case was adjourned pending the filing of the referee's report with the Registrar.

Postea (Dec. 1):

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

Mr. Smith (for the defendant) intimated that he proposed to call evidence with reference to the prices set out in the report presented by Mr. A. D. Babbs, to whom the matter of the measurements and reasonable value of the work had been referred.

Further evidence was given by the defendant (James Maxwell), Thomas Davis, and Robert Tweedie Horsburgh (two master plasterers), and James L. Maxwell, son of the defendant, and employed as his bookkeeper and clerk.

This concluded the evidence.

Maasdorp, J. said that the case would have to stand over for argument by counsel until Mr. Justice Kotzé, who heard the earlier part of the case along with him (Mr. Justice Maasdorp), was able to be present.

Postea (Dec. 3):

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP and the Hon. Mr. Justice KOTZÉ.

Mr. McGregor argued that the Court should find in favour of the plaintiff, in accordance with the report of the referee (Mr. Babbs), to whom the question of the measurements had been referred, along with a list of reasonable prices for the extras and deductions. He applied for judgment in terms of the referee's report, which showed a balance in favour of the plaintiff of £62 12s. 5d.

Mr. Close said he was now in the position of having to accept the referee's report, as far as the measurements were concerned. The measurements, he took it, were a matter that was specifically within the province of a quantity surveyor. But the question of prices was quite another point, and belonged to the practical man in the trade. His contention was that the prices to be fixed by the Court were the prices which were set out in the blank form schedule supplied by the defendant to the plaintiff for the purpose of tendering. As far as the items were concerned in which there was provision in the bills of quantities, the defendant would be willing to take the referee's figures of the values. In regard to the deductions, they contended that there were schedule prices for every one.

Postea (December 4):

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP and the Hon. Mr. Justice KOTZÉ.]

Mr. McGregor (in reply) urged that the Court should not make a schedule of prices where the parties themselves had not made a schedule.

Kotzé, J.: That is quite clear, because the Court cannot make a contract where they have not made a contract for themselves.

Mr. McGregor said that, in the absence of an agreed schedule of prices, the Court should be guided by what was a reasonable and fair valuation. In support of this view, he quoted the evidence of Mr. Sherwood, who said that where there was no agreed schedule of prices, the matter should be referred to an expert. They had had no evidence as to a custom by Mr. Maxwell, although he seemed to suggest some custom. Counsel cited the case of Small and Morgan v. Young (4 Sheil, 48).

Maasdorp, J.: It appears that in December, 1892, the plaintiff and the defendant entered into an agreement whereby the plaintiff undertook for the sum of £334 to do certain work at buildings which were then being erected by the defendant, in accordance with certain bills of quantities then supplied to the plaintiff by the defendant. While the work was in progress, it was found necessary that certain extra work should be executed, and it was also discovered that some of the work which was mentioned in the bills of quantities would be unnecessary, and it was agreed that such work should be omitted. After the completion of the work the plaintiff sent an account, upon which he claimed a balance of £111 18s. In that account appears an item for certain extra work done, and another item for omissions, which the parties had agreed upon. It also seems that another rather expensive piece of work was agreed upon by the parties while the work was in progress, consisting of the concrete flooring of a yard, and also the performance of some tuck pointing. All these items now appear in the account upon which the plaintiff claims in his declaration. Many of the items are virtually admitted between the parties, and the dispute seems to centre round the value of the extras and of the deductions, with the addition of some trifling items which I may mention hereafter. The plaintiff, in claiming remuneration for the extra work done, says he is entitled to make his claim "at the rate provided in the said quantities," and at that rate it is stated that the extra work would amount to £83 17s. In going into the figures, it would appear that the bills of quantities throw very little light upon the matter of the extras, because they consist largely of work outside the description of that contained in the quantities, and it is now admitted by the parties that these extras almost wholly consist of work which cannot be estimated according to the rates provided in the quantities. There is only one exception; it is a small item of about £4, which will be allowed for in considering the balance as it now stands between the parties. Consequently, it is unnecessary to consider the question of the effect of the figures appearing upon the bills of quantities so far as the extras are concerned. The plaintiff claims that for the extra work he should receive a reasonable remuneration, and he values that at £83 17s. The defendant, on the other hand, states that a reasonable price for these extras would amount to £23 13s. 11d. It was found necessary, for the purpose of ascertaining the extent and measurement of the extras, and also to arrive at a conclusion as to reasonable prices, to appoint an architect who was disinterested in this matter, and who would give us an opinion as to the measurements and as to the prices, and the estimate he puts on it as a reasonable remuneration for the work is £52 8s. 5d., and I think we must come to the conclusion that we ought to accept the opinion of the architect, both as to the measurement of the work and as to fair remuneration, and to allow for the extras at the rate of £52 8s. 5d. When we, however, come to the deductions, it is necessary to consider another point. With reference to this also, the plaintiff claims that he is entitled to make an allowance for those deductions "at the rate provided for in the said quantities," and at that rate he makes the value of the deductions £54 19s. The defendant admits that he is bound by the figures given in the bills of quantities, and that those figures must decide the question between them; but he says, as to the measurements, he disputes the claim of the plaintiff, and also to the correctness of the figures given upon the bills of quantities. Here, again, for the purposes of measurements, we referred the matter to the architect, and he has given us a correct measurement of the work, and the only question that now arises is, upon what basis we are to value that work? Upon the pleadings, the parties are agreed that the work should be valued at the rates provided for in the said bills of quantities, and the Court has now to ascertain what the prices are upon these bills. When the plaintiff sent in his account to the defendant unaccompanied by the bills of quantities, he was requested by the defendant to supply him with that document in order to ascertain whether the account was correct upon the estimates there given. Thereupon, he was supplied with a document purporting to be the bills of quantities with the correct figures. The defendant, doubting the correctness of the figures as they appeared upon what seemed to be a copy of the original bills of quantities, asked to be supplied with the original bills of quantities, and thereupon the bills of quantities with which he supplied the plaintiff were produced by the plaintiff, and the defendant was then satisfied to have the account settled upon that basis. The Court has now to decide whether the value of the work is to be decided upon the bills of quantities which the plaintiff says is correct, or upon the one which seems to be the original document supplied to the plaintiff by the defendant, and upon which different figures appear. The plaintiff's counsel has attempted to explain the existence of these two different documents, and has argued that when the plaintiff made his claim he made it upon the copy which he considered genuine. Now, I think we ought to decide whether there was a honest belief in the mind of the plaintiff that the document he put in was a genuine document, and we can only test that by the rest of the evidence. He supplies the defendant with a document upon which the price of every single item is specified from first to last. There is a long column of figures, which, being totalled up, amount very nearly to the contract price. The plaintiff says that when he handed that document to the defendant it contained no figures at all, and that the figures must have been placed upon the document after it had got into the defendant's hands, and that would seem to me to amount to a charge against the defendant of introducing figures fraudulently for the purpose of supporting his case. Upon the whole of the evidence, it is not possible to come to any other conclusion than that those figures were deliberately placed there by the plaintiff himself for the purpose of valuing the work, and when he handed that document to the defendant it contained those figures, and any attempt at explaining the existence of other documents on the faith of the plaintiff's evidence, must fail. I am, therefore, of opinion that we must accept the document purporting to be the bills of quantities upon which the defendant bases his case, and, that being so, we find, instead of the deductions amounting to £54 19s., as stated by the plaintiff, they must be valued at £92 5s. 11d., and upon that basis the balance must be decided between the parties. As I said, there is another large item introduced with reference to the quantity of flooring, and there is some dispute as to the exact amount of work that was done. Here again we had the assistance of the architect's opinion. He has valued the work done, and has made some allowance for the deduction which the plaintiff claimed in that respect, and he puts the value of the work at the figure of £121 12s. 6d., only making a difference of a few pounds as between that and the estimate of the defendant. Upon going through the whole of these figures, I come to the conclusion that the plaintiff in claiming £111 18s. claims too much, and the defendant in tendering £6 10s. 8d. tenders too little, and the balance arrived at is the sum of £37 15s., and for that amount the plaintiff must have judgment, with costs.

Kotzé, J.: I am of the same opinion. I think the sum of £37 15s. upon the whole will be a fair amount to arrive at and to allow. I merely wish to add that I agree with my brother Maasdorp with reference to the tissue paper schedule, that is, I accept the statement of Mr. Maxwell that when he got that document the prices were all marked on it.

[Plaintiff's Attorney: A. W. Steer; Defendant's Attorneys: Reid and Nephew.]

Ex parte REINAUD.

Mr. Buchanan asked leave to move in this petition as a matter of urgency. The petition set forth that petitioner was formerly a partner in a business in Holland, which business had been taken over by the firm of A. van der Laun and Co., of Rotterdam. At the request of petitioner Messrs. Van der Laun and Co., had sent certain goods to petitioner's son in this colony, petitioner having paid £82 on account of the purchase price of these goods. It now appeared that Messrs. Bucknall Brothers, by one of whose vessels, the goods were shipped, had been instructed by cable from Van der Laun and Co. not to deliver the goods to petitioner's son, but to deliver them to Messrs. Jackson and Co., landing agent, Port Elizabeth. Petitioner alleged that by the action of Messrs. Van der Laun and Co., he had sustained damages in the sum of £1.000. He was desirous of instituting an action for damages, and now asked for leave to attach the goods in question ad fundandam jurisdictionem. He also applied that, in view of the liability of the goods (cycle parts and accessories) to deteriorate under attachment, and in view of the fact that he had already paid £82 on account of the goods, and had some parts which were useless without the goods now stopped, the Court would grant an order authorising the delivery of the goods to petitioner upon his paying into the hands of the Registrar of the Court the sum of £50, which would make up the total value of the goods.

A rule nisi was granted, returnable on December 12, calling upon the Bucknall Steamship Co., Ltd., and Jackson and Co. to show cause why they should not be interdicted from parting with the goods mentioned in the petition, pending proceedings to be taken by petitioner, the rule to operate as an interdict in the meantime.

Postea (December 16): The rule was made absolute.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.), the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP and the Hon. Mr. Justice KOTZE.]

ADMISSIONS.

Mr. Benjamin moved for the admission of John Grey Rutledge as an advocate.

Application granted and oath administered.

Ex parte BLAYNEY. { 1903. Nov. 12th.

Admission of Notary — Examiners.

The applicant passed the notary's examination before two advocates of the Supreme Court and a notary duly admitted by the Supreme Court, but the examination took place in Rhodesia. The applicant having been duly admitted as notary by the High Court applied to the Supreme Court for admission to practice in this Colony.

Held, that as the Act required two notaries and one advocate to be the examiners, the applicant was not entitled to admission.

Mr. Buchanan moved for the admission of Daniel Patrick Blayney as a notary public. Counsel read the petition of applicant, which showed that he was an attorney of this court, having been admitted under section 19 of His Majesty's Royal Charter of Justice. Formerly he applied for admission as a notary of the late High Court of Matabeleland; he satisfied three examiners, and was admitted. He was subsequently enrolled as a notary of the High Court of Southern Rhodesia.

Mr. Upington said that he appeared on behalf of the Law Society to oppose, but in view of recent decisions of this Court, he did not very well see on what ground one could oppose. It seemed to him to be more or less on all fours with previous applications, also of Rhodesian notaries. See Ex parte Holderness (13, C.T.R., 254); Ex parte Duff (13, C.T.R., 877). It seemed to him that the three examiners before whom the applicant appeared would be quite competent to act for this Court.

[De Villiers, C.J.: There is a difference between the two cases. The law says there shall be three examiners, two notaries and one advocate, while in the present case the examiners were one notary and two advocates.]

After hearing Mr. Buchanan further in support of the application,

De Villiers, C.J.: If all the examiners who examined the applicant had possessed the qualifications required by the 6th section of the Act, there would be no difficulty in granting this application. The recent decisions of the Court in regard to similar applications would have been a precedent to be followed but it appears that in the present case two of the examiners were advocates of the Supreme Court and not notaries, and only one of the examiners was a notary. The 6th section of the Act, however, is clear that one should be an advocate and two should be notaries. It is true that a certificate under the hand of two or more of the said examiners shall be sufficient, but it is necessary that the examination should take place before three qualified examiners. There is no great hardship in the present case, because if the applicant has already passed the examination before the three examiners mentioned, he will have no difficulty in passing an examination before three examiners as required, but without such examination, the Court is not justified in granting the order.

PROVISIONAL ROLL.

FAURE V. HOOLE AND CO. { 1903. Nov. 12th.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved for provisional sentence upon two promissory notes of £50 and £100 respectively, with interest at the rate of 6 per cent.

Order granted.

GOURLAY, CAVANAGH AND CO. v. GROMER.

Compulsory sequestration—Deed of assignment.

At a meeting of creditors of G. the creditors present agreed to sign a deed of assignment of G.'s assets for the payment of his debts. Subsequently a large creditor refused to sign the deed of assignment, whereupon the plaintiff on proof of G.'s insolvency obtained a provisional order for the sequestration of G.'s estate.

Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to an order of final sequestration.

This was an application for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate. A provisional order had been granted by Mr. Justice Kotzé. The defendant was Alexander Gromer, of 62, Tennant-street, Cape Town, and the deficiency in the estate was computed at £324 11s. 3d. A meeting of the creditors was held, at which it was agreed that the debtor should execute a deed of assignment, but some difficulty arose through one Herman refusing to sign, and, subsequently, as respondent had committed an act of insolvency, application was made to the Supreme Court by the plaintiffs for a provisional order for sequestration.

Affidavits of the defendant and others stated that the said Herman proposed the resolution in favour of the respondent making an assignment, and that, in consequence of this resolution, he handed over all his stock to his creditors. Certain of the creditors then went to 62, Tennant-street, and the said Herman took away about £70 worth of goods. Herman afterwards declined to sign the deed of assignment.

Mr. Upington (for the defendant) contended that it was most unfair that he should be put to extra expense by having his estate sequestrated merely because Herman refused to sign.

Mr. Gardiner (for the plaintiffs) said that Herman might have signed only upon a certain condition being embodied in the deed, and he did not see how they could compel Herman to sign the deed. He contended that the applicant was clearly entitled to come into court and apply for the final adjudication, and that it would be in the interests of the creditors that the estate should be sequestrated.

Mr. Upington said that had it not been for Mr. Herman's action no difficulty would have arisen at all. He submitted that the arrangement entered into between the defendant and his creditors should be carried out.

De Villiers, C.J.: It is common cause that the estate of the defendant is insolvent, and consequently the plaintiffs are entitled to have the estate sequestrated unless they have by their conduct debarred themselves of this right. It is said that there is estoppel, because they have signed a deed of assignment or rather promised to sign a deed of assignment, and undoubtedly if all the creditors had joined and consented to sign this deed of assignment the plaintiffs would have been estopped from claiming sequestration of this estate. It appears, however, that one important creditor, Mr. Herman, refuses to sign the deed. This gentleman was a party to the resolution, but he refuses to sign the deed of assignment, and until it is so signed it is inchoate, and, in my opinion, the plaintiffs are not bound to enter into litigation with creditors. The plaintiffs are justified in saying that if some of the creditors withdraw they will fall back upon the remedy which the law gives them, and that is exactly what the plaintiffs have done in the present case. If we regard the interests of creditors alone, it would seem to me that it is really in the interests of creditors that the sequestration should proceed. It does not appear that all the creditors were present at the meeting which agreed to the assignment, but it is said that there was a resolution passed to the following effect: "That the creditors present (not all the creditors) should at once proceed to the said Alexander Gromer's premises and remove any goods which they had sold to him, and take such goods back at cost price, and give the said William Stephen Cavanagh a credit note thereon." This is a most extraordinary resolution. It does not appear whether these goods had been sold on credit or for cash. If they had been sold for cash there may have been some justification for creditors going and removing their goods. If they had been sold for credit there would have been no justification whatever for taking such a step. It is said that the creditors consented to it, but it does not appear whether all the creditors were to share in this general raid upon the defendant's property, and looking at all the circumstances, I think it is really for the benefit of creditors that this sequestration should proceed, seeing that an important creditor like Herman refuses to be bound by the deed which he promised to sign. A final order of sequestration will be granted.

[Plaintiff's Attorney: J. G. Harsant: Defendant's Attorney: G. Scanlen.]

UNCOAT V. ADAMS.

Mr. Smith moved for provisional sentence on two mortgage bonds for the sums of £2,600 and £500, and interest according to the terms of the summons, and also for the sum of £18 5s. 9d., being the amount of insurance premiums disbursed. Counsel also asked that the property specially mortgaged be declared executable.

Order granted.

ESTATE OF ANDERSON V. TUROK.

Mr. Gardiner moved for provisional sentence on a certain deed of sale and purchase for £400, with interest and costs.

Order granted.

MANNIX V. CHAIT AND CROOMBER.

Mr. Buchanan moved for provisional sentence on certain conditions of sale for £270, with interest and costs of suit.

One of the defendants (Chait) appeared, and said he knew nothing about the sale. He was a partner of Croomber, who told him nothing about the purchase. They were partners in a bakery business. He had no knowledge of this transaction until he received the summons. Defendant made a declaration on oath to this effect. He did not know where Croomber was now. The partnership was existent when the purchase was made.

De Villiers, C.J., said he thought the plaintiff should have an opportunity of proving that Croomber had authority to sign on his behalf, even if he did not sign the conditions himself. The case would therefore stand over until the 18th inst.

MANNIX V. VICKAR AND CO.

Mr. Buchanan moved for provisional sentence upon certain conditions of sale for the sum of £135, being the purchase price of a certain lot of land situated at Plumstead. There was a clause that if the instalments of the purchase price were not paid, the whole of the amount of the purchase price became due.

The defendant appeared in person, and said that the previous day he had paid £45 on account, and £10 costs, and he understood the matter would not come before the Court.

Mr. Buchanan said that the first instalment was due three months ago and on the failure to pay the instalment, the whole amount became due, and he submitted the plaintiff was within his rights in asking for judgment for the whole amount.

De Villiers, C.J.: You are entitled to judgment, but I would suggest that the defendant should not be pressed at once, because he seems anxious to pay. Provisional sentence granted, less the sum of £25 paid on account.

Mr. Buchanan: Very well, my lord.

FISHER V. ADRIAANSSE.

Mr. Upington moved for provisional sentence on a certain promissory note for £50, with interest and costs.

Order granted.

EATON, ROBINS AND CO. V. VAN ZYL.

Mr. Buchanan moved for provisional sentence on a promissory note, with interest and costs.

Order granted.

BERGL V. CONRAD. { 1903. Nov. 12th.

Provisional sentence — Bill of exchange.

To a claim for provisional sentence against the acceptor of a bill of exchange, the defence was raised that the consideration for the bill was the delivery of 2,000 bags of oats, each bag containing 150 lbs., whereas the oats were actually tendered in bags containing a smaller quantity. It appeared, however, that the plaintiffs had rendered to the defendant, before he accepted the bill, an account shewing on the face of it that the bags contained less than 150 lbs.

Held, that as the price of the oats was at so much per 100 lbs. and not per bag, provisional sentence should be granted, leaving it to the defendant to raise his defence in the principal case.

This was an application for provisional sentence on a bill of exchange drawn by plaintiff upon the defendant and accepted by him for £685 6s., for value received.

The affidavit of the defendant, W. F. Conrad, of East London, stated that in the early part of the present year he entered into a verbal contract with plaintiff, whereby plaintiff undertook to deliver to him 2,000 bags of feed oats at 5s. 7½d. per 100 lb. from America, to be delivered, c.i.f., East London. On the 12th March, 1903, plaintiff wrote confirming the verbal contract, and mentioning that the bags would contain a uniform weight of 150 lb. each. Unless these bags contained a uniform weight of 150 lb. they would be unsaleable. On arrival of the oats, it was found that they did not contain uniform weight, and defendant wrote that unless plaintiff had the oats rebagged he could not accept them. The bags contained, on an average, 108 lb. oz. The bill of exchange was given in spect of these oats. Defendant alleged he had sustained loss owing to this breach of contract, and wished to bring an action for damages. He further stated that there was a breach in regard to the undertaking to deliver c.i.f.

In an answering affidavit, Mr. Bergl stated that he never undertook that the bags should contain a uniform weight of 150 lb. It was stated in the letter that they would contain 150 lb. in order to give defendant some idea of the weight of the bags. In June, before the oats arrived, an account was sent to the defendant, showing that the bags contained on an average 120 lb.

Mr. Buchanan for plaintiff; Mr. Upington for defendant.

After hearing counsel in argument on the facts,

De Villiers, C.J.: The plaintiff is entitled to provisional sentence upon the bill of exchange accepted by the defendant, unless the defendant can satisfy the Court that there is prima facie ground for holding that defendant would succeed in the principal case. I do not wish now to prejudice the decision in the principal case, but I will only say this: I am not satisfied that the defence disclosed in these affidavits is one that would finally succeed in the principal case. What the defendant bought was oats—a certain quantity of oats. True, these oats had to be in bags containing a certain quantity, but it does not appear that there is any warranty that every bag was to be of a uniform size, containing 150 lb., and unless there is such a warranty, I do not think the defence raised would be a good one. But, then, there is the further difficulty that the defendant, after he signed, accepted the bill with the full knowledge that the bags did not contain 150 lb. An account was rendered to him which specifies 2,000 bags of oats, containing 240,442 lb., at 5s. 7½d. per 100 lb. Now this works out at an average of a little over 120 lb. a bag. With the full knowledge that the alleged contract that each bag should contain 150 lb. had not been complied with, he accepted this bill of exchange, and I do not think the Court should now withhold provisional sentence. It will be competent for the defendant to enter into the principal case, and the plaintiff will give his security for the amount. The defendant can also claim such damages as he has sustained by any breach of contract he might prove, but at this stage I think provisional sentence should be allowed.

[Plaintiff's Attorneys: Friedlander and Du Toit; Defendant's Attorneys: Walker and Jacobsohn.]

TRIAL CAUSE.

BENDITZ V. BENDITZ.

This was an action brought by Charles William Benditz, a painter, residing at Claremont Flats, against his wife, Annie Benditz, now of Observatory, for divorce, on the ground of her adultery with one Green, and also for custody of two of the children. Mr. Russell appeared for the plaintiff. The defendant had been barred from pleading.

Charles W. H. Smith, clerk in charge of the marriage register at the Colonial Office, produced the duplicate copy of the register of the marriage.

Charles W. Benditz (the plaintiff) said that he was married to the defendant at the German Lutheran Church, Wynberg, on the 27th February, 1893. At the outset, witness and his wife lived with his parents. Subsequently, in 1901, witness left his wife and went to the front, arranging for £4 10s. to be paid out of his wages while at the front. On returning, after an interval of six months, he found that he was without a home, and he was unable to trace his wife. He went to the front again, and afterwards came down; but his wife was still absent, and he went to the front for a third time. He had ascertained that his wife was living at Observatory with a man named Green. Witness applied to have custody of the oldest and youngest of the three children. The other child was in defendant's custody, and she had told witness that he had no right to it.

Charles Blows, driver, said that the defendant was living at the Municipal Stables, Mowbray, with the stable foreman, Green. She gave it out that her name was Mrs. Green. Witness knew that the woman was Mr. Benditz's wife. Defendant and Green were living in the storeroom.

John Brunn, a Municipal employee at Mowbray, also gave evidence as to the defendant and Green living together.

Decree of divorce granted, plaintiff to have custody of the oldest and youngest children.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Chief Justice (the Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.), the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP, and the Hon. Mr. Justice KOTZE.]

WALKER V. WALKER. { 1903. Nov. 13th.

This was an action brought by George John Walker, of Port Elizabeth, against his wife for divorce on the ground of her adultery, also for declaration of forfeiture of the benefits of the marriage in community.

The declaration set out that the parties were married in community at Graham's Town, on the 3rd July, 1890, that the defendant deserted the plaintiff on the 24th February, 1898, and that thereafter she committed adultery, and gave birth to a child in 1890.

Mr. Benjamin for plaintiff; Defendant in default.

Chas. W. H. Smith, clerk in charge of the Marriage Register at the Colonial Office, produced duplicate of the registry of the marriage.

George John Walker (the plaintiff) said he was married to the defendant at Graham's Town on the 3rd July, 1890, in community of property. They lived together until February, 1898, when defendant deserted him, and he had not seen her since. Witness had a life insurance policy, the premiums on which had been paid by himself.

Mr. Benjamin explained that the two ladies, who were to give evidence as to the birth of a child to the defendant in 1900, had not arrived, owing to a misunderstanding between the attorneys. Counsel applied for leave for their evidence to be taken on commission, or for an affidavit to be sworn under the rules of Court. He suggested that Mr. Advocate Van der Riet be appointed commissioner.

The Chief Justice said that it should not be assumed that the evidence was conclusive. The Court would grant a commission to take the evidence of Ann J. E. Reynolds and Sarah Ann Curran, Mr. Advocate Van der Riet to act as commissioner. He thought that in future if parties knew that witnesses were not present an application should be made before the case was called. The case would stand over until the evidence taken on commission was given.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP and the Hon. Mr. Justice KOTZE.]

ESTATE OF LATE BASSON V. LAW ACCIDENT INSURANCE CO. 1903. Nov. 12th. .. 13th.
ESTATE OF LATE BASSON V. UNION INSURANCE CO. .. 30th. Dec. 3rd.

Life insurance—Proof of death.

These were two actions brought by Mrs. Basson, as executrix dative in the estate of her son, Jasper S. F. Basson, to recover £3,500 upon certain policies of insurance issued by the defendant companies. It was agreed that the cases should be heard together.

The declaration in the case against the Union Company set out that the defendant was sued in his capacity as manager for South Africa of the Union Company. On or about the 23rd November, 1901, the said Jasper Basson insured his life with the defendant company for £2,000, and obtained from the defendant a certain policy of insurance in respect of which he duly paid the annual premiums for two years. On or about the 3rd December, 1901, the said Jasper Basson insured his life with the said company for the further sum of £1,000, and obtained from defendant another policy, in respect of which he duly paid the annual premium for two years. On or about the 14th February, 1903, while both the said policies were still in force, the said Jasper Basson accidentally met his death by drowning in the sea, near the mouth of the Steenbraz River (Gordon's Bay), in the district of Stellenbosch. All things had happened to cause the said policies to be payable, but the defendants refused to pay the policies.

The defendant, in his plea, admitted the allegations in paragraphs 1, 2, and 3, of the declaration. He admitted that the policies were still in force on the 14th February, 1903, but he denied that the said Jasper Basson met his death on the said date or any other day. He admitted refusing to pay the policies, but denied that the refusal was wrongful.

The declaration in the case against the Law Accident Company set out that on or about the 19th July, 1902, the said Jasper Basson effected a life accident assurance policy for £500, and paid the premium. The declaration proceeded to set out the death of Jasper Basson on the 14th February, 1903, and the claim for £500

The defendants, in their plea, admitted paragraphs 1 and 2, and denied the allegations in paragraphs 3 and 4, and said that in terms of the policy mentioned in paragraph 2 of the declaration referred to they were not liable to pay to the plaintiffs the sum of £500, or any other or further sum in respect of the said policy, unless and until there should have been furnished to them by the plaintiff satisfactory proof of the death of Japer Basson by violent, accidental, external, and visible means. They said, further, that the plaintiff had failed to produce satisfactory proof either of the death of the insured, or his violent and accidental death, and was wholly unable to do so.

Thereupon there was joinder of issue, the plaintiff, in her replication, stating that on the 5th June, 1903, through her attorneys, she furnished to the defendant such proof of death as was required by the terms of the said policy.

Mr. Burton (with him Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers) for plaintiff: Mr. Searle, K.C. (with him Mr. Bisset) for the Law Accident Co.; Mr. Searle, K.C. (with him Mr. Benjamin) for the Union Co.

Mr. Burton said that in both cases the point at issue was the same. Although the plea in the Accident's Company's case denied the due giving of notice and so on, substantially the issue in both cases would simply be proof of death. Both the companies put the plaintiff to proof of death of the insured. That was a question of fact, which was remitted to the Court now upon the pleadings. Counsel put in the various documents as to presumption of death, and the correspondence which had passed between the plaintiff's attorneys and the companies.

Evidence was called for the plaintiff.

Anna Maria Basson, plaintiff, executrix dative to the estate of her late son Jasper, stated she was a widow, and had three sons. Jasper was the youngest, and was seventeen years of age. The agent of the Union Company (Mr. Murphy) had been to the house several times, and ultimately it was decided to insure Jasper's life for £2,000, and later on for another £1,000. Witness paid the premiums. At the time of the deceased's death, he was a temporary clerk in the Colonial Office. The boy was rather a careless sort of fellow, and after he had fallen into the hold of a ship, and was again nearly drowned in the Berg River, it was decided to insure him against accident in the Accident Assurance Company for £500. In consequence of Mr. Murphy's persuasion, the whole family were insured. She last saw her son on February 13, at Observatory. He said he was going for a holiday to Gordon's Bay. The other brother (Pierre) had gone to Gordon's Bay the previous day.

Cross-examined by Mr. Searle: Pierre was twenty-three years, Johannes twenty-one, and Jasper was 17½ years of age in January last. The reason she said he was insured was to give him a start in life, in order that he could borrow money on the policy. Pierre arranged the business with the insurance companies. First of all, £1.000 was applied for in the Accident Insurance, but only a policy for £500 was taken out. Her own policy was allowed to lapse before December, 1902. Johannes's policy might also have lapsed, as also did Pierre's. The only policy allowed to run was that of the deceased. She had given up the boarding-house at Observatory.

Pierre Cornaille Basson, brother of the deceased, said he was a speculator in land and scrip and property. On February 13 he saw his brother at Gordon's Bay. His brother was in good health. The next morning, at 4.30, they went fishing, in fairly good light. He had frequently fished in that vicinity, and his brother had also been there about half a dozen times. There was a little breeze, and the sea was fairly calm. It was about low tide. There was a cave called "Sewing Room," and they went down a little on this side of it to cut bait. Witness was standing with his back to the water. When he turned round, his brother was bending forward to cut bait. He then heard Jasper cry out, "Help." A wave dashed against witness, and threw him against the rock. When he turned round, he saw his brother rise to the surface, about 30 paces out. He rose to the surface back upwards, and practically sank immediately, and the body never came to the surface again. Witness could swim a little, but as there was a tremendous current, he could render no assistance. There was no chance of saving him, and it was hopeless to try to rescue the deceased. His brother could swim a little. After waiting about ten minutes, he returned to the hotel, and about the clump of fir-trees he met Dr. Ford, Mr. Deydier, and Mr. Nicholl, whom he told of the accident. Later in the day there was a search made for the body. Efforts were also made from the Strand, where £100 was offered for the recovery of the body.

Cross-examined by Mr. Searle: He did not go down to Holloway's Hotel by arrangement with his brother, although he expected him. He told Mr. Holloway his brother might come down. The night before his brother arrived he did not ask Mr. Holloway for fishing tackle. He had been out with Mr. Holloway in a boat the previous day, and he asked the latter where Le Roux was drowned. He was positive that he did not arrange for fishing tackle for his brother and himself with Mr. Holloway. He usually arranged for bait before he went out, and it was untrue that Mr. Holloway told him he could not possibly cut bait before eleven o'clock next morning. His brother was in the act of cutting bait when he was washed away. He could not say that it was shortly after spring tide and high tide when they arrived at the spot. About 6.15 a.m. they began cutting bait, and the accident would have occurred about 6.30 a.m. He did not remember Mr. Deydier taking out his watch and showing him it was 6.35 a.m., although the fir trees were a long way from the rock. He did not say to Mr. Deydier that he would get some doctor at Wynberg, or Rondebosch, to break the news to his mother. He told Mr. Deydier that he had waited about ten minutes after the accident. Mr. Deydier did not remark to him that it was strange that he went out fishing in his Sunday clothes. He denied telling Mr. Deydier that the wave washed him over and over. He was positive that he was wet through. There was a kind of thick mist when he met Dr. Ford and the officers. Holloway did not tell him to go and get a boat.

He did not point out three different spots as the scene of the accident to Mr. Holloway and Mr. Swart. They never offered to land him until he would get something he had left on the rock. He denied that he offered Swart £50 if the body was recovered, and £5 if nothing was done. In the boat he offered £100 to anyone who recovered the body. He did not say to the barman, "Good morning. I have had some bad luck," when he returned from the accident. He left the hotel the morning of the accident, and returned a few days later, and asked the barman if anyone had seen him leave the hotel. When Cruse said he saw him he did not bring him into the billiard-room, and offer him £25 if he would make an affidavit. He had two declarations ready for Cruse and Mr. Holloway, and the declarations were worded by witness. The declaration stated that Cruse was on the stoep the morning they went fishing, and that witness was dripping wet, and that he had his brother's hat in his hand when he returned. Later on Cruse said the affidavit was incorrect, and that he would not take £25.000 for an incorrect affidavit. The declaration was signed between the billiard-room and the bar. If his brother was a first rate swimmer, he would have competed in races. He did not believe that his brother could swim half a mile. Between 9 and 10 that morning a very rough sea got up. He paid the premiums on the policies for his mother. He had made a proposal to the S.A. Mutual for £1.000 this month. Witness went down to the Strand to tell his uncle about the disaster. He saw his uncle and Mr. Frank Scholtz at the bazaar.

Re-examined by Mr. Burton: He had never fished at that particular rock.

By the Chief Justice: His mother had a little money.

Daniel Hermanus Du Toit, contractor, said he knew the coast to be a dangerous one in the nighbourhood of the Sewing Room Rock. Le Roux and Van Schoor were drowned in that neighbourhood. Their bodies were never found. He remembered meeting the deceased in February last. Holloway told witness that Basson was drowned, and they met Pierre coming to meet Holloway. He seemed to be downhearted, and his clothes were all wet.

Cross-examined by Mr. Searle: He saw Pierre before he went to get the boat. It was not raining at the time. He could not say that he looked as if a wave had washed over him. Pierre was not wearing fishing clothes at the time. It was just before the boat went out he saw Pierre.

By the Chief Justice: He had never himself got red bait at high water at that spot.

Peter Millar, fisherman, Gordon's Bay, said he knew the whole coast, but it was necessary to know it, otherwise fishing would be dangerous. He remembered, when Van Schoor was drowned, hearing his cries for help. He disappeared, and immediately afterwards a large shark followed the boat. Red bait could be gathered at high tide if the water was quiet. He had done so himself, but never at spring tide.

Cross-examined by Mr. Searle: It would have to be very calm to get it at high water, and it would be necessary to have a hook. Witness thought he knew a little more about the coast than Mr. Holloway. At high tide it would be necessary to get up to the waist in water. At spring tide, there were places where it was possible to get the bait at 3 feet. He had cut bait at low tide at the Sewing Room Rock. A couple of weeks afterwards the spot was pointed out to him.

Anthony Robert Edward Nicol, clerk in the Colonial Office, Cape Town, said he was at Gordon's Bay on the 14th February last. He went out fishing. He met Pierre Basson coming from the direction of Steinbras River. Basson told witness that his brother had been drowned.

The Chief Justice: Did he seem very much agitated?

Witness: No, he did not.

The Chief Justice: Was he confused?

Witness: He was a bit confused in his way of speaking. He seemed rather surprised at having met people there. Witness (continuing) said that Pierre Basson's clothes were wet, probably owing to the rain. He did not think the man's clothes were wet as if a breaker had passed over him.

Mr. Burton said that the witness placed him in a very awkward position, because he had stated in his declaration that Pierre was dripping wet, and very much agitated.

Witness (continuing the evidence) said that when he signed the declaration he was very busy, and he simply read through the declaration once. He asked the attorney to wait, but he was pressed to sign, and as he was very busy, he signed it. The declaration was supplied to him. Young Basson had asked him if he would make an affidavit, and witness said he would. He did not make any statements to young Basson. Afterwards Basson brought this declaration round to him ready to be signed. He made this declaration in order to do Basson a favour. He did not read over and study the declaration as he would have done if he had known the case was coming into court. He should have been guilty of false swearing if he had said in court that Pierre Basson was very much agitated, or was dripping wet, as if a breaker had passed over him. He did not realise at first that this was going to be such a serious case. Alterations were made in the second affidavit, the word "dripping" being erased, and the word "confused" substituted for "agitated."

Cross-examined by Mr. Searle: As far as witness knew, it would be quite impossible to obtain bait at that time of the morning during high tide. Pierre Basson did not strike witness as if he were much upset when they met him. After witness had heard his tale, he remarked to Basson, "Well, young man, you don't appear to have realised your loss." His clothes had not the appearance of having been knocked against the rocks by a wave.

Pierre Basson (recalled), said, in answer to the Chief Justice, that the water was over the bait about 18 inches when he was cutting it. He rolled his sleeve up, and cut the bait away. It was a very sudden wave that swept them away. Witness did not desire to break the news of his brother's death to his mother. The Rev. Mr. Pienaar communicated the intelligence to her.

Postea (November 13):

[Before the Chief Justice (Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS), Mr. Justice MAASDORP and Mr. Justice KOTZE].

Pieter Behrend Swart, of Gordon's Bay, said he had been practically all his life a fisherman at the Bay, and was well acquainted with the coast between there and the Steenbras River. He was with the boat that took Pierre Basson and Holloway out to search for the body of Jasper Basson. They went to within fifteen yards of the rock where Pierre said that Jasper had been knocked off. It was near the Sewing Room Rock (Naaikamer), about 400 or 500 yards on the Gordon's Bay side. He had fished at the spot pointed out by Pierre. Plenty of bait was to be had there. It was possible to cut bait there at the quarter—between spring tide and neap tide. He should say that it would be possible to cut bait at about 6.30 on the morning in question. There would be a risk to those who were not accustomed to the vicinity of being washed off the rock. All along the coast there was a strong "back draught" from the rock. About a year ago Mr. Roos's son was washed off the rocks, while he was cutting red bait. The current was very strong, and it would be extremely difficult for anybody who was washed into the sea to regain the rocks.

Cross-examined by Mr. Searle: The place pointed out by Pierre as the spot where his brother had gone down was known as Ruigte Vlei. They did not go to the Sewing Room Rock (Naaikamer). The point was about 400 or 500 yards beyond Ruigte Vlei, towards the mouth of the Steenbras River. When they went out the sea was not rough. There was not a stiff breeze blowing. A man might have jumped from the boat to the rock that morning.

Jan Stephanus Roos, fisherman, Gordon's Bay, said he was told by the men who went out with the boat where Jasper Basson had been drowned. He had cut red bait at that spot. He had cut bait two or three hours after high water. It was dangerous to fish off the rocks there. He had been washed off the rocks at a point closer to Holloway's Hotel, when he had been cutting bait.

Cross-examined by Mr. Searle: He was washed off in a calm bay. He managed to swim back to shore. The place was pointed out to him by Swartz and Pierre Basson. He did not recognise Ruigte Vlei by the photograph produced. He could cut bait there when the water was "half." He would not think of going to cut bait there at high tide, but he might do two hours afterwards. He did not always wait until low tide, but he generally waited until low tide if he could do so. It was not possible to cut red bait during spring tide.

Jasper Albertus van Niekerk, retired farmer, Newlands, and an elder of the Wynberg Church, said plaintiff was his cousin. He recollected Pierre Basson making a report to him one Saturday evening in February last. In consequence, witness advised him to send for Mr. Pienaar.

By the Court: Witness went to see the plaintiff on the following Monday. Pierre seemed very sad when he called at witness's place. He appeared to feel his loss.

This concluded the plaintiff's case.

Evidence was called for the defendants.

Edward Richard Holloway, proprietor of Holloway's Hotel, Gordon's Bay, said he had lived at Gordon's Bay for ten years. Pierre Basson came to his hotel on Thursday, February 12, saying that he would stay for a couple of days. His brother arrived on the Friday night. On Friday, witness and Pierre went out fishing in a boat. While they were out Pierre asked him where Le Roux was drowned. Witness pointed out the place --Ruigte Vlei. Le Roux was drowned in 1882. His name was painted on the rock. Beyond witness's house there was no house of any kind along the coast until beyond Cape Hangklip, 25 miles away. On the Friday night Pierre asked him to lend him fishing rods. Witness asked if he had any bait. Pierre said he could cut bait. Witness told him he could not cut bait before 11 o'clock, because of the tides. Witness had had considerable experience of fishing both from a boat and rock. Witness did not see the brothers leave on the morning. He left two fishing rods outside the hotel for them. About five minutes to seven he saw Pierre. He did not see the brothers set out. On his return, Pierre said he had had an accident. Witness said, "Have you lost my fishing tackle?" Pierre said, "My brother has got drowned." Witness said, "What, your brother got drowned? You had better get a boat. Go down to Swart's and I will follow you." Pierre did not seem to be much upset. There were a few sprinkles of water on his clothes, but his clothing did not appear to have been washed by a wave. A crew was got together with one Swart as skipper. Pierre first pointed to a little island. Witness told him that it was impossible to reach that rock. Then Pierre pointed to another spot, a short distance away, towards witness's house. Finally Pierre pointed out Ruigte Vlei. Pierre did not say anything to witness about the Sewing Room Rock. There was about 6 feet of water from low to high tide. The bait grew under the water. Swart offered to go into the water at Ruigte Vlei. It would have been possible to land there. Pierre said he had left something on the rock, and Swart then offered to put in. Pierre said in the boat it was no good looking for the body, as they would not find it. The wind came up afterwards, and they had to get away. They got back at about 9 or 9.30. When they went out, there was no heavy swell; there were choppy seas. Pierre sent witness afterwards with an affidavit prepared for him to sign. First, a declaration was brought to him in the same terms. The affidavit was correct. At this particular point there was an awkward drawback, which made it difficult to swim.

Cross-examined by Mr. Burton: A swimmer, even if a good one, could not get back, owing to the drawback. Witness agreed as to the probability of a wave suddenly coming up and washing a man away if he did not get back Witness could walk from Ruigte Vlei to the Steenbras River in an hour. Witness was quite sure bait could not have been cut at six o'clock. Witness had heard what Roos had said. Roos could not cut bait with a knife two hours after high water. It could be done with a hook. Witness used a hook 7 feet long.

Mr. Burton: It did not strike you that there was anything suspicious about the behaviour of Pierre or his brother before they went out?—Witness: Nothing at all.

Cross-examination (continued): When witness went out in the boat, they kept about 15 yards from the coast. Pierre was not at first quite certain about the spot, but finally pointed out the locality. Witness agreed with Pierre that it was no good looking for the body. When he said this, Pierre was beginning to get seasick. Witness saw nothing suspicious in Pierre's conduct.

Re-examined by Mr. Searle: They were about 15 yards from the island when Pierre pointed out the first island. Witness told him Jasper could not have got on there. The three islands pointed out by Pierre were not at all alike.

By the Court: The brothers had a double-bedded room at the hotel. They had only two small bags, so far as witness noticed. The elder brother came to the hotel first. The only way in which one could get to the island first pointed out by Pierre was by boat. Pierre wore a light suit, on which water would show. He only saw a few sprinkles on the jacket.

Auguste Joseph Mare de Postle Deydier said he had lived at Caledon for 15 years. He was formerly Mayor of Caledon. On the morning in question witness went fishing with Dr. Ford and another gentleman. They took bait, because he knew they would be unable to get any at high water. They arrived at Holloway's at 5.45, outspanned, and walked on. Witness saw a man coming along slowly with two rods. He saw the man from a distance; he was not running. He met the man about 20 minutes' walk from Holloway's. The man, whom he identified as Pierre, called witness by name, saying "Good morning." He asked witness if he was going fishing, and witness replied it was a queer question to ask, seeing he (witness) was carrying a rod. He told witness not to go. Witness asked why, and he said an accident had happened, his brother having been drowned. Witness asked if he could do anything, and he replied in the negative, saying he had watched for 15 minutes. He was no more agitated than when he was in the box on the previous day. One of the legs of his trousers was wet, and the other was wet up to the knee. He said he was going to get a doctor to break the news to his mother. Witness asked him where the accident had happened, and he indicated a point about 15 minutes' walk away. He told witness that when the accident happened he was standing with his back to his brother, about 15 yards away. A wave came and washed him (Pierre) over and over into the gully. When he got up, his brother had disappeared. He pulled a straw hat out, and said that was all he had of his brother. Witness remarked that it was very strange he did not have the coat, as people who went fishing usually took off their coats. Pierre said that it was a new hat, and his brother put it on the rock, with two stones in it, to prevent it from blowing away. Witness also remarked upon the fact that Pierre was fishing in his Sunday clothes, and he replied that his brother was fond of fishing, and had sent him a letter asking him (Pierre) to meet him, in order to go fishing. They met at 6.35. Witness remembered looking at his watch. Pierre also looked at his, which showed the time to be 6.10.

Pieter Barnard Swart, cousin of the previous witness Swart, said he knew the Bassons by sight. Pierre came to him about 8 o'clock on the morning in question. He told witness his brother was drowned. He was cool at the time. He asked witness to get up a crew and a boat, and try to find the body of his brother. Witness got a crew. Holloway came with them. The witness gave evidence corroborating that of Holloway as to what occurred when they were in the boat. The places pointed out by Pierre were not like each other; he did not think anyone could mistake one for another of the three. It was a calm morning, but by the time they got back there was a good breeze blowing. Witness knew it was impossible to get bait there at high water; he had never tried. Witness only tried to get bait an hour before or an hour after low tide. Pierre changed his clothes before entering the boat at witness's house. Witness gave him a boating outfit.

The Chief Justice: Why did he change his clothes? Were they wet?

Witness: They were wet to the knees; it was raining that morning.

In reply to further questions by Mr. Searle, witness said he heard nothing about £100 reward.

Cross-examined by Mr. Burton: Witness would say the trousers were wet owing to contact with the wet bushes while walking. There were only a few sprinkles on the coat. Witness specially observed the conditions of the clothes, because of Pierre's statement that he had been washed over. Pierre mentioned Ruigte Vlei before they entered the boat. He appeared to be uncertain as to the spot.

Re-examined by Mr. Searle: Witness had seen Pierre fishing along there three or four times previously.

Pieter Greers, farmer, said that several years ago the Bassons used to live at Somerset Strand, where their father used to keep a boarding-house. Witness had seen Jasper swimming out to meet fishing boats. Witness considered him a good swimmer.

Cross-examined by Mr. Burton: Witness had only seen Jasper swimming in the bay, when it was calm.

Re-examined by Mr. Searle: He considered Jasper one of the best swimmers in the Strand.

Albert Greers gave similar evidence.

Groot H. W. Kruse, barman at Holloway's Hotel, said he remembered the brothers coming to the hotel. He saw them going off on the morning in question at about 4.30. He next saw Pierre at about seven o'clock, when Pierre came up, and said, "Good morning, I had some bad luck this morning." Witness said, "Did'nt you get any fish?" He said, "No; my brother was drowned." He then walked off towards the hotel. He seemed very cool. Witness saw him go away in the boat. Afterwards Pierre came in the bar, and asked for a drink. He asked witness if anyone saw them going away that morning. Witness said he had. Pierre then said he would like to see him privately. They went into the billiard-room, and Pierre told witness he would give him £25 if he would sign an affidavit. Witness said, "Certainly, I will give an affidavit." They then returned to the bar. Some days afterwards Pierre came to the hotel in company with Mr. Robertson, J.P. Pierre showed him an affidavit. Witness read it, and said he could not sign it, as it was not correct. Pierre said, "You remember, I offered you £25," and witness replied, "I would not sign a wrong affidavit if you gave me £25,000." The first statement to which witness took exception in the affidavit was that he was standing on the stoep when the brothers went out. This was not so. The second statement to which he objected was that when he saw Pierre he was dripping wet; whereas he was not wet. Another statement in the affidavit was that Pierre showed witness his brother's hat. He did not do so. Witness had these statements struck out, and then signed the affidavit. A second affidavit was sent to him, and out of this he struck out the statement that Pierre was agitated. He also struck out the statement that Pierre told him Jasper was washed off while trying to get bait.

Cross-examined by Mr. Burton: He admitted that he first signed a declaration in which he stated that about 4.30 a.m. he saw from his window the two brothers leaving the hotel, that he saw Pierre about 7.30, that Pierre was "very much agitated," and his clothes were "dripping wet." He read the affidavit when he signed it before Mr. Robertson, J.P. His only excuse was that he, not being a Britisher, might have overlooked the words "very much agitated" in the affidavit. He did not know the meaning of the word "agitated" at the time; he understood it now. He asked Mr. Robertson to erase several words in the affidavit. He did not think that Pierre told him that his brother had been washed off the rocks; he was not sure; he admitted that he said Pierre had told him so in his first declaration. He remembered seeing Jasper wearing a straw hat on the morning of the accident.

Re-examined: Anything that had been struck out of the first declaration had been struck out at his own request.

Frank Arthur Shephard gave evidence as to taking the photographs produced in the case. The spots were pointed out to him by D. P. Swart.

Cross-examined by Mr. Burton: The photos were taken not from the sea, but the rocks.

Arthur Henry Bullen said his firm were managers in South Africa of the Law Accident Co. In 1902 there was a proposal for £1,000. He declined to accept a proposal for more than £500, because he did not think the position of the assured warranted such a policy. An accident policy of £1,000 provided for compensation at the rate of £6 a week, and as he did not think Jasper Basson would be receiving such a salary, he only issued a policy providing for compensation at £3 a week.

Cross-examined by Mr. Burton: After the accident he saw Mr. Michau, plaintiff's attorney, and told him that they did not consider the proof of death satisfactory. He did not remember saying that it would be necessary to obtain the evidence of the people who saw the brothers go out and Pierre return.

Josiah James Brown, general manager in South Africa of the life branch of the Union Insurance Company, spoke to the issuing of the policies to Mrs. Fasson, and her three sons—Johannes, Pierre, and Jasper. All the receipts were signed by Pierre C. F. Basson, except that Johannes signed his own. Pierre called at the society's office early in 1902, and spoke about his policy. Witness believed the conversation was in some way connected with the irregulars, who went to the front, and how their policies would be affected. Pierre said that unless the company agreed to what he wanted, it was in his hands whether the policies would be continued upon renewal or transferred to another company. Pierre said that he was paying the premiums. In February last Pierre again came to the office, and he said that his brother had been drowned. Only one form was filled; that was as to identity.

Mr. Searle put in the tide tables for January and February of this year, and the receipts for the policies.

This concluded the evidence, and counsel were heard in argument.

Mr. Burton said there was only one question of fact to be decided, and that was as to whether satisfactory proof had been given of death. In the first place, one had to ask what were the terms of the policies. The Union Insurance Co. said that "within one month after death it shall have been duly certified to the directors." The Law Accident's terms were set forth in the plea: "The society will not be liable for any claim unless notice thereof be received within three months after the occurrence of the accident, nor until satisfactory proof of injury, death, or loss is furnished to the society; in all cases the certificates, affidavits, and information to be given shall be such as the society require and shall be furnished at the expense of the assured, or his legal representative." Counsel quoted Porter on Insurance (p. 215), May's Law of Insurance, and the case of Doyle v. City of Glasgow Insurance Co. (Law Times Reports, New Series, vol. 50, p. 323), on the point as to what constituted satisfactroy proof of death. Counsel went on to say that both the pleas of the defendants only denied the death. The case made out to the Court is a case based upon direct suggestion of fraud. There was no doubt that the case hung upon the evidence of Pierre Basson. The plaintiff's case stood or fell by that evidence. If it were not reliable testimony, then the plaintiff had not established her case. He would first draw the attention of their lordships to the fact that the defendants had not shown that Pierre's character was not perfectly good. He came before the Court with an unblemished reputation. His evidence was good; the story he gave was lucid and straightforward. It was clear that Pierre was not to benefit by this alleged concoction. He was not the heir. The results of the insurance would come to his mother. Pierre had been cross-examined, and counsel submitted that his narrative did not bear the slightest element of improbability. Mr. Burton analysed the evidence, and remarked that the evidence now given by the witnesses Nicol and Kruse, in view of the readiness with which they signed the declarations when they were asked by Pierre, was very strange. Their conduct was inexplicable. Counsel reviewed the various incidents of the morning, when the accident was said to have occurred, and the evidence of the various witnesses in its bearing upon the story told by Pierre, maintaining that in all material details his account was perfectly consistent, and bore every semblance of truth. He contended that reliable and satisfactory evidence, as to the conditions of the locality, the probability of such an accident occurring, and so forth, had been laid before the insurance companies with regard to the death of Jasper Basson.

Mr. Searle said that the question for the Court was whether they were satisfied beyond all reasonable doubt with the story told by Pierre Basson. This was a case where the onus was really upon the plaintiff entirely. Counsel, referring to his evidence, said that witnesses who were called by the defendants were the very people who were originally asked by Pierre Basson to make declarations. That, he contended, was very singular. His learned friend said that his case must stand or fall by the evidence of Pierre Basson. He (Mr. Searle) submitted that the Court could not be satisfied with that evidence, in view of the evidence given by a number of impartial and reliable witnesses, who could have no interest in the case. The important features of the case were the statements given by Pierre Basson with regard to the circumstances under which the accident was said to have happened. It was very doubtful even yet where Jasper was alleged to have been drowned—whether the Sewing Room Rock or Ruigte Vlei. Counsel commented on the evidence as to Pierre's identification of the scene of the accident, the state of his clothing when he was met coming back again after the accident, his general conduct in view of the alleged loss of his brother, the incident of the cutting of bait, the offer of £25 by Pierre to Kruse to swear an affidavit, and the supplying of affidavits already prepared to witnesses to sign. Counsel submitted that Pierre's demeanour was not consistent with the story of the loss he had sustained. The circumstances which had transpired in the evidence were such, he contended, as to throw the gravest suspicion on Pierre's evidence. He submitted that his evidence was not such as to be regarded as satisfactory proof of the death of Jasper Basson. As to the possibility of Jasper getting away, Mr. Searle urged that it was the easiest thing in the world for Jasper to have got away. As to the question of Pierre's benefit, he might not benefit entirely, but he would be one who would get some benefit.

De Villiers, C.J. (to Mr. Searle): What share can the dead man get? According to your theory, he is still alive?

Mr. Searle: Oh, yes; they must arrange that between them. I don't suppose he is in a very "get-at-able" neighbourhood at present.

Mr. Burton: That is what we say.

[Kotzé, J.: If the other brother, as you say, is still alive, he must be a party to this. Could he ever appear in South Africa again?]

[De Villiers, C.J.: He would be ostracised for life. He can never set foot in South Africa again.]

Mr. Searle: He might come back under some other name, and never be discovered. Counsel (continuing) said that the brother Pierre had a motive, and that was, that he would share in the insurance money.

Mr. Burton: Yes, he would be entitled to one-eighth.

Mr. Searle said that stories of this kind had been concocted for less than £300 or £400. He submitted that there had not been supplied to the insurance companies a reasonable and probable story, corroborated in some important details by impartial witnesses. Counsel also commented on the large amount in which Jasper's life had been insured, and the fact that the other policies had been allowed to lapse.

Mr. Burton (in replying) submitted that the question as to the scene of the accident, arising out of Pierre's evidence, was merely a question of nomenclature.

De Villiers, C.J., after consulting with the Court, asked if the parties could agree upon someone to go with Pierre Basson to the spot where he said his brother was drowned, and also to obtain certain information for the Court.

Counsel agreed to the name of the Resident Magistrate (Mr. d'Olivier).

De Villiers, C.J.: The case will stand over, and in the meantime the Court will be glad if Pierre Basson would point out to Mr. d'Olivier the exact spot where the accident took place, and Mr. d'Olivier is requested by the Court to go there and inspect the place, take the distance from the Sewing Room Rock, and, if possible, to inspect this place at spring tide and two hours after spring tide, and to see also whether there is any red bait growing there, and what depth it would be under water two hours after spring tide. The Court trust that Mr. Pierre Basson won't go there before that time. He is expected to wait till Mr. d'Olivier goes before he goes to the place.

Postea (November 30):

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers (for the plaintiff) said the Magistrate of Somerset West had been subpœnaed in accordance with the order of Court, and was now in attendance to give evidence. Mr. Searle, K.C. (with him Mr. Benjamin and Mr. Bisset) was for the companies.

J. d'Oliveira, Acting Assistant Resident Magistrate of Somerset West, read the report of the inspection which he had made of the scene of the accident. It was in the following terms: "In compliance with the instructions contained in your letter of the 17th inst. on the above subject, I have the honour to report that I inspected the spot yesterday (November 19) where the accident is alleged to have taken place.

The spot was pointed out to me before, and again at 3.20 p.m. (spring tide), by Mr. Pierre Basson. There were also present at the time Mr. Bullen and Mr. Brown, representing the companies concerned, and Mr. Robertson, a representative of Messrs. Fairbridge, Arderne and Lawton, and some other witnesses, including Trooper Loots and Messrs. Holloway and Muller. The weather overhead was fine. The sea was running fairly high, owing to a south-east wind blowing. From a rock higher and about 40 yards away, I watched Pierre Basson pointing out the spots on which he had stood and his brother. With the exception of my visit to the Sewing Room Rock, I remained in view of the spot. At 5.20 p.m., that is to say, two hours after spring tide, I took observations at the spot. The rock on which the deceased, as pointed out, was standing is a very dangerous one. The sea came sweeping over it, and no person, in my opinion, could or ought to stand there to fish unless he practically intends to commit suicide. The rock pointed out by Pierre Basson as the one on which he himself had stood I watched carefully for eleven minutes after, and not once did the sea go over that rock. There is a great quantity of bait growing at the spot. In a gully between the rock where the deceased is alleged to have stood and another rock, Fisherman Muller cut, with a knife, bait at 5.5 p.m., and did so again twice afterwards. He did not get wet, but he is evidently a man of great experience, and watched the receding waves. The water passes through the gully, and opportunity was then taken by him to get at the bait. Muller had some sprays over him from another rock before he cut the bait. There was no depth of water when the bait was cut. From the spot where the alleged accident took place to the Sewing Room Rock is about 500 or 600 yards. I took five minutes to walk the distance. It was difficult, owing to the nature of the ground, to pace it. Three men tried it, and all varied, viz., 508 yards, 535, and 598 yards, so that it may safely be taken to be not less than 500 and not more than 600 yards. From the spot where the accident took place to Holloway's Hotel, I walked in 55 minutes, without exerting myself."

By the Court: He met Pierre Basson at Holloway's Hotel and they walked towards the spot together. There was no one on the rock when they came in sight of it, though they had been informed that there were two men there when they were on the way. Witness, however, gave instructions that they should go away, and when they came in view of the rock no one was near. Witness saw bait cut there an hour and three-quarters after spring tide. Witness did not cut bait there, because he did not desire to risk his life. Witness afterwards saw men fishing at the spot.

By Mr. Searle: Pierre Basson pointed out the place where he was standing on the day of the accident, and also where his brother was standing. Pierre went to the place without hesitation.

By Mr. De Villiers: Witness did not stand on the rock where the two men had been. He would not stand there for a million pounds.

De Villiers, C.J., said that it was, unfortunately, impossible to decide the matter now, as Mr. Justice Kotze, who also sat when the trial took place, was engaged elsewhere. They would have to consult him before they gave judgment.

Postea (December 3):

De Villiers, C.J.: This is an action brought by the executrix of the estate of Jasper Basson against the Union Assurance Company to recover the sum of £3,000, being the amount of policies of assurance on his life granted by the defendant company. The first policy for £2,000 was issued in November, 1901, and the second for £1,000 was issued in December, 1901, and the premiums were duly paid as they fell due. The plaintiff alleges that on the 14th of February, 1903, while both the policies were still in force, the assured met with his death by drowning in the sea near the Steenbras River Mouth, in the district of Stellenbosch, but the defendant company denies that he met with his death in that or in any other manner. On the 21st of April last Pierre Basson, the brother of the assured, applied to this Court for an order on the Master to accept the notice which had been forwarded to him of the death of Jasper Basson, and to convene a meeting for the election of an executor dative to his estate. The application was supported by several affidavits, including that of Pierre

Basson, who stated that he saw his brother washed from the rocks on the day in question, that his brother rose to the surface once, then sank, and was not seen again. One Kruse stated that he saw Pierre and Jasper going out fishing at 4.30 in the morning of the day in question, that he saw Pierre return alone at half-past seven in the morning from the direction of Steenbras River, and that Pierre was much agitated, and said that his brother had been drowned. Anthony Nichol stated that at about seven in the morning of the 14th February he met Pierre coming from the direction of Steenbras River, that he was carrying two fishing rods, and that he informed Nichol that his brother had been washed from a rock while endeavouring to obtain bait, and was drowned. Nichol added that Pierre was wet, and confused. Edward Holloway, the proprietor of Holloway's Hotel, at Gordon's Bay, stated that Pierre had come to his hotel on the 12th of February, and Jasper on the following day, that he (Holloway) had lived at Gordon's Bay for twenty years, and knew as a fact that several persons had been drowned in that vicinity, and that in no case had the body been recovered. Upon these affidavits, which were uncontradicted, the Court authorised the election of an executor dative with the result that the plaintiff, who is the mother of the assured, was elected. She supplied practically the same information to the defendant company as had been supplied to the Court in proof of the death of the assured, but the company was not satisfied with the proof, and the present action was consequently instituted. The only witness produced at the trial to prove the actual death by drowning of the assured was Pierre, his brother. He adhered to the statements which he had previously made, and if those statements were correct there can be no reason for doubting that the assured was drowned on the 14th of February last. The fact that his body was not found again does not disprove his death, seeing that several other persons have been undoubtedly drowned in that vicinity, and in no case has the body been afterwards found. If the evidence of Pierre is to be disbelieved, it could only be because one of two alternative theories is accepted by the Court to explain the undoubted disappearance of the accused. The first alternative would be that Pierre himself pushed his brother into the sea with the view of obtaining any benefit which he might derive from the policies, as one of the heirs ab intestato of the assured. This alternative has not, however, been suggested by either party, and if it had been the true explanation, it is obvious that the amount of the insurance would be payable by the company to the executrix of the estate of the assured. The only other alternative explanation, and the one relied upon for the defendant company, is that there was a conspiracy between the two brothers to defraud the company, and that the assured is still alive, and in hiding either in this colony or elsewhere. The amount of the insurances is undoubtedly considerable, for the assured was also insured in the Law Accident Society for £500, but upon the death of the assured, who had made no will, half of his estate would devolve on his mother, and the remaining half would go to his brothers and sisters. It is not suggested that the mother was a party to the plot, and whatever may be said of Pierre's conduct and evidence, her conduct and evidence were not such as to give the slightest colour to any suggestion of her complicity in an infamous plot of this nature. As to Pierre, his portion would amount to no more than £583, and if it is borne in mind that out of this amount he would have to pay over a substantial sum to his brother, supposed to be dead, the benefit would be by no means commensurate with the tremendous risk which they would both be running. The assured was a youth of between seventeen and eighteen years of age, and it seems extremely improbable that he would have consented to become a party to a scheme which would, so to say, ostracise him for life, and confer no corresponding benefit on him. It is common cause that he left the hotel on the morning of the 14th February last with his brother, and that he did not return to the hotel with his brother, and no witness has been produced to say that after that date he has been seen alive in this colony or elsewhere. If he is still alive, he must be in hiding somewhere, and that would involve an expense, a risk, and an inconvenience which would appear to be quite out of proportion to the benefit which his relatives would derive from the fraud. Great stress has, however, been laid on behalf of the defendant company upon the conduct of the brother Pierre soon after the alleged accident, and upon the condition in which he was found by Mr. Nichol and others, who met him on his return from the scene. Mr. De Possel-Deydier's evidence is as follows: "I saw a man coming along towards us with two rods. He was coming slowly along. He was not running. He greeted me and called me by my name. He said: 'Good morning, Mr. De Possel; are you going fishing?' I said: 'That's a queer thing to ask when you see I have a rod.' He said: 'Foei toch, don't go.' I said: 'Why should I not go?' He said: 'A great accident has happened.' I asked: 'What accident?' He said: 'My brother has just got drowned.' I said: 'Can I do anything for you?' and I put my rod down. He said there was no need for assistance, because he had remained at the spot for a quarter of an hour or twenty minutes to see if his brother appeared again. He did not seem to be agitated at all. He was quite quiet. His sleeve was properly soaked lower down. His left leg was dripping wet to the knee. He did not appear to be dripping wet as if drenched by a wave. He went on speaking to me. He said his brother was staying with his mother at Observatory, and that his mother would feel the death of that boy very much, because she was very fond of him. He did not know how to break the news to his mother, as he was afraid she would get a fit." Pierre, in giving evidence, had said: "We went down on to the rocks to cut bait. I went first, and he went afterwards on to a rock on the water's edge. I had walked back about five paces from him on the same rock, with my back to the water. When I turned round he was bending forward to cut bait. I next heard him call help, and a wave dashed against me, and threw me against the rocks, where I clung fast. When I turned round again he was about 50 paces off in the sea, not with his head, but with his back to the surface." In another part of his evidence he said that his clothes were wet through, and that he was dripping wet, and it is contended that his statements are quite inconsistent with De Possel-Deydier's description of the condition in which Pierre was. A wave might have dashed him against a rock without necessarily washing over the upper portion of his body, and the witness admitted that the lower portion was dripping wet. As to the general demeanour of Pierre, it was certainly of a most callous description. Few persons are probably to be found, who, after witnessing the death of a brother by drowning would announce the sad fact with the coolness displayed by Pierre, but his callous behaviour is not conclusive against his credibility. The theory is that there was a plot between the two brothers to defraud the insurance companies. If the theory be correct, the scheme must have been well thought out beforehand, and the most obvious course in carrying out that scheme would have been for Pierre to drench himself to the skin in the water, and to assume the appearance of extreme agitation on first meeting people so soon after the alleged accident. The point, however, upon which the chief conflict in the evidence arose was the question whether, in view of the state of the tide on the 14th of February, it would have been possible for the assured to cut red bait on the rocks at about quarter past six in the morning. Pierre stated that it was between that time and half-past six that his brother was washed from the rock while in the act of cutting bait, and some of the witnesses for the defendant company confidently stated that it would be impossible to cut bait at that time, as the moon had been full on the 12th, and the tide was at its highest on the 14th at about twelve minutes past four in the morning. If these witnesses were correct in saying that within two hours after springtide it would have been impossible to cut bait, a very serious doubt would have been cast upon Pierre's credibility, and accordingly it was suggested by the Court that a gentleman in whose judgment and impartiality both the parties had confidence, should be appointed to make a practical test at the next springtide. It was agreed that Mr. D'Oliveira, the Resident Magistrate of Somerset West, should be so appointed, and he accordingly went to the spot at 3.20 p.m. on the 19th of November with spring tide. Pierre, who had been directed not to visit the spot in the interval, accompanied the Magistrate, and brought him direct to the place where, according to him, the accident had taken place. An hour and three-quarters after high tide a fisherman began cutting red bait, of which there seems to have been a considerable quantity, without getting wet. "The rock," says Mr. D'Oliveira, "on which the deceased, as pointed out, was standing, is a very dangerous one. The sea came sweeping over it, and no person, in my opinion, could or ought to stand there to fish unless he practically intends to commit suicide. The rock pointed out by Pierre Basson as the one on which he himself had stood I watched carefully for eleven minutes after, and not once did the sea go over that rock." This fresh evidence, therefore, supports the evidence given by Pierre, and it only remains for me to consider some minor points relied upon as throwing doubt on his statements. It is said that when a few hours after the alleged accident he accompanied Mr. Holloway in a boat in a search for the body, he pointed out three different rocks as being the rock on which his brother had stood. The rock pointed out the last time was the rock known as Ruigtevlei rock, and was the spot afterwards pointed out to the Magistrate. If he made a mistake while in the boat, such mistake is easily accounted for by the fact that he approached the shore from the sea, and not, as he had previously done, from the land side. The Ruigtevlei rock is about 500 yards from the rock known as the Sewing Room Rock, and the impression left on my mind by the evidence of Pierre certainly was that the accident occurred in the neighbourhood of the latter rock, but the distance is not so great as to justify the conclusion that there was a deliberate misstatement on his part. The only other point that requires consideration is whether the witness Kruse was correct in stating that Pierre had offered him £25 for making an affidavit. Pierre positively denied having made the offer, and I am by no means satisfied that he did. Kruse does not suggest that Pierre wished him to state a falsehood in the affidavit. He (Kruse) had informed Pierre, as the fact was, that he had seen Pierre and his brother go away together from the hotel on the morning in question, and it was in regard to this information that Pierre is said to have made the offer of £25. The case is in many respects an extraordinary one, and it is by no means surprising that the defendant company has refused to pay the amount of the policy until the fact of the death of the assured has been established, so far as, humanly speaking, it can be established, by the judgment of a Court of Justice. It would be a terrible miscarriage of justice if parties to a conspiracy to defraud an insurance company were to succeed in obtaining the earning of their fraud, and it therefore was the clear duty of the Court to probe this case to the very bottom. On the other hand, the Court could not, in justice to the mother and other next-of-kin to the assured, reject the testimony in support of the death of the assured merely because the only eye-witness to the drowning was somewhat callous in his demeanour soon after his brother's death, and will derive some benefit from his death. The insurances had been effected at the instance of the mother of the assured, who stated—and her statement was not denied—that she had been several times urged by Mr. Murphy, the agent of the defendant company, to insure her son's life. As I stated before, it has not been suggested, and there would not have been the slightest ground for such a suggestion, that she was a party to the supposed fraud upon the company. Pierre, as the elder brother, saw to it that the premiums were paid, but the policies were not ceded to him, nor did he acquire any other special interest in them. Under all the circumstances, I am of opinion that the death by drowning of the assured has been satisfactorily proved, and that the judgment of the Court should be for the plaintiff, with costs.

Maasdorp, J., concurred.

Kotzé, J.: I am of the same opinion. Of course, the Court has to find as a fact whether Jasper Basson was actually drowned, and I think the probability points to that conclusion, after a careful survey of the circumstances. I, therefore, agree in the judgment.

De Villiers, C.J.: In regard to the Law Accident Insurance Society, that is a somewhat different case. In that case the insurance was only for accident. The terms of the policy are: "If at any time during the said policy or during the continuance of this policy after renewal, the assured sustains any bodily injury, caused by violent, accidental, external, and visible means while in South Africa, and so forth," £500 shall be payable at death. If a man were drowned, there can be no doubt that the amount of the policy was payable. The judgment of the Court in this case also must be for the plaintiff, with costs.

[Plaintiff's Attorneys: Michau and De Villiers; Attorneys for Union Insurance Co.: Fairbridge, Arderne and Lawton; Attorneys for Law Accident Insurance Company: Reid and Nephew.]

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.), and the Hon. Mr. Justice KOTZE.]

ADMISSIONS. { 1903. Nov. 13th.

Mr. Buchanan moved for the admission of Herbert Chas. Rothman, as an attorney and notary.

Application granted, and oath to be taken before the Registrar of the High Court at Kimberley.

Mr. Buchanan moved for the admission of Wilfred Franceys Cranswide, as an attorney and notary.

Application granted, and oath to be taken before the Registrar of the High Court at Kimberley.

TRIAL CAUSES.

BANGEE V. DUSTAY.

This was an action brought by Ismail Bangee, an Indian, lately carrying on business at Lady Grey, in the district of Aliwal North, against Ebrahim Dustay, lately of Aliwal North, for an account of certain partnership transactions and £500 damages.

The declaration set out that on or about the 20th November, 1902, and at Aliwal North, plaintiff and defendant entered into an agreement of partnership under which plaintiff was to leave the remunerative employment he then had for the purpose of carrying on the business of general dealers at Lady Grey. It was agreed that the plaintiff should supervise the said business, and that the defendant should put in a cart and two horses, the plaintiff to supply the harness and all profits and losses to be shared equally. Plaintiff, in pursuance of the said agreement, hired premises, and started and carried on the said business, and made considerable profits for the partnership. Defendant had from time to time received moneys for and on behalf of the partnership, which he had failed and refused to account for to the plaintiff, and had taken possession of and refused to deliver up the books. He had also taken forcible possession of the premises, and refused to allow plaintiff to carry on the said business. Plaintiff had always been ready and willing to render an account of his share of the business, and to pay to the defendant such amount as might be found to be due, and he had tendered and still tendered such amount. Defendant refused to render an account. Plaintiff had, in consequence, wholly lost his share of the profit from the partnership, and had sustained damages in the sum of £500 sterling. He claimed that the defendant be ordered to render a full and fair account, duly supported by proper vouchers, and pay to the plaintiff such sum as may be found due, also the sum of £500 as damages.

Defendant, in his plea, admitted the formal allegations save in that he said he also carried on business, and was resident at Lady Grey. He denied that any partnership was entered into between himself and plaintiff, and said that it was agreed between them that the plaintiff should be employed as manager of the defendant's business at Lady Grey. He admitted that the plaintiff hired premises, and started and managed the business, but he said he did so on behalf of the defendant. He admitted that considerable profits were made, but said they were made for himself (defendant) alone. He admitted that he entered into possession of the premises in July, 1903, and refused to allow the plaintiff to carry on business, and take any profit therefrom. Except as above, he denied the allegations in paragraph 6. In reference to paragraph 7, he denied that the plaintiff had tendered to him any account or any money. He admitted that he refused to render to plaintiff any account, or tender him any money. He prayed that the claim be dismissed with costs. In reconvention, the defendant said that the plaintiff had received from time to time moneys of the defendant, and he claimed an account from the plaintiff of his transactions as manager, debate of the same, and such sum as might be found due to the defendant.

The replication was general.

Mr. Burton (with him Mr. Upington) for plaintiff; defendant in default.

Mr. Upington read correspondence from which it appeared that on the 24th October the defendant's attorneys intimated that the date of trial would be convenient, and that on the 3rd November they wrote: "We are instructed by our local correspondent that the defendant has absconded, and we are to incur no further costs."

Evidence was called for the plaintiff.

Ismail Mohammed Bangee, the plaintiff, said he was a general dealer, and he was approached by the defendant to enter into partnership. Profits and losses were to be equally shared. He put £8 cash into the business. The defendant was to provide a cart and horses, and he (plaintiff) the harness. The goods were to be sent from Aliwal North. In January he proceeded to Lady Grey, and opened a general business there. Business was carried on till July. It was successful, and realised about 35 to 50 per cent. profit. About £200 per month was the extent of the turnover. When the defendant came to Lady Grey in July he (plaintiff) asked him to square up accounts, but defendant said he would not do this, as plaintiff was not his partner, only his manager. Afterwards, defendant took possession of the building, and evicted witness, who had been kept out of the business since then, and had neither received any money nor a statement from defendant. In August witness placed the matter in the hands of his solicitor. He had sustained damages, which he assessed at £500.

[De Villiers, C.J.: 35 per cent. seems a large profit. Are the books to be had?]

Mr. Upington: The defendant has absconded, and taken the books with him.

[De Villiers, C.J. (to witness): The money that you got from the sale of the goods, did you hand that over?]

Witness: Yes, every day's takings was deposited in the bank.

Osman Ali said he was a general dealer in Aliwal North. He recollected a conversation between plaintiff and defendant. The latter asked him (witness) to become his partner. Defendant afterwards told him that he had arranged a partnership with plaintiff.

John Hamilton Diplin, formerly a clerk in the office of Attorney Cloete, Lady Grey, gave evidence as to the making out of a cheque in the name of the partnership.

Mr. Upington applied for judgment, including costs of previous applications, which was decided against the defendant.

Judgment was entered for plaintiff for £240 damages, with costs.

Mr. Upington: There is another matter, my lord, arising out of the application, with reference to the order granted by your lordship on the 29th October, calling upon one Ebrahaim Cotwal to show cause why he should not be interdicted from selling or making away with any property or stock-in-trade, pending the result of the action respecting the said partnership. I now apply for that rule to be made absolute.

Rule made absolute accordingly, costs to be paid by Cotwal.

[Plaintiff's Attorney: P. A. M. Cloete.]

PROVISIONAL ROLL.

SOUTH AFRICAN MILLING V. GRAND JUNCTION RAILWAYS.

Mr. Benjamin said that an arrangement had been arrived at between the parties to the suit in this matter and the various creditors, and asked that the rule granted for the sequestration of the estate of the defendants should be discharged, in terms of consent paper. The consent paper was signed by all the parties to the suit and the principal creditors.

Mr. McGregor (representing the South African Banking Corporation) applied for an order that the money in the hands of the Registrar in connection with the award of £76,000 should remain with the Registrar until paid over to the receivers mentioned in the consent paper (Messrs. Close and Syfret).

De Villiers, C.J.: Has notice been given of these applications?

Mr. McGregor: No, not formally.

Mr. Benjamin: Two receivers have been appointed by the consent paper, and on behalf of the plaintiffs, I am instructed to consent to the application.

Rule discharged as asked, and interdict to continue, the money meanwhile to remain in the hands of the Registrar until paid over to the receivers.

LANDSBERG V. IBERTSON.

Mr. Benjamin moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond of £1,600, due by reason of non-payment of interest, and also for £2 3s., being premium paid and stamps upon a certain policy of assurance. Counsel added that the summons set out the amount due for premiums at £3 18s., whereas the correct amount was £2 3s.

Order granted.

DOUGLAS AND ANOTHER V. GLASS.

Rules of Court of 1903—Postponement of cases.

Mr. Buchanan asked that this matter should stand over, in terms of the consent paper signed by plaintiffs' and defendant's attorneys, the suggested date being December 12.

De Villiers, C.J., said he supposed counsel was aware that, under the new rules of Court, unless, in the opinion of the presiding judge, it would not be in the interests of the parties that matter should be postponed, the case might be ordered to stand over till next term.

Mr. Buchanan: I think this case will probably satisfy your lordships that it is a matter of urgency. It is a case of compulsory sequestration.

Application granted.

SMITHERS V. GRIFFITHS.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for provisional sentence on two mortgage bonds of £850 and £400 respectively, together with interest from the 1st January, 1903, at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum, the bonds having become due by reason of non-payment of interest.

Order granted.

HANSEN AND SCHRADER V. SHACKLETON.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved for the final sequestration of the defendant's estate, and also for meetings of creditors, to be ordered to be held at Port Elizabeth.

De Villiers, C.J. said that final sequestration would be granted, but the other matter must be the subject of application to the Master.

JAGGER AND CO. V. AMERICAN CLOTHING CO. AND DAVIES.

Mr. Buchanan moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent, and for the appointment of Mr. Thomas H. Hazell as provisional trustee, pending the election of trustee. The defendants carried on business at Sea Point and Salt River, and it was desirable in the interests, both of the estate and the creditors, that Mr. Hazell, who had been acting as curator bonis of the estate, should continue to supervise the business.

Order granted as prayed.

ESTATE MARSH V. McMULLEN.

Mr. Russell moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £1,000, with interest at the rate of 6 per cent., and also for £2 6s., the premium of insurance paid by plaintiff on behalf of the defendant, and also for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable, and for costs. The bond had become due by reason of the non-payment of interest.

Defendant appeared, and consented to judgment.

Order granted as prayed.

RICE V. STRYDOM.

Mr. Buchanan moved for a decree of civil imprisonment against the defendant upon an unsatisfied judgment of this Court for £370 5s., and taxed costs amounting to £8 2s. 10d. A writ of execution had been issued, and a return of nulla bona made. There was also an item of £1 5s., sheriff's charges.

The defendant, Cornelius Johannes Strydom, of Wynberg Flats, said he owned certain property there, 1¾ morgen, which he bought for garden purposes. The property was mortgaged up to its full value. He had no other property besides that. He made about £10 a month. He was prepared to pay £5 a month. The debt he was sued for had reference to a number of rams that he bought. He bought the rams in the Transvaal; he was too late for the market that year, and in the following year, they contracted scab, and most of them died. Before the war he had property at Oudtshoorn, which was sold.

Cross-examined by Mr. Buchanan: The debt was already eight years old. It was for a loan. He had not paid off any portion. He wrote and told Rice of the ill-luck he had had with the scab and the rinderpest. After that came the war. Rice agreed to wait.

Decree granted with costs, to be suspended on payment of £5 per month until the debt was discharged, the first payment to be made on December 1.

WARNER AND CO. V. DAY.

Mr. Pyemont moved for a writ of civil imprisonment against the defendant on a judgment of the Court for £349 1s. 8d., together with costs.

Order granted.

MICHAU V. LEISTER.

Mr. De Waal moved for the final sequestration of the defendant's estate as insolvent.

Order granted.

ROLFE, CRAIG AND CO. V. CAREY.

Mr. Close moved for the provisional order for the sequestration of the defendant's estate to be made final.

Order granted.

STEFFENS V. BLACK.

Mr. Russell moved for provisional sentence on a bill of exchange granted by the defendant for £159 0s. 5d., together with interest from due date, and costs. The bill had been presented to the African Banking Corporation's Bank, and their answer was, "Not provided for."

Order granted.

ILLIQUID ROLL.

EPSTEIN V. SIERADZKI.

Mr. Benjamin moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £100 16s. 7d., being overdraft paid by the plaintiff for and on behalf of the defendant, and also for another sum paid by plaintiff for defendant.

Order granted.

ZEEDERBERG AND DUNCAN V. WEIYTROB.

Mr. Benjamin said that this was an application for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £15, under a certain deed of suretyship. The principal had now been paid, and plaintiff merely asked for costs of suit.

Order granted as prayed.

MOSTERT V. HARE AND ROUS.

Mr. Benjamin moved, under Rule 319, for judgment in default of plea for £32 7s., on a declaration for balance of account. The account was for hire of horses, and wagons, less £10 paid.

Order granted.

TANCRED V. BRUKES.

Mr. Greer moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for transfer of certain lots of land, of which the purchase price had been paid, and for costs of suit.

Order granted.

TANCRED V. KOTZE.

Mr. Greer moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for transfer of certain lots of land, of which the purchase price had been paid, and for costs of suit.

Order granted.

PURCELL, YALLOP AND EVERETT V. NELSON.

Mr. Upington moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £97 1s., being balance of account due, and owing for goods sold and delivered, and work done, and for interest and costs of suit.

Order granted.

PURCELL, YALLOP AND EVERETT V. GOODMAN.

Mr. Upington moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £74 7s., balance of account due and owing for goods sold and delivered and work and labour done, and for interest and costs of suit.

Order granted.

KRAAIFONTEIN BRICKFIELDS V. FALCONER.

Mr. Greer moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £52 12s. 6d., being account due for certain bricks sold and delivered, with interest a tempore morae, and costs of suit.

Order granted.

PEYCKE AND CO. V. DURING.

Mr. Smith moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £51 6s. 1d., for work and labour done and materials supplied, with interest a tempore morae, and costs of suit.

Order granted.

CAPE AND KOSHER MEAT SUPPLY CO. V. SCHOOR AND GEUTZKY.

Mr. Russell moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, on an account for goods sold and delivered, the balance due being £134, and for costs of suit.

Order granted.

MENDELSSOHN V. MOSES.

Mr. Alexander moved for judgment, under Rule 329d. as follows: (1) The sum of £30 16s. 7d., being the amount of a certain cheque, the property of the plaintiff, stolen by the defendant, from the plaintiff's office in Burg-street, Cape Town, on the 9th January, 1903. (2) An order declaring the amount of £38 11s. 9d., belonging to the defendant, attached by order of this Honourable Court, and now in the hands of the Registrar, executable; (3) an order declaring the proceeds of two promissory notes attached at Kimberley by order of this Honourable Court, dated September 5, 1903, executable; (4) an order empowering the plaintiff to institute proceedings against the makers and endorsers of the said promissory notes for recovery of the amount, with interest and costs; (5) interest a tempore morae; (6) costs of suit.

[De Villiers, C.J. (to Mr. Alexander): Has the defendant been convicted of these offences?]

I think he is awaiting trial on the charge.

[De Villiers, C.J. : It seems that the defendant is on the Breakwater.]

Mr. Alexander said that the present application was made in order to enable the plaintiff to execute judgment. At present there was nothing to execute judgment against except the money in the hands of the Registrar and the proceeds of the notes. The plaintiff was not a party to the notes, and without the order now sought could not proceed with the execution. The promissory notes were found in the possession of the defendant when he was arrested.

De Villiers, C.J. said the Court could not authorise the plaintiff to institute proceedings without first of all putting him in such a position that he was entitled to sue.

Mr. Alexander said that the Court had already made these very notes attachable, but the plaintiff could not proceed to attach without an order.

De Villiers, C.J.: The Court will authorise the Sheriff to attach these notes. The Sheriff then can sell these notes. The purchaser will have a good title to sue. The plaintiff has no title; until he has bought the notes he can have no title to them. The Sheriff can, by order of Court, sell and pass title to the notes, but the plaintiff would have no title until he purchased them. An order will be granted in terms of prayers 1, 2, 3, 5, and 6.

HOLLANDER V. HUGO.

Mr. Buchanan moved for judgment under Rule 319, in default of plea, to a declaration, alleging that plaintiff delivered to the defendant a certain Cape-cart, of the value of £40, for the purpose of having certain repairs done to it, the defendant having failed to effect the repairs or to redeliver the said cart. There was also a claim for damages, which counsel said he did not press. An order was sought requiring the defendant to return the cart in the order in which it was handed to him, or to pay the value thereof.

Order granted as prayed.

MULLER V. MULLER.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £88 14s. 4d., balance of certain money lent and advanced, also interest at the rate of 5 per cent. from the 1st February this year.

Order granted.

TURNBULL AND BYGOTT V. DURING.

Mr. Sutton moved for judgment, under Rule 329d. for £75 9s. 1d., balance of account due for goods sold and delivered, and work and labour done, and costs.

Order granted.

REHABILITATIONS.

Mr. Alexander moved for the rehabilitation of David Johannes Philippus du Toit, whose estate was sequestrated in March, 1891.

Granted.

Mr. Alexander moved for the rehabilitation of Christian Rudolph Pretorius.

Granted.

Mr. De Waal moved for the rehabilitation of Ernest Johannes Jansen.

Granted

Mr. Gardiner moved for the rehabilitation of Robert Drummond.

Granted.

Mr. Benjamin moved for the rehabilitation of John Ward. Some objection was raised by the trustee in the estate of Ward and Vippan.

Application refused, but leave given to apply again in three months.

Mr. De Waal moved for the discharge of the estate of Pieter William Bester from sequestration.

Granted.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

SWANEPOEL V. SWANEPOEL.

Mr. C. W. de Villiers said that this was the return day of an order granted on the 7th August last by Mr. Justice Maasdorp, at Uniondale, calling upon the defendant to return to her husband on or before the 5th November. His Lordship's judgment included provision as to custody of the children and division of the joint estate, but the order made out by the Registrar did not include this. Counsel now applied for the order to be amended accordingly, and for the return day to be extended. The defendant had, he added, failed to return to plaintiff.

De Villiers, C.J. said that the Court would amend the order made by incorporating the entry in the judge's notes, and order service of a fresh rule, to be returnable on the 12th December, service to be effected in the same manner as previously, defendant to return to the plaintiff on or before the 30th November.

Ex parte WILSON.

Mr. Russell moved for a rule nisi under the Derelict Lands Act to be made absolute. The matter had previously been before the Court, but had been postponed through an irregularity in the publication of notices. Due publication had now been given.

Order granted.

Ex parte DE VILLIERS.

Mr. Benjamin moved for an order confirming a certain agreement made by the petitioner, as secretary of the Paarl Board of Executors, on behalf of the creditors in the insolvent estate Glasberg. It appeared that the insolvent had had certain property transactions in Wilson-street, that he had raised bonds with the petitioner's Board and that some difficulty had arisen in the registration of the transfer to another purchaser.

Order granted as prayed.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP and the Hon. Mr. Justice KOTZE.]

LOUW v. EAST. 1903. Nov. 16th. „ 17th.

This was an action brought by Thomas Arnoldus Johannes Louw, of Newlands, against Clara Theophila East, wife of Henry Flint East, also of Newlands, for an order requiring the defendant to take transfer of a certain estate, Sans Souci, in terms of certain conditions of sale.

Counsel stated that the action arose out of the construction of a certain agreement of purchase and sale between the parties. The plaintiff sold to Mrs. East the estate Sans Souci under certain conditions of sale, which were subsequently followed by a certain memorandum, and it was really upon the construction of these two documents that the case would turn.

The declaration set out that on the 3rd June, 1903, the plaintiff sold to Henry Flint East, acting for and on behalf of the defendant, the remaining portion of the estate Sans Souci for £25,000, upon certain conditions of sale. The plaintiff reserved for the period of one month an option or right of retaining a portion of the said property described in the conditions, and if this option were exercised, the purchase price was to be reduced by £6,000. Thereafter the plaintiff, on or about the 1st July, agreed in writing to cancel the said reservation in consideration of the sum of £500 being paid to him by the defendant. It was arranged that the sum of £2,500 was to paid upon the purchase price upon the date of transfer, the balance to be raised by mortgage bond, to be passed by defendant. It was provided in the written memorandum of the 1st July that in the event of the plaintiff being unable to obtain possession of a certain house, called Lockerbie, in time to give possession of Sans Souci as per contract, defendant should allow plaintiff gratis a fortnight overtime. He was unable to obtain possession of Lockerbie on the 3rd October; thereupon he remained in possession until the 17th October. He had tendered, and again tendered, transfer to the defendant of the property, upon payment by him of the sum of £2,500, with interest at the rate of 6 per cent., in terms of the defendant's and plaintiff's agreement, and defendant to pass a mortgage bond for £23,000, balance of the purchase price. This the defendant refused, and claimed that interest on the sum of £23,000 should only run from the 17th October. Plaintiff claimed: (a) Payment of the sum of £2,500, with interest from the 3rd October, 1903, at the rate of 6 per cent.; (b) that the defendant be ordered to take transfer of the aforesaid property, and pass a bond for £23,000, with interest at 6 per cent. from the 3rd October, 1903, plaintiff tendering all necessary documents; (c) alternative relief; (d) costs of suit.

Defendant, in her plea, admitted the formal allegations in regard to agreements, except that she craved for greater certainty leave to refer to the documents. She admitted that plaintiff did not take possession of Lockerbie on the 3rd October, and remained at Sans Souci until the 17th October; but said that plaintiff obtained possession of Lockerbie on the 6th October. She said that plaintiff was not entitled to interest on the bond beyond the date when possession of Sans Souci was given by plaintiff to the defendant, viz., the 17th October, and not before. She had tendered £2,500 against transfer, and also the sum of £658, claimed as expenses. She was willing to pass a bond from the 17th October, the date from which plaintiff gave possession of Sans Souci. Plaintiff wrongfully refused to pass transfer of the premises. Defendant offered to pay £2,500 upon receipt of transfer of the property purchased, also £658 as expenses, and pass a bond with interest from the 17th October. Defendant prayed that plaintiff's claim should be dismissed, with costs. In reconvention, defendant said that plaintiff wrongfully and unlawfully refused to pass transfer of the property. Plaintiff was aware that the defendant had sold portions of the said estate to the value of £10,625, and intended to sell other portions, and defendant had sustained special damages in the sum of £500 by reason of the defendant having, through his wrongful and unlawful refusal, been unable to complete contracts with the buyers of the portions or to sell other portions in the manner contemplated.

The plaintiff, in his replication, admitted that the transfer of the property Lockerbie was passed to him, and registered in the Deeds Office on the 6th October, but said he was unable to occupy it owing to certain alterations and repairs that had to be made, and he retained possession of Sans Souci under the agreement of the 1st July. He denied that he had wrongfully or unlawfully refused transfer. In his plea to the claim in reconvention, plaintiff said he had been informed that the defendant had sold a portion of the estate, but he had no knowledge of the purchase price. He denied that the defendant had sustained damages in the sum of £500, or any sum for which he was liable, or that his refusal to pass transfer was wrongful or unlawful.

Mr. Searle, K.C. (with him Mr. Gardiner) for plaintiff; Mr. McGregor (with him Mr. Close) for defendant.

Thomas A. J. Louw, the plaintiff, said that he now lived at Lockerbie. Last June he owned and occupied Sans Souci. He sold on the 3rd June to the defendant the remaining extent of the property, according to the conditions of sale produced. On the portion on which he reserved an option, there was a dwelling-house occupied by Colonel Woodhead. The rent of this was paid to him up to the 30th September. On the 3rd June he had not bought any other house, but on the 6th June he bought Lockerbie. He met Mr. Chiappini, who was a partner of Mr. East, shortly before the 8th June, and told him that he had purchased Lockerbie. Mr. Chiappini informed Mr. East, and on the 8th June witness received a letter from Mr. East thanking him for promptly informing him of his purchase, and saying that, of course, the option would now be off. Witness replied that he was surprised at the contents of the letter. He had never said anything about giving up the option. Subsequently, he gave Mr. East notice that he would exercise the option reserved in the conditions of sale. Mr. Chiappini came to see him on or about July 3, and, after a long discussion, witness agreed to give up the option. Witness next day received a letter from Mr. East accepting the arrangement made with Mr. Chiappini, as to giving up the option on payment by the defendant of £500. Mr. East added: "I am also agreeable to the arrangements mentioned in the second and third paragraphs of the endorsement. Memo.: The cash to be paid against transfer will now be £2,500." Further correspondence ensued, but in the end it was agreed that no deviation should be made in the conditions of sale. It was necessary to obtain an amended title, owing to the complications in the estate. On the 25th September, Mr. East asked when possession was to be given him. Witness replied on the 28th September that he was unable to offer any earlier date than the one agreed upon, viz., October 17. He was stopped by Mr. Gibson, of Lockerbie, who was to give up possession on the 6th October Witness left Sans Souci on the 17th October. He got the key of Lockerbie on the 6th, but the house was in such a state that he could not enter into possession. The water supply was blocked, the electric lighting was wrong, and for several reasons it was impossible to enter at once. He had workmen in the house at Lockerbie even to-day. Witness did everything he could to assist Mr. East, while he remained in Sans Souci until the 16th October. Mr. East practically had a free run of the place from the 1st October. Mrs. East even came into the house almost whenever she liked. All that witness knew about the sale of any portion of the estate by Mr. East was that Mr. Chiappini and Mr. Wiener, jun., had bought portions.

Cross-examined by Mr. McGregor: The option was not a purely personal one in order to provide against the contingency of his not being able to find another place. He said that he would keep the option, and if he did not want it he would give it up. He did not tell Mr. Chiappini at the football match that Mr. East could have the whole place. He offered to toss Mr. Chiappini as to the price—whether it should be £6,500 or £7,000 The price agreed upon was £6,500.

[Kotzé, J. (interposing): It seems to me that this verbal evidence is of no importance. The question is one as to the construction of the documents put in, pure and simple. The only point on which you want evidence, it seems to me, is as to your claim in re-convention.]

Cross-examination continued: The only "deviation" of which witness was speaking in his letter was with regard to the title deeds. When the discussion took place as to the agreement, Mr. East told him that he did not intend to keep the whole of the estate. Even if witness had done everything in his power East could not yet have obtained an amended title to the property. There was not time for the formalities to be gone through. The piece of ground he reserved was worth £7,000.

By Maasdorp, J.: The value of the property had not fallen since October 6.

Henry Flint East, husband of the defendant, stated that on June 3 certain conditions of the sale of Sans Souci were entered into, and previously the matter had been talked over. When he got the letter about the option, Mr. Chiappini saw the plaintiff, and witness instructed the former to settle the matter. After the memorandum, he sold portions of the ground to Mr. Chiappini and Mr. Wiener, who took six acres between them for £10,625. He could not get the amended title until he got transfer. Neither Chiappini nor Wiener had got transfer. The conditions of sale specified that, in the event of the buyer disposing of any portion of the estate, any moneys received or bonds disbursed would go towards the reduction of the bond of £23,000 or £17,000, and the longer the transfer was delayed, the more interest would have to be paid. He had been approached by others in regard to the sale.

Cross-examined by Mr. Searle: There was no document in connection with the sale to his partner, Mr. Chiappini. He could sell the reserve portion without obtaining an amended title. The Municipality was a joint owner in respect of a road, and it was necessary they should pass the plans before they were submitted to the Surveyor-General. He never gave the plaintiff formal notice of the other sales.

Antonio Chiappini, partner of the defendant, said that on the 6th June he had a conversation with the plaintiff at Newlands. He said he had bought Gibson's place, and that witness could tell the defendant he could buy the whole of Sans Souci. On June 30 witness asked plaintiff if he was going to exercise his option, and the latter wanted £500. The plaintiff wanted to sell witness Woodhead's property for £6,400 or £6,500. Next day Mr. Louw made the endorsement on the memorandum.

Cross-examined by Mr. Searle: He was interested in the property himself. He was anxious that the plaintiff should give up his option.

Charles van der Byl, broker, in partnership with Harold C. Wood and Co., stated it was through his agency the sale was effected. He knew the defendant intended to re-sell the ground in portions. Witness approached the defendant with a view to make a purchase, but owing to the delay in passing transfer, no business could be done. The plaintiff, he believed, was aware of the defendant's intention.

Cross-examined by Mr. Searle: Witness told the defendant he had a buyer for a particular portion of the ground.

Mr. McGregor closed his case.

Counsel having been heard in argument on the facts,

Cur. adv. Vult.

Postea (Nov. 17.)

Maasdorp, J.: On the 3rd of June, 1903, the plaintiff sold to the defendant the remaining extent of the estate Sans Souci, with adjoining ground, for the sum of £25,000, on the following conditions, amongst others: £2,000 to be paid off upon the date transfer is taken, and for the balance a mortgage bond to be passed, bearing interest at 6 per cent. per annum, payable half-yearly, the seller agreeing that the Bond shall not be called up within the term of five years; the seller to remain in full possession for a period not exceeding four months from the date hereof; should the seller desire to vacate before that time, then one month's due notice will have to be given to the buyer. Transfer to be taken upon the date upon which the seller gives possession of all the premises to the buyer. It is further agreed that the seller shall have the option for the term of one month from the date hereof to retain a certain portion of the estate, a description of which is given, for the sum of £6,000, thus reducing the purchase price to £19,000. On the 29th of June the plaintiff gave notice to the defendant that he would avail himself of the option reserved by him. On the 1st of July it was agreed between the parties that, in consideration of the defendant paying the sum of £500, any time up to the date of transfer, the option exercised by plaintiff should be cancelled; and that, in the event of the plaintiff being unable to obtain possession of a property called Lockerbie, in time to give possession of Sans Souci, as per contract, the defendant would allow him gratis a fortnight overtime. The plaintiff ascertained in September that he could not get possession of Lockerbie on the 3rd of October, and on the 28th of September he wrote to defendant's agent, in answer to a question put by him, that he could not fix an earlier date for giving up possession than the 17th of October. On the 25th of September the plaintiff's attorney requested the defendant's attorneys to get the necessary documents signed, in order to have transfer passed on the 3rd of October, and amongst other things, required the plaintiff's signature to a power of attorney to execute a bond for £23,000, to bear interest at 6 per cent. per annum from the 3rd of October. The defendant was prepared to do everything required to effect transfer, but refused to have a bond executed to bear interest before the 17th October, on the ground that the plaintiff had decided not to give possession before that date. The plaintiff now tenders transfer of the property, and prays that the defendant may be ordered to take transfer, to pay him the sum of £2,500, and to execute a bond for the balance of the purchase price, amounting to £23,000, to bear interest from the 3rd of October. The defendant pleads that she was prepared to comply with all the conditions, except as to the bond, which she says should bear interest from the 17th day of October, when the plaintiff was prepared to give her possession of the property. The Court has to decide whether, under the circumstances, the bond should bear interest from the 3rd of October, or the 17th of October. Under the above-mentioned conditions of the contract dated the 3rd of June, the seller was to give up full possession of the property not later than the 3rd of October, and transfer was to be taken upon the date upon which the seller gives possession of all the premises to the buyer. Two thousand were to be paid upon the date transfer is taken, and for the balance a mortgage bond was to be passed bearing interest at 6 per cent. The effect of this contract was that on the 3rd of October the plaintiff became entitled to his money and his bond, and the defendant became entitled to receive transfer and possession. The question now arises, whether by the agreement of the 1st of July, it was intended to defer the performance of all these conditions until the 17th of October, or whether all were to be performed on the 3rd of October, with this exception—that the plaintiff was to retain possession until the 17th October, after the performance of all the other conditions. The agreement of the 1st of July stipulated that if the plaintiff should be unable to obtain possession of Lockerbie in time to give possession of Sans Souci as per contract, the defendant would allow him gratis a fortnight over time. The plaintiff was unable to obtain possession of Lockerbie in time to give possession of Sans Souci on the 3rd October. In construing this agreement, it seems to me there is a term used therein which has an important bearing on the case, and that is the word "gratis." The plaintiff is to be allowed possession "gratis," that is without reward or consideration to the defendant. The defendant is to receive no consideration, except such as is contained in the other items of the agreement of the 1st of July. If the other terms of the original agreement are altered as to the date of the transfer, the payment of £2,500, and the interest payable on the bond, then a consideration is introduced other than that contained in the agreement of the 1st of July. The consideration excluded by the word gratis might be either some benefit to pass to the defendant, or some detriment to the plaintiff. If the plaintiff were deprived of the interest, which it was contemplated he should receive after the 3rd of October, it would be a detriment to him, which would not be consistent with the term gratis. Then, again, until the other conditions of the contract were performed, and the defendant became the owner of the property after transfer, she was hardly in a position to claim any return for the possession allowed to the defendant, which is given up under the term gratis. To give effect to this expression, I think we must come to the conclusion that it was intended that all the other conditions of the contract of the 3rd of June were to be performed, and thereafter the plaintiff would be allowed to remain in possession free of charge for another fortnight. The word "overtime" used in the agreement seems to me to point in the same direction, although I do not wish to make too much of it. It seems to me to signify that the defendant would allow the plaintiff to remain in possession a fortnight over the time when as per contract all the other conditions of the contract were performed on the 3rd of October. There is in my opinion nothing unreasonable in this construction. The plaintiff, having discovered that it would be inconvenient for him to quit possession on the 3rd of October, does not propose that the time should be extended for the performance of the contract, but that the contract should go through, and that the defendant, as a matter of grace, should allow him to remain in a few days longer. And this is made one of the conditions of the agreement of the 1st of July. If the defendant had insisted in obtaining transfer on the 3rd of October, I do not think the plaintiff could have refused it on the ground that he was entitled to possession for another fortnight. It is quite true that purchasers of property as a rule guard themselves against the liability to pay interest on the purchase price until they enjoy the benefit of possession, or take care to stipulate for rent if possession is retained after transfer. But this contract must be construed upon the express terms used, and it seems that it is precisely this claim for use and occupation, or for rent after transfer, which is given up in the use of the term gratis. On the whole, I come to the conclusion that defendant should have taken transfer on the 3rd of October, and passed a bond bearing interest from that date. The plaintiff is therefore entitled to judgment as prayed, and as a consequence the claim of the defendant in reconvention must fail. Judgment is given for the plaintiff upon the claim in convention, and also on the claim in reconvention, with costs.

Kotzé, J.: I have arrived at the same conclusion. I think the memorandum of the 1st of July does not in any degree vary the terms of the contract as expressed in the conditions of sale, viz., that transfer had to be given or taken on or before the 3rd October. The effect of the memorandum was a stipulation on the part of Mr. Louw that if he could not succeed in getting another house by the 3rd October he was to be allowed a fortnight's extra time at Sans Souci gratis, that is to say, it was to be free and for nothing, in other words, no consideration was to be given by him for being there this extra fortnight. Having arrived at the same conclusion, I agree in the judgment

[Plaintiff's Attorney: C. Bernard; Defendant's Attorneys: Findlay and Tait.]

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Chief Justice, the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D., the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP, and the Hon. Mr. Justice KOTZE.]

GENERAL MOTIONS.

STORK V. STORK. { 1903. Nov. 17th.

Mr. M. Bisset moved in terms of the petition of the plaintiff, John Christ Stork, for the appointment of a commission to take the evidence of the plaintiff's witnesses, who are principally resident in the vicinity of Kokstad, East Griqualand. Petitioner was suing his wife for divorce, and he made the present application in consequence of the great expense of bringing witnesses to Cape Town. He asked that the Resident Magistrate of Mount Currie, or in the alternative the A.R.M., should be appointed to take the evidence of material witnesses, and also that the day of trial should be set down for the February term. The matter had previously been before the Court, but, a letter having been received from the defendant denying the allegations and saying that the matter had previously been before the Court in Natal, it was ordered to stand over, and in the meantime the Registrar was to write to the defendant and advise her to consult an attorney. The defendant had not replied to the letter sent to her by the Registrar.

Order granted as prayed, the trial to be set down for the first Tuesday in February.

THE MASTER v. DICKSON. { 1903. Nov. 17th.

Contempt of Court—Costs.

On application for attachment of a trustee of an insolvent estate for contempt of Court in not filing an account as ordered by the Court, it appeared that he had filed an account with the Resident Magistrate which, however, was very incomplete. No order was made for attachment, as the trustee was held to have acted in good faith, but he was ordered to pay the costs.

This was an application upon notice of motion for an order for the personal attachment of Thomas Henry Charles Dickson, of Piquetberg, for alleged contempt of Court in failing to comply with an order to file a liquidation account and plan of distribution in the insolvent estate of Carl A. van der Merwe, of which respondent is trustee.

The affidavit of the Acting Master (Mr. Heinmann) stated that the order of the Court had been served upon the respondent, but he had failed to comply. The respondent, it appeared, was appointed trustee on the 12th March, 1902.

The answering affidavit of David Tennant, jun., an attorney of this Court, stated that he had been asked to lay certain facts before the Court. On the 11th October the defendant sent in an account to the Master's Office, but, the chief clerk returned the account with a note, requiring further particulars under several heads. Defendant wished to point out that before he had time to attend to the note made in the Master's Office, proceedings were taken against him. The account was originally filed as far back as the 7th October, in the Magistrate's Office. There had evidently been some misunderstanding. Practically no time was allowed between the date of the memorandum and the date of issue of the affidavit.

Mr. P. S. Jones for the Master; Mr. Alexander for respondent.

Mr. Jones: The Acting Master informs me that the affidavit was made in the morning, and that the account came in in the afternoon.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Then why didn't he withdraw the affidavit?]

Because the account was rejected as being an improper account. The defendant has been very negligent in failing to file the proper accounts with the Acting Master. If the Court does not think that the defendant should be committed, at any rate, he ought to be required to pay the costs to which the Acting Master has been put.

Mr. Alexander submitted that the defendant had filed a proper account as far as he was able within the period specified by the order of Court. It was impossible for the defendant to file a final account, as there were a number of assets which could not be realised. Evidently there had been a misunderstanding. The Chief Clerk of the Acting Master seemed to have received the account and made the memorandum, while the Acting Master swore the affidavit, and no doubt at the time the latter was not aware that the account had been furnished. He contended that there had been no contempt on the part of the defendant. In view of the misunderstanding, counsel said he did not press for the costs to be paid by the Acting Master personally, but he did not see any reason why the respondent should pay the costs.

Mr. Jones contended, in reply, that the order of Court had not been carried out, and, with regard to the costs, he submitted that the respondent's default was the cause of the costs having been incurred, and he should bear the same.

De Villiers, C.J.: If the account filed by the respondent had been in every way a satisfactory account I should have had some difficulty in dealing with this matter upon the question of costs, but this account seems to me a wholly unsatisfactory account. It is very perfunctory, it has no details such as an account of a trustee should give, and, therefore, I think the respondent should pay the costs of this application. There will be no order for attachment, seeing that there has been some attempt on the part of the respondent to obey the order of the Court. He has acted perfectly bona fide, but still he has not filed such an account as in my opinion he ought to have filed, and for the neglect he ought to pay costs. He has the opinion of the Court that this account is insufficient, and he will, therefore, have to amend that account.

Ex parte BOTHA.

Mr. Buchanan moved for an order authorising a certain deed of transfer to be executed and registered. The petitioner stated that he resided at Jagersfontein, in the Orange River Colony, but formerly resided at Colesberg. On the 14th February last he sold a farm in the said district of Colesberg to the R.B. and B. Syndicate for £3,639 8s. 3d. The memorandum of association of the said syndicate was not signed until the 17th June of this year. From the affidavits of Mr. Abe Bailey, Sir L. Michell, and Mr. E. R. Syfret, it appeared that there had been certain delay in the completion of the articles on account of the deed having to be referred to subscribers in Johannesburg, and some of the executors in the estate of the late C. J. Rhodes, residing in England. It was stated, however, that the original purchasers of the farm and the syndicate were in effect the same.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Is the question one as to transfer duty?]

Transfer duty has been paid once, but the Registrar contends that, seeing that the syndicate was not in existence at the time of the purchase, transfer duty must be paid by the syndicate before the property can be registered in their name.

A rule was granted, calling upon the Treasurer-General to show cause on the 23rd inst. why an order should not be granted in terms of the prayer.

GREEN AND SEA POINT MUNICIPALITY V. MORRIS. 1903. Nov. 17th

Interdict — Municipality — Building regulatiohs.

Certain building regulations framed under the Municipal Amendment Act of 1896, described the materials which should be used in the construction of new buildings within the Municipality to ensure the stability of such buildings. The respondents, in laying the foundations of certain buildings, used materials prohibited by the regulations, and likely, in the opinion of the Court, to endanger the stability of the erection and the safety of future inmates and probably of the general public, and they refused to comply with the request of the municipal engineer that they would use proper materials.

Held on motion, that the Municipality was entitled to an interdict, restraining respondents from erecting walls on such foundations unless and until the structure of the same should be such as not to endanger the safety of any buildings erected thereon, but leave was reserved to the respondents to institute an action to have such interdict set aside.

This was a motion to make absolute a rule nisi to restrain the defendants from proceeding with the erection of certain houses in Morris-road, Sea Point, until such time as they should have complied with the Municipal regulations

The affidavits of various officials of the Council alleged that considerable difficulty had arisen between the Council and the respondents as to the property, and that the defendants had proceeded with the erection of houses without first having plans passed.

Sir H. Juta (for the respondent) said he would like to know what the interdict applied to, as it would considerably shorten the case if it was only the second block of houses.

Mr. Searle (for the applicants) said that the objection was to the second block, on the ground of improper drainage and indifferent materials.

The answering affidavit of Jacob Morris set forth that the plans had been approved of by the Council, and in support of the statement, he referred to the correspondence. Deponent also stated that the stables were also approved of by the Council, and that the interdict was based entirely on the question of material. He instructed Mr. Cairncross, the late Municipal Engineer for the city of Cape Town, and Mr. Esdon to inspect the buildings, and they were entirely satisfied with the work. The work had been carried on under the supervision of the late Building Inspector of the Municipality, and any alterations suggested to him by the Council's representative were carried out. The sample of the foundation was taken before the preparation was properly mixed, and he could prove by witnesses that the foundations were 2 feet 4 inches wide. The affidavit of Solomon Morris corroborated that of his brother, and added that notice was repeatedly given to the Municipal Engineer that the work was proceeding. The Municipal Engineer said he would condemn the building before he saw it. Reports were read from Mr. Cairncross, who for twenty years had been engineer to the city of Cape Town, and others, to the effect that there was nothing wrong with the material.

The replying affidavit of the Municipal Engineer denied that he condemned the whole of the building.

The affidavit of the Sanitary Inspector stated that he instructed the respondents to desist from proceeding with the work on the second block until the plans were approved.

Other affidavits stated that there was apparently no sand in the sample, and that the cement appeared to have no effect.

Sir H. Juta contended that, in order to obtain an interdict, the applicant must show that irreparable damage would ensue to the person applying. At the bottom of the Municipality's objection, it was really not the question of the material, but that the class of building was not in keeping with the environment. Mr. Esdon, who had no interest in the case, said that the quality of material used was better than what was generally used in such buildings. Mr. Cairncross also said the same thing.

Counsel contended that no case had been made out in the evidence in favour of an interdict, and that the whole thing was a little dispute between the builders and the Municipality.

Mr. Searle said that the case for an interdict was overwhelming. The Municipality had not even approved and sanctioned plans of the drainage. He argued that the Municipality were quite within their rights in insisting upon a certain class of materials being employed in the construction of buildings. The Council objected that the foundations were not wide enough, and that the materials used were not of sufficiently good quality to meet the approval of the Municipal Engineer. They had the evidence of experienced witnesses that the material used was improper material, and the samples produced in court supported that view.

De Villiers, C.J.: The fourth section of the Municipal Act of 1896 confers on municipalities very large powers in the framing of building regulations. The fourth section enacts that "every municipality may, acting in accordance with the law under which it is constituted, from time to time make, alter, revoke, or amend the rules and regulations for all or any of the following purposes: For regulating the structure of walls, foundations, roofs, and chimneys, of new buildings . . . . for securing stability, the observance of sanitary precautions, the prevention of fires, and other purposes of health and public safety.' Under that Act the Municipality of Green and Sea Point has framed building regulations, giving minute details as to the structure of the different parts of buildings. The 226th regulation, for instance, describes the materials of which the walls of the building should be constructed. "The external walls of every building and other structure . . . . shall be constructed of good hard, sound, well-burnt bricks, sound stone, or other hard and incombustible substances." The object of the Act is to enable municipalities to provide for the safety of the tenants, who are to inhabit the houses, and the public, who might be in the neighbourhood of such houses. On reference, however, to the 224th regulation, I am bound to say that it is rather obscurely worded. It is not at all perfectly clear what is meant. The section provides that "The foundations of the walls of every building or other structure hereafter erected or reconstructed shall rest on proper footings. When concrete is used as a foundation, such a foundation shall be at least nine inches wider than the foremost course of brickwork which is to rest thereon. The footings shall be placed on solid ground, concrete or some other solid sub-structure, and shall be either of brick or stone, or brick and stone laid in good lime or cement mortar, to the satisfaction of the Council's engineer, or of cement concrete." The word "footings" here seems to be used in two different senses, but, upon the whole, I am of opinion that the object of this regulation is to confer on the Municipality a right of control in regard to the foundations similar to the control conferred on it in regard to the structure of the walls. If it is essential to the stability of buildings that the walls should be constructed of proper materials, it is still more essential that the foundations on which the walls rest should be secure. The respondents, however, have used materials for the foundations which, if the applicants' affidavits are correct, will endanger the stability of any building that may be constructed thereon. Samples of the materials used have been submitted to the Court, and if they fairly represent the everage quality of the materials there can be no doubt that heavy rains would bring down any buildings erected thereon. It is just possible that the respondents may be able to disprove the statements, and for that purpose they will be allowed to bring an action to set aside any order now made, but as the evidence before the Court shows it would not be fair to future tenants, or even to the general public, to allow the construction to proceed, to allow the construction to proceed. The Court will therefore grant the interdict with costs, restraining the respondents from building upon any foundations on which the building of walls has not been commenced, unless and until the structure of such foundations shall be such as not to endanger the safety of any buildings erected thereon, with leave to the respondents to institute an action to have such interdict set aside and to recover any costs paid.

[Applicants' Attorneys: Van Zyl and Buissiuné; Respondent's Attorneys: Silberbauer, Wahl and Fuller.]

NZOBO V. NDABA AND ANOTHER. { 1903. Nov. 17th.

Native custom—Tribal tenure.

Certain land within one of the Native Territories had been purchased for the use of a certain Native tribe with funds raised from the contributions of the members of that tribe. Transfer had been passed to the chief and eleven councillors, as trustees for the tribe. These conditions had not been inserted in the Deed of Transfer. Two of these councillors had obtained an order of Court, enabling them to pass transfer of a portion of this land to a certain purchaser. On the application of certain other members of the tribe, who were not represented when the former order was granted, the Court now granted an order, restraining transfer from being passed, pending an action to be forthwith brought by them for the rectification of the original transfer to the chief and his councillors.

This was an application upon notice of motion for a certain order of Court to be stayed pending an action to be brought by the applicants, or pending a further order of Court on hearing the applicants in opposition to the order already granted. Mr. Upington appeared for the applicants; Mr. Benjamin was for the respondents.

It appeared that Ndaba and Breakfast had obtained an order from the Court calling upon the other parties to a certain deed of property at Matatiele to enable the applicants to pass transfer of the property. (See 13, C.T.R., 618.) The other parties, Nzobo and eight others, were not represented when the matter first came before the Court, in consequence of some delay in the filing of affidavits, and they now asked the Court to grant leave to stay the previous order. Nzobo and others said it was distinctly understood at the time of the original purchase that none of the subscribers should dispose of their portion, because the object for which the land was bought would be defeated. There would be danger of all the land being absorbed by a neighbouring landowner, and the location of the tribe being curtailed.

Counsel having been heard in argument,

De Villiers, C.J.: If the circumstances now brought to the notice of the Court had been known to the learned judge who granted the order, I am satisfied that that order would never have been made. It is now stated that the persons who purported to sell portions of this farm were merely trustees for the tribe, that the Chief collected the purchase price from the tribe, and that transfer made to the Chief and eleven counsellors was intended to be made in trust for the tribe, and not to the eleven transferees individually. Through some omission, the conditions were not inserted in the transfer, and, in my opinion, an opportunity should be given to the applicants to institute an action to have the transfer amended by the insertion of these conditions. The Court will, therefore, grant an order restraining the transfer from being passed, pending an action to be forthwith brought by the present applicants for the rectification of the transfer. In regard to the costs of the previous application, the Court has already ordered these costs to be paid by the present applicant, and that order the Court will not now disturb, but it is understood that the applicants will be entitled to include in their claim for rectification of the transfer a claim also for the re-payment of any costs which they may pay in consequence of the previous order. As to the costs of the present application, they should be costs in the cause.

[Applicants' Attorneys: Findlay and Tait; Respondents' Attorneys: Van Zyl and Buissinné.]

HILLS v. COLONIAL GOVERNMENT. { 1903. Nov. 17th. „ 18th.

Appeal — Privy Council — 37th Rule of Court.

The plaintiff, in a civil suit, lodged a petition for leave to appeal to the Privy Council within fourteen days after final judgment, but failed to give notice to the defendant of the lodging of the appeal in manner required by the 37th Rule of Court. On application for leave to appeal, the defendant objected on the ground, inter alia, that the terms of the Rule had not been complied with.

Held, that although it might be competent for the Court with strict compliance with rules relating to appeals to the Supreme Court itself, it should not grant leave to appeal to another tribunal unless the requirements of the Rule have been complied with.

This was an application upon notice of motion for leave to appeal to the Privy Council against a judgment of this Court of the 3rd August last, the petitioner having deposited a security bond for £500, signed by the Bank of Africa.

The affidavit of the applicant's attorneys, Messrs. Tredgold, McIntyre and Bisset, stated that the plaintiff was aggrieved by the judgment of the Supreme Court, and that the matters in dispute exceeded in value £500.

The affidavit of Mr. John Henry Reid, of Messrs. Reid and Nephew, respondents' attorneys, stated that notice was given to him of the appeal on the 7th inst. According to the 37th rule of Court, the petition for leave to appeal must be lodged in the office of the Registrar within fourteen days next after judgment had been pronounced, and notice of the lodging of such petition must be forthwith given, but no such notice was given in the present case. The judgment against which the plaintiff now sought leave to appeal was passed upon the report of the referees appointed by the Court by order made on the 6th March, 1903, against which the plaintiff did not appeal, and the judgment now in question was given upon the application of the plaintiff himself.

Mr. Searle, K.C. (with him Mr. Close) for applicant; Mr. McGregor for respondent.

Mr. Searle said that what the petitioner wished to appeal upon was the question of interest, amounting to about £60,000 or £70,000. The Court held that no interest could be allowed as part of the actual cost of the work done on the lines by the plaintiff. That was really the important point that Mr. Hills wished to be decided. He submitted that petitioner could not have appealed upon that point until the Court gave judgment upon the report of the referee. The next point was as to proper notice not having been given to the respondents' attorneys. He was afraid that that was the case. The point was whether that notice was imperative. As far as he was aware, there was no definite case that decided that point. Counsel quoted Jones v. Cape Town Council (12 Juta, 19), and also from the Charter of Justice. He also cited the case of the Bank of Africa v. Cape of Good Hope Building Society (11 Sheil, p. 18), in which it was held that fourteen days was imperative as the period during which the petition should be lodged. There did not, however, appear to be any case which decided the question of notice being given. He did not see that any prejudice could have occurred to the Government through notice not having been given.

Mr. McGregor contended that the application should fail because notice of the appeal was not lodged within three months of judgment being given in the action. He urged that the date from which the period was to be reckoned was, not the 3rd August, but the 6th March. What it was now proposed to do was contrary to the 37th rule of Court. As to notice not having been given to the respondents, he submitted that his learned friend had not shown any authority for his opinion. He urged that the judgment given by the Court on the 6th March last was not an interlocutory judgment. Counsel contended that the case was quite different from the recent case of Hanekom, from Griqualand West (13 C.T.R., 834).

Mr. Searle having been heard in reply,

Cur. Adv. Vult.

Postea (November 18):

De Villiers, C.J.: This is an application for leave to appeal, and the application was opposed on two grounds, the first ground being that a final judgment was given in the month of March of this year, and the petition for leave to appeal was not filed until the month of August, and that consequently the rule has not been complied with which requires that the petition for leave to appeal shall be filed within fourteen days after the judgment has been pronounced. The judgment in the case was given in the month of March, and then the matter was referred to certain referees, and an application was made for a confirmation of the finding of the referees on the 3rd August. The terms of the judgment delivered in March were as follows: "The Court grants judgment for the plaintiff for the return of the shares, with costs to date of tender, dismisses the claim for damages, and appoints Arthur May Tippett, Thomas Roy, and Harry Gibson special referees to ascertain the actual cost incurred in respect of the construction of the line taken over by the Government, including buildings, plant, and materials, such cost not to include interest or goodwill or wasted expenditure, or any work or materials of which the Government has not received the benefit, and also to ascertain the amount paid by Government on account, and the amount of the retention money in the hands of the Government." Part of this order, no doubt, was final, but the form of the order of reference to certain referees was not final, and no final judgment upon the finding of the referees was given until the 3rd August, when the Court, having heard counsel, entered judgment for the plaintiff for the sum of £76,225 9s. 4d., with interest a tempore morae, with costs, including the fees and expenses of the special referees, the defendant, in his capacity as commissioner, undertaking liability in respect of items (a), (b), and (c) of the suspense account, and to pay the same or such portion thereof as he shall find to be due, not exceeding in any case the sums mentioned in the report. So far, therefore, as the judgment upon the referees' report was concerned, the final judgment, in my opinion, was only given on the 3rd August, and if therefore the rules of Court were complied with, after the 3rd August the plaintiff ought, in my opinion, to obtain leave to appeal, if the plaintiff feels aggrieved by the judgment. He claimed about half a million pounds; the judgment of the Court was for £76,000, and if he were aggrieved, it was upon a substantial matter upon which he was entitled to appeal. If, therefore, this were the only question, there would be no difficulty in granting leave to appeal, but a further objection has been raised, and that is that the 37th Rule of Court has not been complied with. The terms of that rule are clear and explicit: "When any person against whom any final judgment, decree, or sentence, or any rule or order of this Court, in any civil suit or action, having the effect of a final or definitive sentence, has been pronounced, made, or given, the party aggrieved may appeal to the Privy Council, provided that such person shall within fourteen days next after the same shall have been pronounced, made, or given lodge in the office of the Registrar of this Court his petition for leave to appeal therefrom, and shall forthwith give notice of the lodging of such petition to his opponent." If this had been a question of an appeal to this Court, I have no doubt whatever as to the power of the Court to dispense with the requirement of notice. The question arises whether this Court has the right to dispense with the requirement contained in a rule of Court in regard to an appeal to another tribunal. The matter was incidentally considered in the case of Jones v. Cape Town Council, and in that case the Court, adopting the practice which it has always adopted of facilitating appeals to the Privy Council, held that if the petition had been lodged, and notice given to the opposite side within the fourteen days, then it is always open within three months after the filing of the petition to make a formal application to the Court. The essential point is that there should be a lodging of the petition and notice to the opposite party. That was assumed. It was assumed in my own judgment, where I said, "It has always been assumed, if the petition was filed within fourteen days, and notice given to the opposite party of such filing, it was always open within three months after the filing of the petition to apply to the Court and give security." My brother Upington said: "In all my experience, I have always understood that if the petition were lodged with the Registrar, and notice given to the other side within the fourteen days, that was sufficient." In the present case, it is admitted that the petition was lodged, but the notice was not given to the opposite side till some weeks had elapsed after the time within which the notice had to be given. In my opinion, the Court should not, and cannot, dispense with a clear provision of a rule of Court, which is a condition precedent to the right of appeal to another tribunal. The 51st section of the Charter of Justice gives to the Privy Council full right and power to give leave to appeal, notwithstanding that any rules of Court in this court have not been complied with. It is, therefore, quite competent for the applicant to apply for leave to the Privy Council, and I have no doubt that such leave will be granted, but so far as this Court is concerned, I think it should not depart from the clear provisions of its own rules. The application will, therefore, be dismissed.

Kotzé, J., said he was of the same opinion. Seeing that this was an application for leave to appeal to another tribunal he thought that the Court had no discretion in the matter, but was bound by the rule as to notice. As the terms of the rule in question had not been complied with, leave to appeal to the Privy Council must be refused.

Mr. MacGregor (for the respondents): Will your lordship make any order as to costs?

De Villiers, C.J.: Costs will follow the result. Leave will be refused with costs.

[Applicant's Attorneys: Tredgold, McIntyre and Bisset; Respondents' Attorneys: Reid and Nephew.]

HALLER AND SOGWAGWA v. ESTATE HALLER AND MULLER.

This was an action brought by George Frantz Haller and Stofel Sogwagwa, married, in community of property, to Annie Sogwagwa (born Haller), of St. Mark's Mission Station, in Tembuland, against Louisa Christina Muller (born Haller), also of St. Mark's Mission Station, to have a certain will declared null and void.

The declaration set out that the defendant was sued in her capacity as executrix in the estate of the late Katrina Juliana Haller (born Schneider), and also as guardian and curator for all purposes material of the minors, Louisa Wilhelmina Haller and Carl Haller. Defendant's husband, Julius August Muller, sen., was also joined to the suit. The first-named plaintiff, the first-named defendant, and the said Annie Sogwagwa were children of the late Katrina Juliana Haller, who died on the 5th August, 1901. There were two other children, both majors. In or about July, 1901, a document purporting to be the last will of the said Katrina Juliana Haller, was signed at St. Mark's Mission Station, and the witnesses purported to be one Mr. Peters and one Mr. Haynes. The first-named defendant had taken out letters of administration under the said document. The said Peters and Harnes did not see the said Katrina Juliana Haller sign the said document, nor were they present either of them at the execution thereof, nor did they sign the said document in her presence, and the said document purporting to be such will was therefore null and void, for non-compliance with the provisions of Ordinance 15, of 1845. The plaintiffs said, further, that the said Katrina Juliana Haller was not at the time of the execution mentally capable of executing a valid will. Under the said document the testator purported to appoint her grandchildren, Louisa Wilhelmina Haller and Carl Haller, as her heirs respectively of three-quarters and one quarter of all her estate, and the first-named defendant as guardian and curator of the said minor children. The first-named defendant had in her possession the whole of the said estate, which was valued at about £350. The plaintiffs claimed: (a) That the said document be declared to be null and void; (b) that the said Katrina Juliana Haller be declared to have died intestate; (c) that the appointment of the first-named defendant as executrix be cancelled, and that she be ordered to account to such person as may be appointed executor dative in the estate of the said late Katrina Juliana Haller for the value thereof, and to pay over to him the portion to which the plaintiffs are entitled as heirs ab intestato; (d) alternative relief; (e) costs of suit.

Mr. Upington for the plaintiff; Defendant in default.

Counsel read the evidence taken on commission before the Assistant Resident Magistrate, at St. Mark's, from which it appeared that Wm. Peters, son-in-law of the deceased, stated that during Mrs. Haller's lifetime he was not a witness to any will made by her. The will was also witnessed, he noticed, by his daughter. The document was brought to his home by Mrs. Muller, and he signed it in order to oblige Mrs. Muller. He knew that Mrs. Haller had then been dead for some time. Other evidence was given to show that Mrs. Haller had for some years been mentally incapable of executing a will. It was stated that Mrs. Haynes was unable to attend to give evidence owing to the illness of her child.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Was no evidence given on behalf of Mrs. Muller?]

Mr. Upington: No.

[De Villiers, C.J.: It is a very serious charge that is made against Mrs. Muller.]

I may say counsel was not in possession of the full facts when the declaration was drawn, otherwise it might have been drawn differently.

Decree granted as prayed, costs to come out of the estate.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.).]

Ex parte CREDITORS OF THE COLONIAL BUILDING CORPORATION.
Ex parte SAMSON.
1903. Nov. 18th.

Company—Voluntary winding up—Compulsory winding up—Liquidator—Staying proceedings in winding up.

A special resolution having been passed for the voluntary winding up of the B. Company, three liquidators were duly appointed. Subsequently a majority of the shareholders, including the applicant, who was one of the liquidators, desired to stay proceedings in the winding up for the purpose of resuscitating the Company, and they passed a resolution to the effect that the applicant alone should control the liquidation without the intervention of the two other liquidators, and should apply to the Court for an order staying proceedings in the voluntary winding up. On such application being made, the two other liquidators, supported by a substantial minority of the shareholders and by the bulk of the creditors, opposed the application, and moved for the compulsory winding up of the Company.

Held, that although it might be competent for the Court, under the 143rd and 186th sections of the Companies' Act, 1892, to stay proceedings in a voluntary winding up, such a course was not advisable under the circumstances.

Held further, that in view of the facts that the Company had, by resolution of shareholders, been ordered to be wound up voluntarily, that the liquidators had arrived at a deadlock in the winding up, and that a substantial minority of the shareholders and the great majority of the creditors were opposed to a resuscitation of the Company and in favour of a compulsory winding up, it was just and equitable that the Company, although perfectly solvent, should now be wound up compulsorily.

These applications were heard together by consent. In the former petition the liquidators and certain creditors and shareholders applied for the company to be judicially wound up, and an official liquidator to be appointed. In the other petition, one Samson, supported by certain shareholders in England, applied for the company to be removed from voluntary liquidation, and to be allowed to carry on its business again.

The petition of George Gordon Samson stated that he was formerly managing director of the Building Corporation, and he was now one of the liquidators. The company was formed in November, 1895, and acquired various properties, which formed the company's assets. For some years it carried on business most successfully. At an extraordinary general meeting of shareholders held in Cape Town on the 30th July, 1902, during petitioner's absense in Europe, special resolutions were passed to wind up the company voluntarily. These resolutions were subsequently confirmed at a meeting held on the 15th August. Upon hearing of these resolutions, one Stockham and other shareholders resident in England moved the Supreme Court to set aside the proceedings at the said meetings on the ground (1) that they had received no notice of the said meetings; (2) that certain proxies had been rejected; and (3) that the company was solvent. The motion did not succeed.* In May, 1902, petitioner, who had been managing director of the company and secretary since its flotation, tendered his resignation on account of ill-health. This resignation was not accepted by the directors, and he again tendered it at a later date, with the alternative of six months' leave of absence. The Board accepted the resignation, and gave petitioner a bonus of £50. Petitioner left for England on the 4th June. Then the meetings were called in Cape Town to discuss the position of the company. On the 20th August a meeting of the English shareholders was convened by Mr. H. W. Stockham in London, at which it appeared that they were entirely opposed to the liquidation of the company. A requisition was prepared and signed by some 21 English and local Cape Town shareholders, praying that a meeting should be convened in Cape Town for the purpose of rescinding and reviewing the proceedings of the meetings held in Cape Town. No meeting was convened by the liquidators conformably thereto. Since the company was placed under voluntary liquidation many properties had been sold. The business of the company had not been carried on by the liquidators to the satisfaction of the shareholders, and in their opinion it would be better to reinstate the company. Petitioner held proxies representing 2,837 shares. The total number of shares issued was over 6,000. A special meeting of shareholders was held in Cape Town on the 6th October, 1903, at which petitioner was asked to take further steps in the matter.

*See 12 C.T.R. 740.

The answering affidavits of Messrs. John Yeoman and A. T. Hennessy, liquidators of the company, said that the properties of the company had been valued. The valuation of Mr. G. Smart was £9,855, whilst Mr. Hennessy's was £9,500. Deponents had no notice of the meeting held in England. The properties which had been sold by the liquidators had produced very satisfactory prices, and had realised £420 in excess of the book values. It was denied that petitioner was a creditor of the company. He was a debtor of the company for £7 2s. 5d. in respect of rent collected by him, and not accounted for. The company was solvent, and if the business were carefully carried on contributors should receive 22s. 6d. in the £. Deponents believed that the resumption of the business of the company would not be beneficial to the interests of the shareholders. During the liquidation about £4,050 had been paid off on preferent claims. An affidavit by Mr. H. M. Arderne stated that, as a contributor and creditor and agent of other creditors of the company, he was strongly opposed to the application of the petitioner Samson; and a further affidavit by Mr. J. D. Logan stated that as a contributor in respect of 50 shares, he was opposed, upon the facts before him, to the liquidation of the company being suspended.

The replying affidavit of the petitioner Samson admitted certain of the allegations of the deponents, but said that the valuations made by Messrs. Smart and Hennessy were altogether worthless. Through the want of expert knowledge and inefficient administration on the part of the liquidators, Messrs. Yeoman and Hennessy, the company showed a very small profit. He anticipated no difficulty in obtaining other mortgages if all the others were called up, and there was no danger of the assets being sacrificed. The overwhelming majority of the shareholders for suspending the liquidation would justify the Court in acceding to the petition. Replying to that of Mr. Arderne, petitioner in his affidavit accused Messrs. Yeoman and Hennessy of neglect in not paying a certain bond. An affidavit was put in from Sub-Inspector Osberg, showing that the value of a house which he bought in April, 1901, had almost doubled in value at the present time.

[De Villiers, C.J.: That does not show that there was neglect in 1901.]

Mr. Upington (for the applicant, Samson): No, my lord. The object of this is to show the value of a similar house sold by the liquidators, while the company was in liquidation. Counsel proceeded to read affidavits from Philip Turner as to advantageous purchases he had made from the liquidators, and from Christopher Crowe, a director, to the effect that a suspension of the liquidation would be to the interests of the shareholders.

Mr. Gardiner (for the petitioning creditors) put in a list of mortgages, and a list of the names of shareholders with their respective holdings, who desired the winding-up of the company. The affidavit of Mr. Arderne set forth that the loan of £1,600 was to relieve another bond that had been called up. In view of the difference of opinion and the pressing claims of bond-holders, he suggested that Geo. Wm. Steytler should be appointed as official liquidator.

Mr. Upington read the answering affidavit of the petitioner, denying that there never was any suggestion about the temporary loan of £1,660. Mr. Arderne was paid the usual commission, and he was aware it was a permanent loan.

Mr. Gardiner read a replying affidavit, and put in several from shareholders to the effect that the liquidation was the best thing in the interests of the shareholders.

Counsel having been heard in argument on the facts,

De Villiers, C.J.: The Court has very large powers in cases of voluntary winding-up under the 186th section of the Act, which enacts that, "where a company has been wound up the voluntary liquidators or any contributory of the company may apply to the Court to determine any question arising in the matter of such winding-up, or to exercise, as respects the enforcing of calls or in respect of any other matter, all or any of the powers which the Court might exercise if that company were being wound up by the Court." Amongst the powers which the Court may exercise in a case of compulsory winding up, is that of staying proceedings, and I am quite prepared to accept the view that where the proper occasion arises the Court may even stay proceedings in a voluntary winding-up. The question, however, is, has the occasion arisen in this case? In my opinion this is not one of those cases in which the Court should exercise the power. The voluntary liquidation was arrived at apparently with the consent of the requisite number. An application was subsequently made to the Supreme Court to set aside the order for the voluntary winding-up on the ground that the proper and requisite majority had not been obtained. That order was refused, and subsequently the liquidators proceeded with their duties, but they seem never to have been able to agree. There were continual squabbles, and the matter has now arrived at such a point that it appears to me impossible to expect harmonious co-operation between the three liquidators. If there had been only one or two objecting creditors, the Court might have directed that proceedings should be stayed upon buying out the objecting shareholders, but there is a substantial minority of the shareholders who object to the proproposed course. They object to this company being reconstructed, and in addition the great bulk of the creditors also object, and therefore I think this is not a case in which the Court should exercise any special powers which it might be able to exercise under the 186th section, and the only further question is: what is the Court to do? It seems to me that the parties are in a hopeless difficulty. If we allow the liquidation to proceed nothing will come of it, no proper business will be done; the shareholders have passed a resolution, an extraordinary resolution, to the effect that one of these liquidators shall have the power to control the liquidation without the assistance or the control of the other liquidators. In my opinion, that is a resolution which makes the winding-up unworkable. The respondents in the present case now say that a case has arisen in which the Court should exercise the power of ordering a compulsory winding up. The Court has that power in cases where the Court is of opinion that it is just and equitable that the company should be wound up. The creditors have already decided upon a voluntary winding-up; in the course of that winding-up, it is found impossible for the liquidators to carry on the business—the whole thing has arrived at a standstill—and the Court has to decide, under the 186th section, whether it would be just and equitable in the interests of all parties concerned, creditors as well as shareholders, that this company should be wound up in an effectual way. The voluntary winding-up has been wholly ineffectual hitherto. It will be quite effectual if the Court appoints its own liquidator, over whom the Court will have sufficient jurisdiction to see that the winding up is properly carried on. The Court is of opinion that an order should be made for the winding up of this company, and that Mr. Steytler should be appointed as official liquidator, with the full powers generally granted under the 149th section. In regard to the costs of this application, both applicants have acted in what they believed to be the interests of the shareholders and the creditors, and I consider it right that the costs of both the applicant and the respondent should come out of the estate. The question has been raised in the affidavits whether the liquidators—the voluntary liquidators—should receive any remuneration for their services, but that will be a question for the official liquidator. He will consider that matter, and report to the Court, and I have no doubt he will award to each of the liquidators a fair remuneration for the services he has rendered.

[Attorneys for the creditors: Fairbridge, Arderne and Lawton; Attorneys for the applicant Samson: Van Zyl and Buissinné.]

Ex parte PALMER. { 1903. Nov. 18th.

Fraud — Defence of prisoner — Cash found on prisoner.

The applicant being in gaol, awaiting trial for fraud, applied to the Court for an order on the police, who had taken possession of all the money found on his person at the time of his arrest, to hand over to the applicant's attorney a part of the money for the purpose of enabling him to provide for his defence. The Court ordered the sum of £20 to be so paid over to the applicant's attorney.

This was an application on behalf of Walter Alfred Palmer, now awaiting trial on a charge of fraud or theft, for the payment of a sum of £100 from funds in the hands of the police to the petitioner's attorney, for the purposes of his defence and his food, and other necessaries as occasion might require. Mr. Howel Jones appeared on behalf of the Attorney-General.

The petition stated that the petitioner was at present in Roeland-street Gaol, Cape Town, where he was awaiting trial on a charge of fraud or theft, and attempting to commit the crime of fraud. At the time of his arrest the petitioner had in his possession the amount of £229 15s. 6d., more or less, which was now in the hands of the police. He instructed his attorney to make an application for payment of this money for his defence and for food, but the application was refused. It was pointed out in the letter of refusal that the money was supposed to be portion of the stolen property. The petitioner drew out from his bank the amount of £248, and along with other moneys in his possession, this made up the amount of £299 15s. 6d. found on him on the day of his arrest. He was to be tried at the Criminal Sessions on the 23rd inst., and he had no money for his defence. He had not been able to find bail, and he had no funds whatever apart from the money in the hands of the police. An affidavit was read from the petitioner's attorney, Charles Edward Price Hughes, to the effect that it would be necessary to obtain witnesses for the defence from New York.

The affidavit of the Assistant Resident Magistrate of Cape Town stated that at the preliminary examination the accused was charged with fraud, and subsequently committed for trial. The money found on the accused was supposed to be portion of the money obtained by fraud.

Mr. Pyemont moved.

Mr. Jones (for the Crown) explained that no notice was served upon the Attorney-General, and in order to expedite matters, he had an affidavit drawn up by the Acting Chief Clerk, which stated that the prisoner had been indicted on a charge of fraud or theft and attempted fraud. From the evidence adduced and the statements made by the assistant accountant of the Cape Town branch of the Standard Bank, it appeared that the amount of £299 15s. 6d. now in the hands of the police was a portion of the proceeds of the crime alleged to have been committed by the petitioner. Counsel said it appeared that the accused gave himself out as the managing director of the South African Trading Company of New York, Delagoa Bay, Durban, and other places, and he inserted advertisements in the newspapers about the end of August calling upon persons to apply to him for the positions of collectors and managers, and they had to deposit security with him. He received £450 from several people between 29th August and the 8th September. This sum was paid into the bank, and all drawn out again—about £300—on the 8th September. Next day he was discovered with the amount stated in his possession, on his way to the Docks with his baggage. Counsel read an affidavit from Mr. Kinsley, acting for Messrs. Lane and Haupt, objecting to the police parting with any of the money in their possession, and also the cheque for £100, which he received from Mr. Haupt. The numbers of the notes which the accused obtained from Mr. Lane were known, and these notes and cheque were obtained by means of false pretences. Counsel said that the evidence showed that these notes were found in the possession of the prisoner, and the cheque, which was drawn in favour of Haupt, was banked on the 8th September. There was very strong evidence against the prisoner. On the 29th August he received £150 from two persons; on 1st September, £100 from one person; 4th September, he deposited £200 at the bank. On 7th September, he obtained £100 in notes.

Mr. Pyemont put it to the Court whether the police had any ground on which the application for the money was refused. He had not seen the record of the proceedings, but as the applicant had not been proved to be guilty, he went on the assumption that he was innocent. If there were any money which could not be identified, then the police had no right to retain it All his learned friend's argument had been based on the assumption that the man was guilty of theft. That assumption could not be granted for one moment. He submitted that the petitioner should not be interdicted from using money found in his possession that had not been identified. If the money could all be identified, then the matter might be placed on a different footing. His learned friend had also said that the petitioner had opened a banking account for the purposes of this crime. He (Mr. Pyemont) was informed that the petitioner had previously had a banking account. The petitioner desired to get his witnesses from New York, and if the trial took place on the 23rd, he would be debarred from doing so.

Mr. Jones (in reply) said that if the prisoner was allowed this money for his defence, it meant that the people who had been defrauded would be paying his expenses.

De Villiers, C.J.: If the accused had been in possession of stolen property, or even of property alleged to have been stolen, the Court would not order such property to be handed over to the accused for the purpose of enabling him to defend himself, but the bank notes acquired by the accused do not belong to his creditors. They are not stolen property. They may be the proceeds of the stolen property, but the ownership of the bank notes is not in the creditors, and therefore it is impossible to hold that these bank-notes or the money in the possession of the accused is stolen property. It is quite competent, therefore, for the Court, having due regard to the rights of the persons alleged to have been defrauded and to the possible innocence of the applicant, to order a certain sum to be paid over by the police to the attorney of the accused for the purpose of enabling him to provide for his defence. The only question is as to the amount. It appears to me that £100 is excessive, and I think that £20 would be sufficient to enable him to have a fair defence in the case, and the Court will therefore order that £20 be paid out of the money in the hands of the police.

Mr. Jones: £80 is really identified, my lord.

De Villiers, C.J.: There will then be £20 not identified, but even the bank notes are not identified as having been actually stolen.

Mr. Jones: Oh, yes, they were, my lord.

De Villiers, C.J.: The bank-notes are identified as being the proceeds of the fraud, but not as being the property taken. But the cash in the possession of the prisoner which cannot be identified at all exceeds £20, and therefore the order will be made as stated.

[Applicant's Attorney: P. Hughes.]

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP and the Hon. Mr. Justice KOTZÉ.]

REX v. MARITZ. } 1903. Nov. 19th.

Spare diet.

By the Governor's regulations published in Circular No. 11 of 1881, no juvenile offender under the age of 16 years can be sentenced to spare diet.

Kotzé, J.: A case came before me as judge of the week from the Special Justice of the Peace for Herbertsdale, in the Mossel Bay division. It is a case of a young boy, age 15, named Johannes Martz, who was charged with malicious destruction of property. He pleaded guilty, and the Special Justice sentenced him to six days' imprisonment, and two days on spare diet. Under the Magistrates' Act (section 42), it is laid down that magistrates have to conform to regulations published from time to time with reference to spare diet, and a special Justice of the Peace has, in the same way as a magistrate has, also to conform to these regulations. Now, it appears that regulations were published by a Circular (No. 11 of 1881), which, amongst other things, provides that no spare diet shall be inflicted upon juvenile offenders under the age of 16 years. The record in this case is that the boy is about 15 years of age, and, consequently, that portion of the sentence which relates to spare diet is struck out.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

BETHE AND VAN EHREN V. DREYER AND SUSSMAN.

Mr. Upington said that this was the return day of a rule nisi, calling upon one Lewis Burman, of 1, William-street, Cape Town, to show cause why he should not be interdicted from dealing with certain goods purchased by the respondents from the applicants. It had been impossible to effect service of the rule upon either Dreyer or Sussman, and counsel was instructed to apply for an extension of the return day until the 12th December.

Mr. Buchanan said he represented Lewis Burman, of 1, William-street, upon whom the rule had been served. He read an affidavit by Burman, which stated that he bought the goods from Dreyer and Sussman, who had carried on business in Caledon-street, and had paid the price agreed upon, £142 3s.

Mr. Upington said that the estate of Dreyer and Sussman was now in provisional sequestration. He contended that the sale to Burman was not a fair and bona fide sale, and that applicants should have some opportunity of answering the affidavit of Burman.

The matter was ordered to mentioned later.

Later on, Mr. Upington said that the replying affidavits could be prepared in three or four days.

The matter was ordered to stand over until Monday.

Postea (November 23):

Mr. Buchanan (for the respondent) said that the matter was ordered to stand over until the 23rd November, upon an application for an interdict granted upon the petition of Charles Friedlander, attorney, from which it appeared that the plaintiffs were a firm carrying on business in Hamburg, and were the owners of certain property in Hanover-street. In October an agreement was entered into with the original respondents, Dreyer and Sussman, who agreed to buy the stock in the said premises for £240, payable by £50 in cash, £60 in three months, £70 in six months, and £60 in nine months. None of the instalments had been paid, and counsel appeared for a man named Lewis Burman, to whom the stock had been sold, and who was restrained from parting with any of the goods pending the decision of an action against Dreyer and Sussman. The notice was, in the first instance, granted against a man named Lewis, who turned out to be Lewis Burman, of 1, William-street, Cape Town. The affidavit of Burman set out that he first made the acquaintance of the first-named respondent in October, 1903, when he purchased 5 dozen of aprons, and obtained a receipt from Joseph Dreyer, who informed him that he intended selling all his stock and taking other premises. On October 28, £142 3s. was paid for the remainder of the said stock, and Joseph Dreyer receipted the transaction.

De Villiers, C.J., said there was no proof of a fraudulent sale to Burman, and that the rule must be discharged, with costs.

ARMSTRONG AND CO. V. DAVIDSON.

1903. Nov. 19th

Master and servant—Competition in trade—Interdict.

Respondent had contracted to serve the applicants under an agreement, by which, inter alia, he engaged not to enter into trade competition with them anywhere within a radius of twenty miles for the space of five years. After a few months respondent left the service of applicants, and there was some evidence to show that the said agreement was cancelled by mutual consent. Respondent thereafter commenced business on his own account in the same town in which he had served the applicants. Applicants now applied, on motion, for an interdict to restrain him from carrying on his said business.

Held, that in face of the evidence produced by the respondent, the interdict must be refused with costs and the applicants left to their ordinary remedy by action.

This was an application upon notice of motion for an interdict restraining the respondent from carrying on or entering into business as an engraver and signwriter within twenty miles of Cape Town for a period of five years.

The affidavit of George E. Shelvoke, a partner in the firm of W. H. Armstrong and Co., engravers, die sinkers, etc., Cape Town, stated that on the 16th March, 1903, the parties entered into an agreement for the engagement of the respondent to assist in applicants' business. Respondent came to the Colony from England, and entered applicants' service on the 6th April. On the 3rd October the respondent, for good and sufficient reasons, was dismissed from the service of the applicant firm, and was no longer in their employ. He had since opened business as an engraver and signwriter in Cape Town, having his office at Medway Chambers, and had canvassed customers of the applicants for orders, although by the agreement (clause 5) he was specially debarred from doing so. The agreement, which was dated the 17th March, 1903, stated that the respondent agreed to serve them for two years from the date of commencing work, and clause 5 was in the following terms: "The employee shall not during the service nor afterwards, within the radius of 20 miles of Cape Town, aforesaid, for a period of five years, be engaged or interested, either directly or indirectly, whether on his own account or in partnership, in a business similar to that of the employers." Affidavits from the managers of two firms in town were also put in, showing that the respondent had solicited orders for engraving from them.

The answering affidavit of the respondent, Charles Davison, stated that he had applied for situations in Cape Town and Johannesburg, but without success; hence he had been compelled to start business, as he had no other means of subsistence. He denied that he was dismissed from applicants' employ, and said that he left their service by a mutual agreement. When it was agreed that he should leave their service, he understood that the original agreement was cancelled in all respects. He attached a certificate granted to him by the applicant in the following terms: "During the time Mr. Charles Davison has been with us we have been well satisfied with the excellence of his copperplate work. He leaves us by mutual agreement."

The replying affidavit of Mr. Shelvoke stated that the respondent was dismissed from their service by reason of his unpunctuality and his continued insolence to himself (deponent). He told the respondent that they would strictly adhere to the terms of the agreement.

Mr. Russell (for the applicants): The applicants rely on paragraph 5 of the agreement. Even if respondent's services were terminated, that would not terminate the agreement. See paragraph 5 of the replying affidavit. We do not object to his getting work, we only object to his setting up in business for himself.

[Kotzé, J.: I cannot understand how you came to dismiss him for wrongful conduct and yet give him a certificate of character.]

That certificate refers only to the character of his work. We wished to get rid of him, and perhaps he wished to leave. The question as to whether he left by mutual consent or was discharged cannot affect the contract of service.

Mr. Benjamin (for the respondent): The applicants have not made out a claim for an interdict on motion; their remedy (if any) is by action. Their own certificate shows that their agreement with the respondent was at an end; and it does not lie in their mouths to say that this certificate was a bogus document. If the agreement was terminated by mutual consent, all its conditions fall to the ground. Respondent's undertaking as to not setting up in business for himself would apply only if he remained in the applicant's service or was dismissed for unsatisfactory conduct. The applicant's admit in their affidavit that the agreement was terminated by mutual consent.

Mr. Russell (in reply): The letter "A" shows that he left by mutual agreement.

[Maasdorp, J.: If he was dismissed, there could be no question of mutual agreement.]

That was a mutual agreement that he should quit the service of the applicants, but not that the contract should be cancelled.

[Maasdorp, J.: You see your affidavit and the evidence are contradictory.]

Maasdorp, J.: The applicants engaged the defendant in England to come out to this colony and do the work of engraving here, and it was agreed between them that "the employee shall not, during such service or afterwards, within the radius of twenty miles of Cape Town aforesaid, for a period of five years, be engaged or interested, directly or indirectly, whether on his own account or in partnership in a business similar to that of his employers." The applicants allege that they dismissed the respondent from their service, and that, under the 7th clause of this agreement, in case the servant should be dismissed because he is incompetent, or on account of his having committed a breach of agreement, the conditions of the 5th clause of the agreement shall hold good; that is, after such dismissal he shall not be entitled to undertake the business of an engraver. The respondent, in his affidavit, alleges that he was not dismissed, but that the contract was mutually determined by the parties; and further, that when it was so determined, it was agreed that the applicant should raise no objection to his obtaining employment as an engraver with any other firm in Cape Town. Now, the first point of importance which the Court has to decide is whether he was dismissed, because then the 7th section would come into operation. The respondent put in a document, signed by the firm, in which they support his statement that the contract was determined by mutual agreement. Now, the Court would not grant an interdict of this kind unless a clear right had been made out and proof given that irreparable damage will be done. Unless that is proved, the applicants are left to their ordinary remedy of proceeding by action. The applicants now seem to admit that there was some mutual agreement by which the agreement was terminated, but they say they did not consent to his obtaining employment as an engraver. In the face of these contradictions, and seeing that there was some support to the respondent's statement in this document signed by the firm, the conclusion I come to is that there was not a clear case of a right made out. The Court cannot now decide whether the contract was mutually determined, and whether leave was granted or not to obtain employment elsewhere. Under the circumstances, the interdict must be refused, with costs, and the applicants left to their ordinary remedy of proceeding by action.

Kotzé, J., concurred.

[Applicants' Attorneys: A. W. Steer; Respondent's Attorneys: Reid and Nephew.]

Ex parte MATTHEWS.

Mr. Searle, K.C., moved for the appointment of a curator ad litem to represent the minor child of the petitioner in an action to be instituted to decide the meaning of a certain will and deed of donation. The parties belonged to Oudtshoorn.

Order granted as prayed, Mr. Burton being appointed curator ad litem.

Ex parte WALBURGH.

Mr. Benjamin moved for an order authorising the Registrar of Deeds to pass transfer of certain property in the estate of the late Samadien Jonathan, sold at public auction to Jacob C. Poles and the petitioner. The purchase price was £2.250, and the Divisional Council valuation was £1,350. The petitioner was one of the executors testamentary in the estate.

Order granted as prayed.

Ex parte SONNENBERG.

Mr. Benjamin moved for an order authorising the transfer of certain property. By virtue of the power of attorney, petitioner was the agent of Alex. McGregor, who was at present in England, and whose estate had been voluntarily surrendered on the 10th April, 1900. On May 1, 1903, the estate, by an order of the Court, was discharged on all the creditors receiving certain payments, and consenting to release the insolvent of his debts. The said Alexander McGregor was the owner of two pieces of land convenient to the Lion's Rump, which property he had since sold to the petitioner. The Registrar of Deeds refused to pass transfer on the ground that the insolvent was not re-invested in his property. It would be necessary to have a resolution passed by the creditors which would entail considerable delay, and the sole trustee, Mr. George Wm. Steytler, had consented to the transfer of the property from the said McGregor. Counsel explained that there had been a mistake in applying to the Court for discharge under section 117, instead of under section 107, the latter of which would have re-invested the insolvent with his property. The property had been sold since the rehabilitation.

Order granted, authorising the trustee to pass transfer of this property of the insolvent to the petitioner.

Ex parte LOTZ.

Mr. Upington, for the petitioner, moved for an order authorising the amendment of certain letters of administration. The petition set forth that the applicant in his capacity as executor dative in the estate of the late John Johannes Brand, of Cape Town, filed the first and final liquidation account, by which the widow was entitled to the landed property of the estate. The property stood in the name of Johannes Jacobus Brand, and upon petitioner seeking transfer, the Registrar of Deeds called for a declaration of identity. Counsel put in the affidavits of the petitioner, and of the deceased's widow, to the effect that although Johannes Jacobus Brand was his correct name, the deceased was also known as John Johannes Brand. The name was given in the death notice as John Johannes Brand, and on that ground the Master refused to amend the letters of administration.

The matter was ordered to stand over, pending a report from the Master, to whom the matter was referred.

Mr. Upington, later in the day, mentioned that the Master had reported that the statements contained in the petition were correct, and that if the matter had been brought to his notice earlier, he might have been able to act on his own responsibility; but the matter had gone so far now that an order of Court was necessary.

Order granted, authorising the Master to alter the name of John Johannes Brand to that of Johannes Jacobus Brand in the letters of administration.

Ex parte GWYNNE.

Mr. Buchanan moved for the amendment of a certain deed of transfer, altering the name of Ryland and Sons, Africa, Ltd., to Ryland and Sons, Colonial, Ltd. The name was changed on 24th December, 1901, when the company was the registered proprietor of certain property, situated at Port Elizabeth, which they held in the deed of transfer in the name of Rylands and Sons, Africa, Ltd. The property had been sold to one Prior, and the Registrar of Deeds required that the name should be changed by an order of Court.

Maasdorp, J., said that the Registrar of Deeds had objected, and the Court would like to know what his objection was; and the matter was ordered to stand over for further information from the Registrar of Deeds as to the objection raised by him.

Postea (November 20): Mr. Buchanan stated that the Registrar suggested that the transfer should read "Ryland and Sons, Africa, Ltd.," now known and registered as "Ryland and Sons, Colonial Ltd."

Order granted in terms of the Registrar's report.

Ex parte VENABLES.

Mr. Russell moved for leave to transfer certain property without the assistance of the petitioner's husband. A rule nisi was granted on the 25th September, calling on the husband to show cause, but his whereabouts could not be traced and publication had been made in the "Cape Times" and a paper in Tarkastad, as required by the rule.

Order granted as prayed.

KRAMER V. KLEINBACH.

Mr. Benjamin applied for this matter to stand over until the 12th December. A rule had been granted restraining one Medska and others from dealing with a certain draft on the African Banking Corporation, at East London.

Mr. Buchanan, who appeared for the African Banking Corporation, said he was instructed to move that the rule be discharged. The bank were called upon to show cause why they should not be restrained from parting with the said draft or paying out moneys.

Mr. Benjamin said the respondent Kleinbach was now in gaol awaiting trial on charges connected with the same subject, and Medska had not been served.

Mr. Buchanan said that the draft was drawn on the bank in London.

The matter as between applicant and the bank was ordered to stand over until the 12th December and the return day extended accordingly as against the other respondents, questions of costs to stand over.

Postea (December 16): The rule was made absolute as regards Kleinbach and Metzki, but discharged as to the bank.

Ex parte MONGAMELE.

Mr. Searle, K.C., moved on behalf of the petitioner (a minor), living in Eastern Pondoland, and son of the late paramount chief of Pondoland, for the appointment of a curator ad litem to represent him in a dispute with Siga, as to certain cattle. Petitioner seemed to have no guardian, and he had applied to the Chief Magistrate for a guardian, and the Magistrate disapproved of Umbali, the guardian suggested, and said he was not a fit person. The Magistrate further said he did not see why a guardian should be appointed, because he might take the dispute to arbitration, or settle it otherwise, but the difficulty was that if the petitioner went to arbitration it would not be binding, as he was a minor. Petitioner claimed about 700 cattle as the representative of the younger house, and Siga tendered about 30.

The matter was referred to the Chief Magistrate of Pondoland, to recommend to the Court a fit and proper person to represent the minor, as curator ad litem, either in arbitration or legal proceedings.

Ex parte WILLIAMS AND ANOTHER.

Mr. Gardiner moved for an order authorising the first-named petitioner, who was the executrix testamentary of her late husband, to use certain money. The second-named petitioner was George William Steytler, secretary of the Colonial Orphan Chamber. Mrs. Williams enjoyed the usufruct of the property on certain conditions. The total income from the property was £162 14s. 8d. Mrs. Williams had three minor children still living with her. There was a sum of £496 in the hands of the Orphan Chamber due to the major and minor children, but the money was not payable until the youngest child was twenty-five years of age. It was proposed to devote the said sum entirely to the education of the minor children, and an order of Court was sought, authorising the money to be paid out. The major heir consented to the application of the money for this purpose.

The Master's report was favourable.

Order granted in terms of the Master's report.

ALLIE BROS. V. PORTER AND BOUSDORF. 1903. Nov. 19th.

Pleading—Tender—Payment into Court.

P. having been sued by A. for a certain sum of money, tendered, a less sum "in full satisfaction" in his plea. This tender A. refused to accept, but asked for an order to have all mention of the tender struck out of the plea, as irrelevant matter; or in the alternative, an order to defendant to pay the amount tendered into Court.

Held, that as the granting of the first prayer would involve the trial of part of the principal case, on motion, and moreover as there was no rule to compel a defendant to pay the amount of his tender into Court, both the prayer and alternative prayer must be refused, and the plaintiff left to deal with the question of tender in his replication.

Semble: In certain special cases the Court might order the amount of a tender to be paid into Court.

This was a motion for an order against the respondents to compel them to pay to applicants or into Court the amount of a tender, £52 13s. 1d. which respondents offered in their plea, or, in the alternative, to have the said allegation expunged from the plea.

The affidavit of the applicants stated that they had commenced an action against the respondents for the balance of certain moneys promised to be lent to the applicants on a certain mortgage bond for £1,000. The respondents had lent a certain sum, closely approximating to £800, to the applicants. Respondents said in their plea that they had paid £800, less £52 13s. 1d., that they agreed to lend £800, and they had tendered £52 13s. 1d. Applicants stated that they had not received any such tender.

The affidavit of Mr. C. Brady, applicants' attorney, stated that on the 7th November he received from the respondents' attorney a cheque for £52 13s. 1d., in full settlement of the matter." He (Mr. Brady) had returned the cheque, and said that he refused to accept it unless it were tendered unconditionally.

The answering affidavit of Mr David Tennant, jun., stated that he made a tender to the plaintiff's attorney in the usual way adopted by attorneys of this Court in full and complete satisfaction of the respondents' liability. He prayed that the application be dismissed, with costs.

The replying affidavit of the plaintiff's attorney stated that the point was whether the respondents were justified in withholding an amount which was admitted to be due to the plaintiffs. He had acted, he maintained, in accordance with the recognised practice of Court.

Mr. Benjamin for applicants; Mr. Close for respondents.

Kotze, J. to Mr. Benjamin: Is not this rather a novel application?

Mr Benjamin: I don't know that there has been a similar application previously. Counsel went on to contend that the point was whether the defendants' attorney had or had not made a good tender. The tender pleaded here was, he submitted, no tender at all. The allegation could be struck out in accordance with the procedure as to irrelevant matter in the pleadings. The tender could not be good unless the defendant were ready to pay the money.

Without calling upon Mr. Close to address the Court,

Maasdorp, J.: In this matter it appears that the plaintiffs have sued the defendants for a certain sum of money, and the defendants pleaded that the sum claimed is not due, but admit that they are liable to pay the plaintiffs the sum of £52 13s. 1d., which amount they say they tendered to the plaintiffs before action, and they add that they are still ready and willing to pay the amount, and tender it again in their plea. Now, this motion is brought before the Court praying that the portion of the plea referring to the tender be expunged, or that the defendants be ordered to pay over the amount tendered to the plaintiff or to pay it into Court. It appears upon the affidavits that this tender is disputed in the affidavits made by the applicants. If the tender is disputed, then the ordinary way in which the issue is brought before the Court is to deny the fact that the tender has been made in the replication, and then the matter of tender, together with all the other issues between the parties, are raised at the trial, and there decided. There has been no precedent cited in which part of the action with reference to the facts bearing upon the question of tender has been tried upon motion before the action is heard. Upon that part of the application the plaintiffs pray that this portion of the plea should be expunged, and this for the reasons I have mentioned must be refused. Then there is a further and alternative prayer in the application that these moneys, which have been tendered, shall either now be paid over to the applicants, or be paid into the Court. There is no rule obliging a defendant who tenders a certain sum of money to pay the sum tendered into Court, and in the absence of such a rule, and in the absence of authority bearing upon this case, that also must be refused; and we certainly never have had a case in which the sufficiency of the tender having been denied by the applicants, the applicants have been entitled as a matter of course to come into Court to claim that the money should be paid over to them. There might be special circumstances where the Court would assist a plaintiff where it appears that certain moneys are due, and where it would be only just when the moneys tendered, and admitted to be due, should be secured. In such a case the Court might assist the plaintiff, but certainly no special ground has been shown in this case for the Court to grant the relief asked for by the applicants, by ordering that the money should be paid over to them or be paid into Court. The application will, therefore, be refused, with costs.

Kotzé, J., concurred.

[Applicants' Attorney: C. Brady; Respondent's Attorney: D. Tennant, jun.]

Ex parte SCHOEMAN.

Mr. C. W. de Villiers moved for an order authorising the Registrar of Deeds to pass transfer to the petitioner of certain property at Dordrecht, in the estate of the petitioner's father, of which he was executor testamentary. The property was sold by public auction for £195, which was in excess of the Divisional Council valuation.

Order granted as prayed.

Ex parte HURD.

Mr. Buchanan moved for an order authorising the amendment of certain deeds of transfer, an ante-nuptial contract, and a mortgage bond, by the substitution of the petitioner's correct name. Petitioner, who lived at Port Elizabeth, said that ever since childhood he had been called Sidney Hurd, and he found that his correct name was Herbert Hurd, and that he was christened Sidney Hurd The said documents were in the name of Sydney Hurd.

Mr. Justice Maasdorp: Why should he change his name now and raise this difficulty?

Mr. Buchanan said he supposed petitioner felt that his transactions were now fairly fixed, and that it would be best to have the change made now before a regular series of complications arose.

The matter was ordered to stand over, pending further information on certain points.

ROSS V. MOTAN.

Mr. Buchanan moved for an order for an attachment of certain property at Newlands belonging to the respondent, ad fundandam jurisdictionem, and for leave to the plaintiff to sue defendant by way of edictal citation, in an action for the purchase price of certain property at Kenilworth. Petitioner stated that he resided at Salt River, that the defendant had been in the Cape, but was supposed to have returned to Pretoria, and that petitioner had sold to him certain property at Kenilworth, the purchase price being £850. Respondent was to take transfer on or before the 1st September, but he had failed to do so. Defendant had drawn rents from the property. A summons had been issued against him in the Transvaal, but the Sheriff was unable to effect service upon the defendant.

Order granted for the attachment of the property at Newlands owned by the defendant, and leave granted to sue by edictal citation, personal service to be effected, rule to be returnable on the 12th December.

FARDINI V. FARDINI AND ANOTHER.

Mr. M. Bisset moved for a certain award of Mr. Advocate Close as arbitrator to be made order of Court and for costs of application. The dispute arose out of certain property, which was paid for jointly out of the money of the parties.

Order granted in terms of the first part of the prayer, but no order as to costs of application.

MULDER V. HEYNE AND OTHERS.

Mr. Searle, K.C., moved, on behalf of Hendrick Johannes Mulder, for an award of arbitrators in a certain water dispute in the division of Oudtshoorn to be made a rule of Court, and for costs of the arbitration and application, in terms of the award. One of the signatories to the deed, it appeared, had simply signed his own name, but he had filed an affidavit stating that he signed, not only individually, but as executor of a certain estate.

Order granted as prayed.

Ex parte SYPEO.

Mr. Buchanan moved for leave to pass a certain mortgage bond. Petitioner was executor testamentary in the estate of the late Sarah Annie Hall, who purchased certain property from one Annie Tebb, in Mill-street, Cape Town. The deceased was on the eve of passing a bond, but she died before it could be completed. The deceased paid £3.000 on the property, and it was arranged that the balance of £1,500 should be raised on first mortgage bond. In her will, Mrs. Hall made a proviso that the property was not to be realised until her youngest child attained the age of 21 years.

Order granted to raise £1,500 on mortgage, as prayed.

BOOSEY AND CO. v. SIMMONDS. { 1903. Nov. 19th.

Copyright Act 18 of 1895.

The English Act 5, 6 Vict. protects the holders of an English copyright throughout the entire British Dominions.

This was an application on behalf of Boosey and Co., music publishers, London, against James Simmonds, of 11, Hope-street, Cape Town, for an order (a) restraining the respondent from selling or dealing in certain musical productions, copyright of which was held by the applicants; and (b) directing the respondent forthwith to deliver to the applicants or the Supreme Court, or to destroy the aforesaid productions, or such other relief as the Court should think fit.

The affidavit of George R. Forrest, manager for C. M. Muller, the representatives of the applicants in Cape Town, stated that the defendant had exhibited for sale "The Better Land" and other songs, in which the applicants had copyright. Copies of the illegal prints and the copies issued by the applicants were laid before the Court.

Mr. Searle for applicants; Mr. Greer for respondents.

[Maasdorp, J.: Are they the same?]

[Kotzé, J.: We could not put them to a practical test very well.]

Mr. Searle: I am afraid I cannot do that. Counsel went on to contend that the applicants were entitled to an interdict under the Act 18 of 1895. The applicants' copyright was entered at the Stationers' Hall, London. The Act of 1895 covered sheets of music. The Act was passed after a deal of discussion, to prevent pirated reprints, mainly American reprints of British books. For instance, the books of Dickens and Thackray were brought in and Chambers' Encyclopœdia.

Kotzé, J.: I am afraid a good number of us are participes criminis.

Mr. Searle (for applicants): The last English Copyright Act was 5 and 6 Vict., C. 45. The last Colonial Act was 18 of 1895 (of which see Section 3). That Act repealed the Act of 1854, and introduced the provisions of the English Acts. The object of the Act of 1895 was to prevent the introduction of foreign reprints, which could be brought into the Colony before that Act was passed. Act 6, Vict. C. 45 is an Imperial Act applying to the entire British Dominions, unless it should be suspended in any portion thereof by an Order in Council. Stamped copies are evidence, and these put in are stamped. It may be necessary that we should bring an action, but at present we only ask for an interim interdict (see Section 4 of Act 18 of 1895 and also Sections 3 and 11 of the Act of 1873. It does not appear that Boosey and Co. are registered here, but that is not necessary, as our last Act brings in the protection afforded by the Imperial Act. Almost the only case similar to the present was Dickens v The Eastern Province Herald (4 Searle, 33). At that time foreign reprints were allowed. As we cannot now bring an action for three months, and may by that time suffer serious damage, we ask for an interim interdict. As to proof of publication, see Section 3 of the Act of 1873.

[Maasdorp, J.: Does not that refer exclusively to books?]

No, see Section 4 of the Act of 1895. Under that Boosey and Co. might register here, but I say that is not necessary.

[Maasdorp, J.: If registration is necessary here it must be necessary in all cases, or you cannot claim protection.]

I submit that in view of the Imperial Act registration is not necessary. In any case we are entitled to an interdict, as these publications are our property.

[Kotzé, J.: In Jefferys v. Boosey (4, H.L., 815) the House of Lords held that there was no copyright at English Common Law.]

I submit that we are not bound by decisions of the House of Lords but only by those of the Privy Council. We do not now press to have the pirated copies delivered up to us, but only for an interdict.

Mr. Greer (for respondent): Counsel for applicant relies on the Acts 5 and 6 Vict., C. 45; but if he depends on that Act he must take the remedy provided by that Act, and that remedy is by action. He has not produced the proof required by Section 3 of Act 2 of 1873. I submit the Court will not grant an interdict until the rights of the parties have been determined by action. To do so would be an irreparable injury to the respondent. I would suggest that the respondent should be ordered to keep an account, as was done in the case of Musical Copyright Company v. Simmonds (13 C.T.R., November 6th).

[Maasdorp, J.: That might be done, but what is your defence?]

We rely on Section 3 of Act 2 of 1873, and I would suggest the keeping of an account as the most convenient course.

Mr. Searle (in reply): I must press for an interim interdict and for damages. I would also ask that the pirated copies should be delivered to the Registrar. Of course they can at any time bring their action for damages if so advised.

Maasdorp, J.: In this case the applicants apply for an interdict restraining the respondent from selling or dealing in copies of musical productions, the copyright of which is owned by the above-named applicants, and a list is given of the names of the pieces of music referred to, and the applicants further pray for an order compelling respondent forthwith to deliver them up to the applicants or their agent in Cape Town, or to this honourable Court, or to destroy all productions in their possession or control. It appears that the applicants are the proprietors of the copyrighted pieces of music mentioned in their affidavit. A certificate has been put in as proof that the applicants are such proprietors. They allege that pirated editions of these pieces of music have found their way into the hands of the respondent, and that the respondent is now engaged in selling the music to the loss and damage of the applicants. The respondent has put in no affidavit in this case, and there seems to be no denial of the main facts on which the application is based. Upon reference to the affidavit, and upon the pieces of music which have been put in it seems on the face of these pieces that the alleged pirated copies are identical with those to which the applicants claim the copyright. Counsel for the respondent contends that as these copyrights have not been registered in the Colony under our Act of 1873, that the applicants are not now entitled to take proceedings, not being as he contends the holders of registered copyright in this colony. Now, it seems to me upon reference to the Act of 1873 that the registration therein required is of books which are published and brought out in this colony, and without any reference to publications in England, but it is not necessary now to decide that point. It may be raised hereafter, when other questions are raised between the parties. It seems, however, that the English Act protects the holders of such copyright through the British Dominions, and under the 15th section of that Act, where there is an infringement by anyone of such copyright, an action on the case can be brought by the holder of the copyright for any injury he may suffer in consequence. Upon the facts placed before the Court, I think the applicants have made out a prima facie case that they are being injured by the production of pirated identical copies of this music, and that they would be entitled to an action under the English law of copyright. The application here made for an interdict might seem upon the face of it to be for a perpetual interdict, but, however that may be, the Court will, upon the facts now before it, grant an interdict restraining the respondent from selling the pieces of music mentioned in the affidavit, and refuse the further prayer contained in the notice of application. The Court will grant an interdict restraining the selling of the music pending an action to be brought forthwith by the applicants to decide the question in dispute between the parties, costs to be costs in the cause.

Kotzé, J., concurred.

[Applicants' Attorneys: Silberbauer, Wahl and Fuller; Respondent's Attorney: F. B. Andrews.]

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C. K.C.M.G., LL.D.) and the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

REVIEW.

REX V. ABRAHAMSON. { 1903. Nov. 20th.

Previous conviction—Aggravation of sentence.

Where a person is charged with a criminal offence committed before the date of his conviction of a similar offence, such latter conviction cannot be used as evidence for the purpose of aggravating his sentence.

De Villiers, C.J.: The case came before me as judge of the week of The King v. Adolph Abrahamson, in which the prisoner was charged in the Court of the Resident Magistrate of Malmesbury, at Darling, with contravening the conditions imposed by his licence, under and by virtue of sections 1 and 2 of Act 28 of 1898, by wrongfully and unlawfully selling liquor to a native. He was sentenced to a fine of £50, or three months' imprisonment, with hard labour. There is no question in the case as to the prisoner's guilt, but the Magistrate took into consideration an alleged previous conviction. It is clear that such seems to have taken place on the same date on which the prisoner was charged, and the Magistrate discovered, after giving the verdict, that this offence for which the prisoner is now charged really took place before the previous conviction. It is clear, however, that such previous conviction could not be produced in aggravation of punishment, seeing that the offence had really been committed before the previous conviction took place. The Magistrate says: "After finding the accused guilty, I allowed the previous conviction to be recorded, losing sight of the fact that the dates of previous conviction and of committal of the offence of which the prisoner had just been convicted were identical, and that the sale on the 6th October very probably took place prior to Abrahamson's conviction on that date. Had I not overlooked the point referred to, I would have refused to record the first conviction, and would have inflicted a fine of £25, or three months' hard labour." The sentence will, therefore, be altered into one of £25, or in default, imprisonment for three months.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

LEFEVRE V. BOADIGONI.

This was a motion to have a rule nisi made absolute, calling on the respondent, Victor Boadigoni, to show cause why he should not be interdicted from dealing with or disposing of the rights in a certain system of removal and disposal of night-soil known as the Omega sanitary system.

Applicant's affidavit stated that the respondent was inventor of the system, for which certain patent rights had been taken out. For the effective exploitation of the system in South Africa, a partnership was entered into between the petitioners and the respondent, and under the deed of partnership, the latter was bound to use all his efforts on behalf of the said partnership, and work in the interests thereof, and under clause 5 of the said deed, neither of the said partners was entitled to dispose of his share in the said partnership to any other person without the consent of the said partnership. The respondent subsequently gave notice to withdraw, but applicants refused their consent, and wrote to him accordingly. It had since come to the knowledge of the applicants that the respondent had commenced installations of the system at Port Elizabeth and other places, under the style of the Colonial Automatic Pit Co.

The affidavit of the respondent stated that he had not infringed the patent of the Omega sanitary system, and that the automatic pit system was quite different. He described the difference of principle between the two systems. He was taking steps to protect the automatic pit system. One great objection to the Omega system, so far as South Africa was concerned, was that it required a large supply of water. The necessity for this was dispensed with under the automatic. Plans and specifications were attached to the affidavit.

Mr. Searle, K.C. (for the respondent) said that he was instructed that the papers had been lodged, and that the applicants were going to oppose the respondents' application before the Attorney-General for letters patent in the automatic pit system. He did not see how the Court could decide the differences between one system and the other, and under the circumstances, he thought the whole matter should stand over, the rule in the meantime to be made absolute.

Mr. Benjamin (for the applicants) agreed that this would be the best course.

De Villiers, C.J., said that the only course for the present would be to continue the operation of the interdict until a further order of Court, the question of costs to stand over, leave being given to either party to move the Court again.

JACOBS V. JACOBS.

Mr. Alexander moved on behalf of the petitioner (the wife) for leave to sue her husband by edictal citation for restitution of conjugal rights, or, failing that, divorce, on the ground of the defendant's malicious desertion. The parties were married in community in Cape Town in 1897, and subsequently resided, after leaving Cape Town, in Johannesburg, Durban, and England. The defendant maliciously deserted the plaintiff in 1902, and his present address was unknown.

Leave to sue granted, the citation to be returnable on the 1st February, and personal service to be effected.

Mr. Alexander: We don't know the defendant's whereabouts.

De Villiers, C.J.: Well, but you must try to find him. If you don't succeed, then you may apply to the Court again.

FRAUM V. GERHARD AND HEY, LTD.

Mr. Gardiner moved for a rule nisi to be made absolute calling upon the Bank of Africa, Ltd., to show cause why they should not be restrained from parting with the proceeds of a sale of certain timber, the property of the defendants, so as to found jurisdiction for an action to be brought against them.

Rule made absolute, with leave to sue by edictal citation, return day fixed for February 9.

BEYER V. WORSLEY.

Mr. Buchanan, for the applicant, moved for the removal of the trial in the above case to the Circuit Court at Willowmore or Uniondale. Consent papers to the removal were put in from both attorneys.

Order granted as prayed.

CONTAT V. CONTAT'S COLLIERIES.

Mr. Upington, for the applicant, moved for an order calling upon the respondent to show cause why a certain judgment granted against the applicant in July, 1903, should not be satisfied by the payment of the sum of £1,000 in cash in about three months' time, and the balance in not less than instalments of £750 yearly. Counsel put in certain affidavits, which set out that there were good grounds for supposing that a contract for coal would be accepted by the Cape Government Railways from one Robert Blunt, to whom the mining rights had been leased, and then it was anticipated the liquidation would be settled in a comparatively short time.

Mr. Benjamin read the affidavit of the liquidator, who gave as his reason for declining the proposal the fact that the creditors were making constant applications for their money, and that the ultimate liquidation would be postponed for an indefinite period.

The matter was ordered to stand over to Monday, in order that the parties might be communicated with, and security arranged on behalf of the applicant.

Postea (November 23):

Counsel put in the affidavit of applicant's attorney, Mr. Jacobsohn, which set out that from information received from the applicant's attorney at Molteno, the coal would be tested by the Government next Tuesday, and if the contract were accepted, after the payment of £1,000, security would be given for the payment of future instalments. The delay of three weeks would be unavoidable,

Mr. Benjamin read a telegram from the local attorney of the defendant at Kimberley, from which it appeared that the liquidator, Mr. Pooley, left the matter of the suspension in the hands of the Court.

Application for a stay of execution granted, on condition that within four weeks from that day the applicant pay to the respondents the costs of the application, and give satisfactory security to the Registrar for the payment of one-half of the judgment within twelve months of that date, and the remaining half within two years. If all the costs were not paid and security given within four weeks from date, execution to be issued.

MCKAY V. HUTCHISON.

Mr. Gardiner moved for an order compelling the respondent to deliver up possession of a bakery business on the Main-road, Three Anchor Bay. Counsel read the affidavit of the applicant, which set out that the respondent had failed to keep two agreements entered into with the applicant, and as a consequence the latter had lost his lease through the non-payment of rent.

Order granted as prayed.

Ex parte VAN DER WESTHUYZEN.

Mr. Van Zyl moved on behalf of the petitioner for leave to raise money in the interests of a minor daughter on certain property situated in the division of George.

The Master's report was favourable.

Order granted in terms of the Master's report.

Ex parte SICHEL AND OTHERS.

Mr. Searle, K.C., moved for the cancellation of certain sales of land, situated at Elsie's River Halt, the property of the South African Natural Mineral Water Co., which the petitioners as liquidators represented. With the exception of two purchasers, no instalments had been paid by several others, who bought under conditions, which stipulated that if the instalments were not paid the sales were cancelled. In one particular case, that of Chetty, the stipulation was that the property could again be auctioned, and the purchaser be held liable for any deficiency. Every effort had been made to find the respondents, but without success.

A rule was granted calling on all the respondents, excepting Chetty, Cohen, and Vincent, to show cause by 12th December why the sales should not be cancelled, the rule to be published once in each of the Cape Town daily newspapers, with leave to sue the three persons stated by edictal citation returnable January 12, with similar publications in addition to publication in the "Gazette."

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.) and the Hon. Mr. Justice KOTZE.

Ex parte BOTHA. { 1903. Nov. 23rd.

Transfer duty Purchase on behalf of a Company.

It having been clearly proved that the purchase of a farm had been made by the applicant on behalf of a Company which had been formed but not registered at the time of the purchase. The Court authorized the Registrar of Deeds to allow transfer to be passed, after registration of the Company, by the seller directly to the Company.

Mr. Buchanan moved for a rule nisi to be made absolute, calling upon the Treasurer-General to show cause why an order should not be granted directing the Registrar of Deeds to pass transfer of the farm Macasserfontein, in the district of Colesberg, as prayed by the petitioner.

Mr. Howel Jones (for the Government) read a report from the Registrar of Deeds setting forth the reasons why he declined to pass transfer without an order of Court. The Registrar said that the farm was sold on the 14th of February to the original purchasers, and it was not until the 23rd June that the articles of association were signed for the R.B. and B. Syndicate, for which transfer was now asked. There was no documentary evidence produced by the applicants to show that the original purchase was made on behalf of the syndicate which was subsequently formed. It appeared that the company was formed by the executors of the late C. J. Rhodes, H. Eckstein and Company, and Mr. Abe Bailey, for the purpose of encouraging the cultivation and settlement of lands in South Africa.

Mr. Jones said that the position taken up by the Registrar was that he would not allow property bought by private individuals before a company was formed to be registerd in the name of the company that was subsequently formed, unless there was documentary evidence that at the time of purchase the persons who purchased actually purchased on behalf of the company. In this case there was nothing to show that the founders were buying on behalf of the company. There was no document put in to show that the land was purchased in the name of and on behalf of the company. Something should be put before the Registrar to show that sale was made to the company. He said that in the absence of such evidence, he must leave the matter in the hands of the company, as to whether the sale did take place to the company or it was a sale to Mr. Rhodes's executors, Mr. Beit, and Mr. Bailey, the parties having the intention of forming a company, no doubt, but really the sale being to them individually. The purchase took place in February last, and the articles of association were not signed until June, the explanation given being that there was great delay owing to the signatures of the company being required, and some of the members being in England at the time.

Mr. Buchanan read the affidavits of Mr. Abe Bailey, Sir Lewis Michell, Mr. E. R. Syfret, and others, from which it appeared that there had been a certain delay in the completion of the articles on account of the deed having to be referred to subscribers in Johannesburg, and some of the executors in the estate of the late C. J. Rhodes, residing in England. It was stated, however, that the original purchasers of the farm and the syndicate were in effect the same.

De Villiers, C.J.: The Registrar of Deeds was quite justified in the first instance in refusing this registration without an order of Court. The parties might easily at the time when the original purchase was effected have executed a document making it perfectly clear that the parties were purchasing, not on their own behalf, but as trustees or agents for the syndicate which was about to be formed. But they neglected to do so, and the Registrar of Deeds was quite justified therefore in throwing upon them the onus of clearly satisfying this Court that the original purchase was intended to be a purchase on behalf of the syndicate about to be formed. In point of fact, the syndicate was being formed at that time, but it was not registered as a limited liability company until some months after the purchase. The question before the Court now is whether the Court is satisfied that the purchase was on behalf of the syndicate, and, in my opinion, the affidavits made by Sir Lewis Michell and the others are quite sufficient to prove that the purchase was on behalf, not of the original purchasers, but of the syndicate, and if there were any doubt upon the point, that doubt is removed by the form of the receipt for transfer duty, which, however, did not appear to have been submitted to the Registrar of Deeds. That receipt was given on the 1st of April, that is, some months before the company was actually registered, but in that receipt the company is recognised as the purchaser. The property is alleged there to have been sold privately to the R., B. and B. Syndicate (Limited) by the present applicant, and the power of attorney, which was executed as far back as March by the present applicant, authorised the transfer, not to the original purchasers, but to the R. B. and B. Syndicate. It is clear, therefore, that this is not a case in which the Court should insist upon double transfer duty being paid. Even if there had been transfer to the original purchasers, and subsequent transfer by them to the syndicate, it might have been fairly contended that double transfer duty would not be payable. Amongst the exemptions provided for by the 19th section of the Act 5 of 1884 is the following: "In every case (says section 19, sub-section 9) in which any one person shall, by the records in the Deeds Registry Office, appear to be merely a trustee for any other person, whether the latter shall be a minor or a major, or under coverture or not, the property so held in trust may be removed from the name of the trustee to that of such other person being entitled to have it so removed, without payment of transfer duty. The only question remaining in the case is the question of costs. Well, it appears to me that the syndicate, the trustees, have themselves to blame for any difficulty which has arisen. If they had taken care that the deed of sale was executed to clearly show for whom this purchase was made, this question would never have arisen, and therefore I think that, while making the rule absolute, the Court will order that the applicant must pay the cost of the application.

Kotzé, J.: I am of the same opinion. I am satisfied upon the affidavits that this property was bought for and on behalf of the syndicate, which was subsequently registered as a limited liability company under the Act.

Ex parte WAHL AND ANOTHER.

Mr. Buchanan moved, on behalf of Silberbauer, Wahl and Fuller, as executors in the estate of the late James Brista, for an order authorising the Registrar of Deeds to issue a certified copy of a certain mortgage bond, and for costs to be paid out of the estate. The petitioners stated that a mortgage bond had been passed in favour of the said estate by Isabel Sophia Jackson, married out of community, for £1,800, now reduced to £1,600, under which bond certain property was specially hypothecated. The bond was sent by registered letter to Mr. Thomas Stephenson, of Port Elizabeth, the mortgagee's agent, for the purpose of having certain portions of the land released, and having £200 written off the capital thereof. The bond had not been delivered, and although inquiries had been made at the Post-office, no trace had been obtained of the missing document. An official of the Post-office deposed that a search had been made of the registered letter books, but they had failed to discover any entry of the letter alleged to have been forwarded about the date in question by the petitioners. A junior clerk in the employ of the petitioners deposed that he kept a book of postages, and that the letter was entered in the book, and the postage was shown to have been 9d., which would be sufficient to include registration fee. He could not swear, however, that the letter was posted, or that it was registered.

Kotzé, J.: I must say that it is very doubtful whether the letter was ever posted.

Mr. Buchanan: That would practically be a charge of theft against this boy.

De Villiers, C.J.: Not necessarily.

Kotze, J.: Oh, no; young people are forgetful, and he may have lost this letter.

A rule was granted calling upon all concerned, on the 12th December, to show cause why an order should not be made as prayed, rule to be published once in a Cape Town newspaper, and once in a Port Elizabeth newspaper, costs to be paid by the petitioners.

Ex parte THOMAS AND OTHERS.

Mr. Gardiner moved for an order authorising the Registrar of Deeds to register certain lots of land at Kalk Bay, in the name of the petitioners. The petitioners stated that their father, the late Jonas Thomas, purchased from one Johannes Marthinus Muller, whose estate was unrepresented, certain two lots of land at Kalk Bay, in 1861. Although the aforesaid lots were duly deducted from and marked on the original diagram, and were about to be transferred to Jonas Thomas (who died in 1871), transfer was never effected, and the land still stood in the name of the said Muller.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Why was this application not made under the Act of 1881, the Derelict Lands Act?]

I don't know, unless they thought it was a matter in which the Court would desire to hear counsel in argument.

De Villiers, C.J.: Application should be made to a judge in Chambers under the Derelict Lands Act, and it will be necessary to place much more information before the Court in regard to the matter before a rule can be granted.

Ex parte WASSERMAN AND OTHERS.

Mr. Buchanan moved for an award of arbitrators to be made a rule of Court. The arbitration was between the petitioners, who were joint proprietors in undefined shares of certain property in the division of Uniondale. In 1896 the proprietors appointed one Mr. Mulder to make a division, and an award was made, but was never carried out, and in the present year the owners had an amended award prepared by Mulder.. All the present proprietors consented to the application.

Order granted as prayed.

COCHRANE AND FITT V. FUCHS.

This was an application upon notice of motion calling upon the respondent to show cause why an order should not be granted requiring him to reinstate the applicants in possession of the premises erected by them at the Ndabeni Location, Maitland.

The affidavit of John E. Fitt, a member of the applicant firm, said that they were builders and contractors, and that the respondent, Henry Fuchs, was a general dealer, at the Native Location, Maitland. They entered into a contract whereby applicants were to erect a wood and iron building for £490, £100 to be paid on completion of the building and the balance in monthly instalments of not less than £20. It was also stipulated that the building should remain the property of the contractors until the £490 was paid, the building to be completed within six months of the signing of the contract. Immediately on completion of the contract the applicants began preparations for the work. About four days after the signing of the agreement the respondent requested them to suspend operations until he had arranged a dissolution of partnership with his partner. Deponent agreed to do this. About the 24th October his firm received a notice from the respondent's attorneys, requesting them to resume work at once. Immediately after deponents' firm went to resume work, but on November 11 they found that the respondent had secretly and stealthily taken possession of the foundations, and that he and his men were engaged in carrying on the work. Respondent refused to allow applicants to have access to the said building. In addition to the foundations of the building which applicants had constructed, there was a quantity of building materials which was suffering loss and damage. His firm were willing to carry out the terms of the contract entered into with the said Fuchs, but the latter was having the building completed as soon as possible.

The answering affidavit of Henry Fuchs, the respondent, said that at the time he entered into the agreement, on the 14th September, he purposely had a clause inserted fixing a date when the building should be completed, as he was anxious to take possession. He denied that he directed the applicants to suspend operations. He continually pressed the applicants to complete the work in terms of the contract, but he was put off with various excuses until he was at last compelled to instruct his solicitors to write to the applicants. It was not until the 12th November that a start was made. In the meantime he had entered into a fresh agreement, and the work was now being proceeded with. He said that by reason of the default of the applicants he entered into a new contract, and treated the contract of the applicants as cancelled. He denied that there was any building material there which was the property of the applicants. He was prepared to meet the applicants in an action at law.

The replying affidavit of J. E. Fitt denied that he ever put off the respondent with excuses, but said that the respondent asked him to suspend operations until the dissolution of partnership had been arranged. Deponent further declared that his firm had deposited materials near this property.

Mr. Gardiner for applicant; Mr. Benjamin for respondent.

Mr. Gardiner (for the applicant): One term of the contract entered into between these parties is that the building is to remain in the possession of the contractor till the sum of £491 shall have been paid. We fully admit that there has been some delay, but the question is: to whom was that delay attributable? I do not contend that the building is ours, but I do say that we have a lien on it.

[De Villiers, C.J.: You had only put in the foundations?]

Yes, but we have a lien on them, and the foundations are often the most important part of the work. We expended money also in preliminary work.

[De Villiers, C.J.: A workman has a lien for work done, but has a contractor a similar lien?]

He has; see Brown's Assignees v. Pote (4 E.D.C., 50). This was a case of a corrugated iron building, and therefore the cost of foundations would be proportionately heavier than in the case of a brick or stone building. We have certain rights under our agreement, and I submit that the Court will preserve to us that right.

Mr. Benjamin (for respondent, on the question of costs): I am instructed to press for costs incurred. The work should have been completed within six weeks. The applicant asks for a postponement on the ground of mutual consent; but their proper remedy was by way of action. As to the foundations, there is no evidence as to their value. They have not shown any special urgency to justify them in proceeding by motion, and they should have brought their action.

De Villiers, C.J.: A great deal must depend in the present case upon the question as to whether the applicants or the respondent were responsible for the building not being proceeded with. The applicants say that they are quite prepared to go on with the building for which they were responsible. The respondent, on the other hand, alleges that he did not delay the work in any way, and the delay was owing to the applicants' fault. That question it would be impossible to decide upon the statements of the parties, which are directly in conflict. It lies upon the applicants to make out a clear case for an interdict, and such a clear case has not been made out. The respondent does not object to the applicants removing any of the materials. There will be no order, therefore, excepting that the applicants be allowed to remove any materials, and as to the question of costs, that must stand over.

DUMINY V. DAY.

Mr. Upington, for the plaintiff, moved for leave to take the evidence of certain witnesses in the Transvaal upon commission. The application was supported by the affidavit of plaintiff's attorney, Mr. Jacobson, which set out that the evidence of a witness in Johannesburg and one in Pretoria was most material to the plaintiff's case.

Leave granted, with Mr. Saul Solomon appointed as commissioner, costs to be costs in the cause.

BETHE AND VON EHREN V. BURMAN.

Mr. Buchanan, for the respondent, said that this matter was ordered to stand over until the 23rd November, upon an application for an interdict granted upon the petition of Charles Friedlander, attorney, from which it appeared that the plaintiffs were a firm carrying on business in Hamburg, and were the owners of certain property in Hanover-street. In October an agreement was entered into with the original respondents, Dreyer and Sussman, who agreed to buy the stock in the said premises for £240, payable by £50 in cash, £60 in three months, £70 in six months, and £60 in nine months. None of the instalments had been paid, and counsel appeared for a man named Lewis Burman, to whom the stock had been sold, and who was restrained from parting with any of the goods pending the decision of an action against Dreyer and Sussman. The notice was, in the first instance, granted against a man named Lewis who turned out to be Lewis Burman, of 1, William-street, Cape Town. The affidavit of Burman set out that he first made the acquaintance of the first-named respondent in October, 1903, when he purchased 5 dozen of aprons, and obtained a receipt from Joseph Dreyer, who informed him that he intended selling all his stock and taking other premises. On October 28, £142 3s. was paid for the remainder of the said stock, and Joseph Dreyer receipted the transaction.

De Villiers, C.J., said there was no proof of a fraudulent sale to Burman, and that the rule must be discharged, with costs.

Ex parte HUGO.

Mr. Benjamin moved for the appointment of a curator bonis to look after the farm at the Paarl of petitioner's husband, Francis Jacobus Hugo, who was blind, and had become mentally deranged.

An order was granted calling upon the respondent to show cause by the 30th November why he shall not be declared incapable of taking care of his affairs, and why a curator should not be appointed. The Resident Magistrate of the Paarl was appointed as curator ad litem, service of the summons to be served on the curator, and the respondents.

APPEALS.

COLYN V. SMITH.

This was an appeal from a decision by the Acting R.M. of Elliot, in which the Magistrate upheld an exception taken on behalf of the defendant to the summons on the ground that the original copy was not produced to the defendant. There was a note by the Magistrate that from time to time he had warned the messenger to be more careful in his duty, and in allowing the exception the messenger would be liable for the costs. Counsel submitted that there was no evidence to show that the messenger had not fulfilled his duty, and that it was not necessary that the original copy should be exhibited.

De Villiers, C.J.: The messenger's return of summons is as follows: I served a copy of this summons upon the person named, and gave it to him personally, at the same time explaining the nature and exigency thereof. There is nothing to show that the messenger may not have had the original with him, and ready to show it to the defendant. The Magistrate, however, seems to have taken it for granted that he had not the original with him. There is no evidence to support that, and I think, therefore, upon the messenger's return the Magistrate ought to have taken it that there was a good service upon the defendant. It may be a question as to whether it would have been a good service if it had been proved that the messenger had not the original with him, but that point does not arise, and had it arisen the further question would have had to be decided. I am not sure that the messenger is bound to show the original, and it is not suggested in the present case that the copy differs from the original. The appeal will, therefore, be allowed, with costs. The Magistrate will hear the case on its merits, and decide the question of costs in the cause in the Court below.

DU PLESSIS V. DALL. { 1903. Nov. 23rd.

Principal and agent—Authority—Liability.

The defendant, purporting to act as the agent of M., bought certain goods from the plaintiff who debited M. with the price and afterwards claimed the amount from him. M., however, had in the meantime paid the price to the defendant and repudiated his liability. The plaintiff thereupon sued the defendant, who refused to pay, on the ground that he had not purchased the goods on his own behalf, but he failed to prove that he had been authorized by M. to pledge his credit.

Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to recover the amount from the defendant.

Wright v. Williams (8 Juta, 166, followed).

This was an appeal from a decision of the R.M. of Richmond, in which judgment was given for the plaintiff in an action brought to recover the sum of £3 0s. 3d. for goods sold and delivered.

The case came before the Resident Magistrate of Richmond in August last, in which the respondent was the plaintiff and the appellant defendant. The plaintiff claimed £3 0s. 3d. for goods sold and delivered to the defendant for one Van der Merwe. The defendant took exception to the summons as being vague, and that no date was given of the alleged sale, but an amendment was allowed, and judgment was given for the plaintiff for the amount claimed with costs. The defendant pleaded a settlement of account between the parties in November, 1902, and, secondly, general issue. The Magistrate in his reasons for judgment said that the defence set up was that the defendant purchased the articles as the agent of Van der Merwe, and that, therefore, he was not liable for the debt. The defendant had not denied that he received payment for the items, and that he failed to satisfy the plaintiff's claim. He did not think there was any express mandate from Van der Merwe to defendant to purchase in his name, though no doubt he would have been quite prepared to pay plaintiff's claim had he not been aware that it had already been paid to the defendant. Defendant implicitly admitted that he received the money from Van der Merwe, but he did not remember paying the plaintiff. As the party who ordered the materials, for which he received payment from the deceased's estate, he was of opinion that the defendant was liable to the plaintiff for the amount claimed.

Mr. Upington (for appellant) contended that the judgment of the Magistrate was wrong, because it was perfectly clear that the material was ordered by Van der Merwe, to whose debit the amount stood in the plaintiff's books. The Magistrate was driven in his reasons to the conclusion that if Van der Merwe had not paid the defendant, he would have paid the plaintiff when the demand was made. The principal alone could be held liable, with certain exceptions, which he held did not apply in this case. The principal who was dealt with was Van der Merwe. The plaintiff admitted that Van der Merwe was not his agent. It was not alleged anywhere that Du Plessis was the principal. There was no contract between the parties to found an action against Du Plessis. He submitted that the plaintiff's remedy was against Van der Merwe, and then Van der Merwe had his remedy against his own agent.

Mr. Buchanan (for respondent) said it was perfectly clear that Du Plessis had got the money from the estate of Van der Merwe. Du Plessis did not plead at the hearing that he was not liable, and that Van der Merwe must be sued, but he pleaded that he had settled the account. In his own evidence, Du Plessis said that he had paid, and that he could not be sued again.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Yes, but that seems to be the line of defence—that he was the agent of Van der Merwe.]

Yes; after the plaintiff's evidence had been given. He allows the plaintiff's case to be closed, and then he takes exception on the ground that we should have sued Van der Merwe. Counsel went on to contend that Du Plessis must show that he had the authority of Van der Merwe to pledge his credit. Defendant's attitude throughout the hearing seemed to have been, "Oh, I have paid the amount." There was no express mandate on the part of Van der Merwe to Du Plessis to go and get the goods and pledge Van der Merwe's credit. If that had been so, Van der Merwe would never have paid the money to Du Plessis.

Mr. Upington, in reply, said that the plaintiff's own bookkeeper admitted that the account was sent out twice to Van der Merwe. The goods were debited to Van der Merwe. It was only after the account had been sent out twice that this item of £3 0s. 3d. was objected to, and then it was said that the money had already been paid to Du Plessis. The fact that Van der Merwe was debited in the books was an admission that Van der Merwe was treated as principal

De Villiers, C.J.: The plaintiff sued the defendant in the Court below for the purchase price of certain materials, and the evidence shows that the defendant did, in fact, purchase these materials from the plaintiff. But it also appears that the plaintiff gave credit, not to the defendant (the purchaser), but to Van der Merwe (the principal of the purchaser), and he debited Van der Merwe with the price because the defendant told him to do so. Then, when the amount fell due, Van der Merwe paid Du Plessis (the defendant). The plaintiff demanded the amount from Van der Merwe, but Van der Merwe said, "I have already paid Du Plessis," whereupon the plaintiff sued Du Plessis (defendant in the suit). If in the present case it had been clearly proved that Du Plessis had been authorised by Van der Merwe to pledge his credit, I confess upon the summons as it stands I should have felt great difficulty in affirming the judgment of the Court below. In such a case the defendant's liability would have arisen, if any liability existed at all, by reason of his having received the money on behalf of the plaintiff. But the action is for the price of certain goods, and there is no evidence to show that the defendant had been authorised by Van der Merwe to purchase the goods on his behalf. In the absence of such proof, the Court below properly held that the defendant was liable, and the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Kotzé, J., concurred.

[Appellant's Attorneys: Fairbridge, Arderne and Lawton; Respondent's Attorneys: P. de Villiers.]

KILGOUR v. CAPE TOWN TRAMWAY CO. { 1903. Nov. 23rd.

Damages—Negligence.

The plaintiff, being a passenger in a tram-car, signalled to the driver to stop, and as the car was just going round a curve, the driver slackened speed, with the view of stopping at the further end of the curve. The plaintiff went to the platform of the car and, while standing there, fell, owing, as he said, to a jerk of the car, but he was unable to say whether or not he was holding on to the rail at the time.

Held, that the mere fact that there was a jerk as the car rounded the curve was not sufficient proof of negligence on the part of the Tramway Company's servants, so as to render the Company liable for damages for injuries sustained by the plaintiff.

This was an appeal brought by plaintiff in the action, who resides in Cape Town, from a judgment by the Acting Resident Magistrate of the Cape, to recover £20 damages from the respondent company for personal injuries alleged to have been sustained in a Plein-street tramway car. The Magistrate gave absolution from the instance with costs.

The Magistrate, in his reasons for judgment, said that the plaintiff sued the defendants for £20 damages in consequence of the negligent driving of the defendants' servants, and their failure to stop as required, whereby plaintiff was thrown to the ground, causing him severe injuries. Plaintiff, in his opinion, failed to prove that it was in consequence of the negligent driving of the defendants' servants that he was thrown to the ground and sustained injuries. It was not clear whether the plaintiff gave the signal to stop, whether through the guard or by the bell, and he stated that the car stopped as a rule at either one end or the other of the corner of Buitenkant-street and Roeland-street, that he got out of the car on to the platform so as not to delay the car, that it stopped, and there was a jerk, and he caught at the support, but missed it, and fell off. He did not know what caused the jerk. It was impossible to say what caused the jerk. The plaintiff was an aged man, and he should not have gone on to the platform when turning a curve until the car had stopped, as it was his (the Magistrate's) experience that whenever a car went round a curve there was a jerk. Plaintiff failed to prove that it was owing to the defendants' negligence in driving the car that he was injured, and absolution from the instance was given with costs.

Mr. Benjamin (for the appellant): The Magistrate has evidently imported some of his own personal knowledge into the case. He says that he knows that when a tram goes round a curve it invariably jolts.

[Kotzé, J.: It seems to me that the motorman gave a signal to move on.]

I would submit that there was no contributory negligence in this case. The jerk must have been very violent. Any ordinary jerk, such as is usually experienced when going round a curve would not have been sufficient to throw the appellant off the car. The onus is on the respondents to show that the jerk was not abnormal.

[De Villiers, C.J.: No; the onus would seem to be on the appellant to show negligence on the part of the Tramway Company.]

The appellant was an elderly man, and was holding on to the rail when he was thrown off. The Magistrate's reasons do not clearly show whether he held that the negligence was on the part of the appellant or on that of respondents.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Where is there any proof of negligent driving?]

Mr. Close (for the respondents): In this case the onus is on the appellant to show negligence. There is no prima facie proof of negligence; certainly the jolt of the tram does not prove it. The plaintiff is an aged gentleman, and a slight jolt may have been sufficient to throw him off the car. Such a jolt may arise from many unavoidable causes.

[Kotzé, J.: If he had stood on the foot board I could have understood that there might have been contributory negligence; but he was standing on the platform. Suppose that a passenger gives the signal and the car slows down, has he not a right to presume that it will stop?]

Yes; but here the appellant's case is that a spurt was put on, and that then he did not remember what happened. His letter of May 14 is not in accordance with his evidence in the Court below. I submit that the Magistrate was fully justified in granting absolution from the instance.

Mr. Benjamin in reply.

De Villiers, C.J.: In order to succeed in this action, the plaintiff was bound to satisfy the Magistrate that the accident occurred through the negligence of the defendants' servants. Now, what is his evidence as to negligence? He gave the signal to stop, but he admits that the car sometimes stopped at one end of the curve and sometimes at the other end. The car slackened speed in going round the curve, but it does not appear whether the car slackened in consequence of his signal or not, but in any case it slackened speed in going round the curve. The plaintiff then went on to the platform. He is not quite clear how the accident happened, whether he was holding the rail at the time or not, but he says there was a jerk in the car, and he fell. He does not say that the jerk was an unusual one, that it was a severe one, that it was such a jerk as he could not have expected to take place. If he had said that, then there might have been some proof of negligence, but all he says is that there was a jerk. Surely the Court cannot hold that, because there was a jerk, however small, however slight, the defendant company is liable, because an elderly gentleman fell from a car. There must be some proof of negligence. The mere fact that he fell is not sufficient proof of negligence on the part of the defendants' servants to justify the Magistrate in calling upon the defendants to give evidence. He granted absolution from the instance, and, in my opinion, the appeal should be dismissed, with costs.

Kotzé, J., concurred.

[Appellant's Attorneys: Fairbridge, Arderne and Lawton; Respondents' Attorneys: Syfret, Godlonton and Low.]

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.), the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP and the Hon. Mr. Justice KOTZE.]

GENERAL MOTIONS.

Ex parte NTULIKAZI. { 1903. Nov. 24th.

Mr. Benjamin moved, as a matter of urgency, for a peremptory order requiring the respondents, Sifili, Ndingazo, and Mfundisi, to restore to petitioner certain stock alleged to have been seized by spoliation. The applicant, in her petition, said she was a native widow, married to her late husband according to native custom. Her husband at his death left five cattle and 246 sheep, which his eldest surviving brother, Majoro (who was the only one who, according to native custom, had any authority to interfere in the administration of the estate), directed should remain in petitioner's possession. From time to time petitioner had had bona fide and undisputed lawful possession of the said stock until, on the 26th day of September, but on the 4th October, the respondents (who were younger brothers of her late husband), forcibly dispossessed her of the said stock, which, owing to the severity of the drought in Herschel, were then on their way to fresh pastures in the Orange River Colony. The cattle and sheep were in a very poor condition, and as the severe drought still continued in Herschel petitioner would be a heavy loser unless an order were given reinvesting her with possession of the stock so as to have them returned to the better pasture she had secured. She asked for an order accordingly pending an action to be brought under the Native Succession Act of 1864, before the R.M. of Herschel. Respondents, it appeared, did not deny spoliation, but claimed native succession.

Order granted as prayed.

Ex parte IN THE INSOLVENT ESTATE OF GUS. A. SHACKLETON.

Mr. Benjamin moved as a matter of urgency for the appointment of a provisional trustee in the insolvent estate of Gus. A. Shackleton, of Naauwpoort. Petitioners stated that among the assets in the estate were several very valuable racehorses, which required to be carefully looked after, and their food supply was a great expense to the said estate, which the estate could not afford. Petitioners asked for the appointment of Mr. John D. Simmonds, of Port Elizabeth, as provisional trustee with power to dispose of the said racehorses, and perish able effects, and to collect book debts. Applicants represented claims to the amount of over £3,000.

Order granted as prayed.

Ex parte SYFRET.

Mr. Buchanan applied for the leave of the Court to mention a matter of urgency arising out of the insolvent estate of Herman Blomstein, of Piquetberg. Petitioner was appointed by the Master to be curator bonis of the estate. The first and second meetings of creditors were duly advertised to be held, but, before the second meeting could be held, the debtor made an offer of a composition to his creditors which they accepted, and the second meeting was accordingly not held, and a trustee had not been appointed. The debtor had sold his hotel, and the purchaser had entered into occupation. The debtor had given notice of his intention to apply in the Supreme Court on the 12th January, 1904, for his discharge, and he intended as soon as he obtained his discharge to give transfer of the property. There was no one, now qualified to make application for the transfer of the licence from the insolvent to the purchaser, and petitioner asked for authority of the Court to make application in terms of section 56 of Act 28 of 1883.

The application was refused, the Court stating that the petitioner might, if he applied, be vested by the Master with authority to apply for the transfer of the licence.

MSI V. BOVANA AND OTHERS. { 1903. Nov. 24th. „ 25th.

Magistrate's jurisdiction—Future rights.

The plaintiff, being an occupier of certain land in a Mission Station under regulations framed by the Missionary Society, which held the land by leave and licence of the Crown, instituted an action against the defendants in the Magistrate's Court for damages for destroying a certain fence which she had erected to indicate the boundary of her allotment. The Magistrate sustained an exception to the jurisdiction, on the ground that the action was one whereby future rights could be bound.

Held, on appeal, that as a judgment between the parties would decide no more than the question immediately at issue between them, namely, whether the plaintiff was occupying more than the portion allotted to her under the regulations, future rights would not be bound, and that consequently the Magistrate had jurisdiction.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Acting R.M. of King William's Town, in an action brought by the appellant, Msi, against the respondents, two natives, to recover £20 damages by reason of the defendants' act in unlawfully and wrongfully breaking down and destroying a certain fence at Brownlee Station.

When the case came before the Magistrate the defendants' agent took the following exceptions: "(1) That the action is beyond the jurisdiction of and not cognizable by the Court of the R.M., inasmuch as the issues involved bind the future rights of the parties, and the rights of other residents at Brownlee Station in certain reserved land known as Brownlee Station, in which the said fence removed was situated; (2) that the summons is bad and insufficient, inasmuch as it does not allege that the plaintiff had the right with and to the property or site upon which the fence was erected, or that the plaintiff was in lawful occupation thereof, or possessed of or held title to the same either by lease or purchase."

The Court decided to hear evidence and deal with the exceptions afterwards. The evidence of the resident missionary of the London Missionary Society's Station was to the effect that the plaintiff enclosed the space at the reservation in defiance of the orders of the Local Committee. The Government was the owner of the land, but the London Missionary Society had its use and occupation. The site granted to the plaintiff had previously been granted to some other persons. The plaintiff was repeatedly directed to remove the fence, but she refused. The fence was removed by the defendants, acting on the directions of the Local Committee.

The Magistrate, in his reasons for judgment, said that he dismissed the summons with costs, because he found that his decision would bind the future rights of the parties.

Mr. Gardiner for appellant, Mr. Buchanan for respondent.

Mr. Gardiner contended that the second exception was not valid. With regard to the first exception, he submitted that the future rights of the parties would not be bound by any decision given by the Magistrate in this case. The rule had been laid down by this Court that future rights would be regarded as bound by a decision of the Magistrate if that decision rendered the matter res judicata in future cases. Counsel quoted the case of Riversdale Divisional Council v. Pienaar (3 Juta, p. 252). He submitted that in the matter now in appeal no right was set up by the defendants. Whatever rights there were in the ground were vested, not in the defendants, but in the trustees. There was nothing to show that the defendants were trustees. Counsel also argued that where the total value of the future rights did not exceed the Magistrate's jurisdiction, the Magistrate was entitled to try the case Gadiega v. Ebriem (13 S.C.R. 117). It did not appear that in this matter the value exceeded the Magistrate's jurisdiction. Even Mr. Harper, the missionary, did not claim title in the ground. Neither the title to the land nor the future rights of the parties was in dispute.

Mr. Buchanan said that the plaintiff in the case claimed by virtue of a wrong. The summons was bad and insufficient, because it did not allege that the plaintiff had any right to be there. Counsel submitted that the plaintiff was claiming a declaration of rights by means of an action for trespass. It was clear that the two defendants were the agents of the society. The plaintiff was really basing her action upon her own tort. It was not only the future rights that would be bound, but it was a question of the plaintiff's right to the land. The defendants, as agents of the Missionary Society, could avail themselves of the same defence as their master. The fact of the two defendants removing the fence at the end of seven days showed a connection with the notice that had been sent to the plaintiff to remove it. It was necessary before determining the question of damages to decide the right of occupation. If the Magistrate decided in the plaintiff's favour by awarding damages, it established her right to the land, and if the Government or the missionary society took no further action, the plaintiff would, in time, establish her title to the land by virtue of occupation.

Mr. Gardiner, in reply, said there was no evidence to show that the defendants were acting as agents of the society. The missionary or the trustees not being a party to the suit could not be affected by any decision in the present case. The defendants were sued for damages and not for trespass. No decision in that case could affect any future rights of the trustees.

Cur. adv. vult.

Postea, (Nov. 25).

De Villiers, C.J.: This is an appeal against a judgment of the Magistrate for King William's Town, in which he upheld certain exceptions, which were taken to his jurisdiction by the defendants. The action was brought by a native woman against three other natives, living at the Brownlee Station, for damages for "wrongfully and unlawfully breaking down and destroying a certain fence," alleged to have been the property of the plaintiff. To this summons the following exceptions were taken. I will take the second first: "That the summons is bad and insufficient, inasmuch as it does not allege that the plaintiff had a right in and to the property or site upon which the fence was erected, or that the plaintiff was in lawful occupation thereof, or possessed or held title to the same, either by lease or purchase." This exception was not sustained by the Magistrate, and very properly, because the summons simply followed the form provided by the schedule (c) of the Act of 1856, and was perfectly formal, and not liable to the exception raised. The first exception was two-fold, defendants excepting to the jurisdiction of the Magistrate on the ground that future rights would be involved, and on the further ground that title to certain sites or portions of sites in certain reserve land was in dispute. The terms of the exception are: "That the action is beyond the jurisdiction and not cognizable by the Court of the Resident Magistrate, inasmuch as the issues involved bind the respective future rights of both parties, and the right or otherwise of the plaintiff and other residents of Brownlee Station to fence in and claim right and title to certain sites or portions of sites in a certain reserve land known as Brownlee Station, upon which the said fence when removed was situated." The Magistrate sustained the exception as to future rights, but said nothing in regard to the question of title being in dispute. In regard to this last exception, I am satisfied that there is really no question of title involved in the case. It is purely and simply a question of a right to occupation. The missionaries of the society have a right from the Government to occupation, and they distribute that right amongst the natives upon certain terms, and they frame certain regulations, and the real question which the Magistrate had to decide was whether the plaintiff was occupying more than the portion allotted to her under the regulations. She did not claim the title for herself, nor did she deny that the title was in the Missionary Society or in the defendants. That question, apparently, was not raised. The only other point to be determined is whether the Magistrate was right in holding that future rights were involved. After carefully considering this matter, I find it impossible to hold that there is any future right in question. In a certain sense, every judgment of a Magistrate's Court involves future rights if the sole test were the test that once a judgment has been given, this same question cannot be again raised as between the same parties—to that extent future rights would always be involved—but that is not the meaning of the enactment which prohibits the Magistrate from deciding as to future rights. The Act itself gives some indication as to what is intended by the term "future rights." There is a proviso to the 8th section (sub-section 3) stating "that no such magistrate shall have jurisdiction or cognisance to any action or suit . . . . whereby rights (c) in future can be bound," and then comes this proviso: "That any such magistrate may, in the course of any action or suit to recover damages for criminal conversation with the wife of the plaintiff, or for the amount of necessaries lawfully supplied to the wife of any person, determine in regard to the fact of marriage, and may in the course of any action or suit for the amount or value of maintenance lawfully supplied to the child, legitimate or illegitimate, of any person, determine upon the question of affiliation, so far as may be necessary for the decision of any such action or suit, without thereby binding, or being deemed or taken to bind, rights in future." Here, then, it seems to be assumed that without this proviso a decision as to the fact of marriage or upon the question of affiliation would bind future rights. Then follows this further proviso: "The evidence in every such case as aforesaid shall be recorded, and the same may be put in as proof by either the plaintiff or defendant in any subsequent suit or action in the same court between the same parties in which the matters in dispute in the former suit or action shall again come into dispute." In the present case, I fail to see that there is any future right which would be bound by the action. A decision as to marriage or affiliation, affecting as it does the status of individuals might fairly be held to bind future rights, but a decision whether a defendant is justified in breaking down an occupier's fence no more binds future rights than a decision as to whether the defendant owes the plaintiff a certain sum of money. Schedule C to Act 20 of 1856 recognises this by providing a form to meet the case of destroying fences. The decision against the present defendants would not affect other occupiers of this location, nor would it affect the missionaries themselves. It would be a binding judgment as between the present plaintiff and the present defendants, but it could not go further, so as to bind any future rights. For these reasons, I am of opinion that the Magistrate was wrong in holding that future rights would be involved, and that the appeal should be allowed with costs in this Court, and as to the costs in the Court below, they must abide the result of any decision given by the Magistrate upon the merits of the case.

Kotzé, J., said: I am of the same opinion. I do not think it could be successfully contended that in this case there was any dispute as to the title to the land or any other tenement, nor is it clear that any future rights would be affected by the Magistrate giving any decision on the matter. It is not quite clear that future rights will be affected, and I think that where that is the case, the Court should hold in favour of the Magistrate's jurisdiction.

[Appellant's Attorneys: Syfret, Godlonton and Low; Respondents' Attorneys: Innes and Hutton.]

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.), the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP, and the Hon. Mr. Justice KOTZÉ].

MASON AND CO. v BOOTH AND CO. { 1903. Nov. 25th.

Surety and principal debtor — Excussion—Pleading.

A surety, on being sued by the creditor in a Magistrate's Court, denied the suretyship by pleading the general issue but, failing such defence, he claimed the benefit of excussion. The evidence clearly established the contract of suretyship, notwithstanding the defendants' denial, and the Magistrate held, that as the defendant had deliberately postponed his claim to excussion until after issue had been joined, he could not claim the benefit after the issue had been found against him. The Court, on appeal, upheld the judgment.

This was an appeal against a judgment of the Acting R.M. of Port Elizabeth, in an action brought by the respondents to recover £35 11s. 9d. (reduced to £20, to bring the matter within jurisdiction) under a suretyship for goods sold and delivered to one Hop Chang, formerly carrying on business in Somerset East.

The summons set forth that the goods were supplied to one Hop Chang, of Somerset East, on the 27th February, 1903, "payment of which said sum was guaranteed to the said plaintiffs on the date aforesaid, at the time of the said sale, by the defendants, the said Hop Chang having no means or property in this colony to satisfy the said claim, and his whereabouts being to the plaintiff unknown." The defendant pleaded the general issue, and, failing that, he availed himself of the benefit of excussion.

The evidence in the Court below showed that Mason was present when the goods were sold to Hop Chang, and that the defendant Mason stood as guarantor for the account. The defendant Mason denied that he ever agreed to become guarantor for Hop Chang, and said that he never represented to Booth and Co. that he would stand good for the account.

The Magistrate, in his reasons for judgment, said that he gave judgment for the plaintiff for £20, as prayed, and costs. In this case the plaintiff sued the defendant for £35 11s. 9d. (reduced to £20 to bring it within jurisdiction), for goods sold and delivered to one Hop Chang, but the payment for which was guaranteed by the defendant. The defendant pleaded the general issue, which amounted to a denial that he guaranteed payment, failing which he availed himself of the benefit of excussion. Upon the evidence led, he considered that credence should be given to the plaintiff's witnesses rather than to the defendant, and he found that the defendant had guaranteed payment. That being so, the defendant was not competent to take the benefit of excussion at that stage, and should have done so before issue was joined. The Magistrate, in support of this view relied upon the case of Rogerson v. Meyer (2, Menzies, p. 42).

Mr. Benjamin submitted that the Magistrate was wrong in his attitude he had taken up in regard to the plea of excussion. He contended that the plea of non-excussion was properly taken by the defendants. The plaintiff had clear knowledge that this defence of non-excussion was to be raised, and he thought it would be very hard if a technical objection were to be taken on the lines followed by the Magistrate. The Court had repeatedly laid it down that the object in requiring these pleas initio litis was in order that the plaintiff or the party might not be prejudiced by the point being sprung upon him either after the evidence had been closed or at some later stage of the case. That was the real object, and in this case he submitted that the point was raised initio litis. He contended that the exception of non-excussion was a good one, and that it should have been allowed by the Magistrate. The presumption was that the debtor had not left the country.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Is Mason a Chinaman, too?]

Yes, he seems to be.

De Villiers, C.J.: The fact—appearing from the evidence—that the principal debtor had left the Colony would have been a sufficient ground for withholding the benefit of excussion, but this was not the ground of defence relied upon in the Court below. The objection was taken that—as laid down in Rogerson v. Meyer (2, Menzies, 49)—the defendant ought to have pleaded the beneficium excussionis before litiscontestation, and not merely to have given notice that he would claim the benefit in case he should fail in his plea by which he put the plaintiff to the proof of suretyship. I am inclined to agree with the Court below that the objection, although technical, was a good one. The right of claiming that the principal debtor should be first excussed is a benefit which the surety should avail himself of at the proper time and in the proper manner. It is not enough for the surety to give notice that after the suretyship has been proved he will claim the benefit, but he should in initio litis take the exception that the principal debtor should be excussed before any claim is made on him. Until such exception is taken the creditor is perfectly justified in suing the surety instead of the principal debtor, and it is not too much to expect from a surety that he should take the exception unconditionally, before he puts the creditor to the trouble and expense of proving the contract of suretyship. The appeal must therefore be dismissed with costs.

[Appellant's Attorney: G. Trollip; Respondents in default.]

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D. (Chief Justice), the Hon. Mr. Justice BUCHANAN and the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

APPEALS.

REX v. MZIMBA. { 1903. Nov. 26th.

This was an appeal against a judgment of the Eastern Districts Court, to which the prisoner had been committed by the Resident Magistrate of Stutterheim. The prisoner (a native) had been convicted of the crime of sheep stealing and sentenced.

The grounds of the appeal were: "That there is no evidence beyond that of an accomplice that the sheep had been slaughtered; that taking the carcase of a dead sheep is not a crime under the Act 35 of 1893, that the evidence of Inspector Wilson was inadmissible inasmuch as he did not caution the prisoner upon his arrest; and, generally, that the evidence for the Crown did not justify a conviction." Both the prisoner and his wife were arrested on the charge of being concerned in the theft, and put on their trial.

The evidence against the prisoners was to the effect that the sheep's throat had been cut, and that one of the witnesses, another native, helped to skin the animal. The male prisoner and his wife cooked the meat in the hut occupied by the natives in the service of the complainant (Ferdinand Steinhoffel). A pool of blood was found, which had recently been covered up. Both Mzimba and his wife were arrested. The male prisoner, who was the shepherd, denied that he killed the sheep, and declared that it died, and that he afterwards skinned it, as he understood there was trouble when a sheep was reported to be dead to his master. The Magistrate found the male prisoner guilty, and sentenced him to 12 months' imprisonment with hard labour, and to receive 20 lashes, and to pay 20s., the value of the sheep claimed by the complainant. The female prisoner was acquitted.

Mr. Gardiner for the appellant; Mr. Joubert for the Crown.

Mr. Gardiner said that the Act under which the prosecution was brought was an exceptional Act, inasmuch as it threw the onus of proof on the defendant. In support of this view counsel quoted section 28 of the Act, under which, he said, a person found in possession of stock was called upon to give an explanation of that stock, but the first thing the Crown had to prove was that he was in possession of stock. A definition of stock was given in section 2 of the Act, and set out the particular stock referred to, and went on, "and a slaughtered carcase or portion of a slaughtered carcase of any such stock." It lay upon the Crown before they cast the onus on the prisoner to prove that the prisoner was in possession of slaughtered meat. The prisoner's statement was that this was a sheep that had died. If the sheep had died, then the prisoner was not chargeable under the Act. There was the evidence of Bly, but he was an accomplice, as he admitted that he took part in the skinning, and that he ate some of the meat. If one left out the evidence of Bly, there was no evidence that a crime had been committed. Bly was clearly an accomplice, and, therefore, his evidence should be regarded by the Court with great suspicion.

[De Villiers, C.J.: What is a slaughtered sheep? Must its throat be cut?]

I should say a death brought about by human violence, or even by animal violence.

[De Villiers, C.J.: I think if you give a strict definition to "slaughter" it means cutting the throat. You don't slaughter a sheep if you throttle it, do you?]

I should say that a "slaughtered sheep" is not a sheep that has died a natural death. Counsel proceeded to urge that the evidence of the police inspector (Wilson) should be received by the Court with the greatest caution. Inspector Wilson seemed to have a peculiar view of his duties, and to think that the prisoner was called upon to account to him for possession of the sheep. Apart from Wilson's evidence, he contended that there was not sufficient evidence to convict. Wilson practically extorted a confession from the prisoner. Then if the conviction were upheld, he should submit that the punishment inflicted was excessive according to what was prescribed by the Act.

Without calling upon Mr. Joubert to address the Court,

De Villiers, C.J.: There is no ground either for disturbing the finding of the Magistrate or the finding of the Eastern District Court. The accused was charged with the theft of a sheep under the provisions of the Act of 1893. It was open, therefore, for the Magistrate to pass sentence upon the prisoner if he found him guilty in terms of that Act. But the object of the Act was not to prevent evidence being given against the prisoner so charged, except in terms of the provisions of the Act. Any evidence could be given which, under the ordinary law of the country, would be sufficient to convict the prisoner of theft. What was the evidence given in this case? Steinhoffel, the owner, alleged that his sheep had been stolen, he alleged moreover that he went to the prisoner's hut shortly after the sheep had been stolen, and there he found the head of the sheep in the possession of the prisoner. He also found the paunch of the sheep warm still in a bag, which was found near the prisoner's hut. The prisoner, therefore, was found in possession of stolen property, and the ordinary rule is that the onus in such a case lies upon the accused to give a satisfactory explanation as to how he came into possession of the stolen property. Now, what is the prisoner's explanation? He says he found a dead sheep, but the Court would not believe that, and there was ample evidence to justify the Court in disbelieving his statement. I need not go into the whole of the evidence; it is sufficient to say that there was ample evidence for refusing to accept his explanation. Counsel for the prisoner, however, argued as if the onus were the other way, as if the onus lay upon the prosecution to prove that the sheep had actually been slaughtered. In my opinion, no such onus is thrown upon him in the ordinary rule of the Colony. If a man's sheep is stolen and he finds the sheep in the possession of another person, he is justified in calling upon that person to explain how he came into possession, and the evidence is on that point wholly unsatisfactory. But, then, it is said that the police constable extracted a confession from the accused, and that he had no right to demand an explanation from him. It is not necessary to go into that point, because, quite independently of any confession made by the accused to the police constable, there was an ample evidence to justify the Magistrate in finding that the prisoner had stolen the sheep. For these reasons, I am opinion that the appeal should be dismissed.

Buchanan, J., concurred.

REX V. MAWABE.

Native Marriage — Polygamy — Prohibited degrees.

Where native polygamous marriages are recognized as legal, a man may lawfully marry the widow of his maternal uncle and (semble) may contract any marriage recognized by Native Custom, provided such custom be not contrary to the natural law.

This matter came on for appeal on a point reserved for the High Court of Southern Rhodesia in a prosecution for alleged murder, before Mr. Justice Vintcent.

The case stated was in the following terms: "Question reserved for the consideration of the Supreme Court of the Cape Colony under section 63 of the Southern Rhodesia Order in Council, 1898: The accused Mawabe was tried at the Criminal Sessions of the High Court of Southern Rhodesia, held at Bulawayo on the 7th May before me, for the crime of murder, and was found guilty of culpable homicide and sentenced to pay a fine of £5, or in default of payment to undergo imprisonment with hard labour for a period of one month subject to the decision of the Supreme Court of the Cape Colony upon the question hereinafter referred to, reserved at the trial. The accused, who is a native of Matabeleland, has two wives, Tjona and Marekwa—to whom he was married in accordance with native custom. Tjona is the elder wife in point of date of marriage. Marekwa was, before her marriage to accused, the widow of the brother of accused's mother. The relationship between the accused and Marekwa is that of affinity only. Marekwa was adduced as a witness for the prosecution. Objection was raised by counsel for accused to the admission of this woman's evidence on the ground that she is the legal wife of the accused. After having heard evidence as to the relationship of the parties and argument, I allowed her evidence to be led, but reserved the question of her competency as a witness for the prosecution for the consideration of the Supreme Court. It is clear that polygamous marriages are recognised by native law or custom, and that the taking to wife by a nephew of the widow of his maternal uncle is recognised by such law or custom. If, in any civil case between natives, a question arises as to the effect of a marriage contracted according to native law or custom by a native in the lifetime of one or more wives married to him according to native law or custom, the Court may treat such marriage as valid for all civil purposes in so far as polygamous marriages are recognised by the said native law or custom (vide section 51 of Southern Rhodesia Order in Council, 1898). My reason for allowing her evidence to be led was that, while holding that we must recognise native polygamous marriages if such be recognised by native custom, I did not consider this particular marriage valid in view of the relationship between the accused and Marekwa; in other words, I held that, where in a native marriage it is proved that the relationship between the parties is such that by our common law marriage between them is prohibited, our Courts should refuse to recognise the marriage even though it is valid according to native law or custom. According to the case of Mills v. The Acting Resident Magistrate (Cape) (11 Sheil's Reports, page 438), prior to Act 40 of 1892 marriage between a man and the widow of his late father's brother was prohibited—Act 40 of 1892 is not in force in Southern Rhodesia. If Marekwa's evidence be eliminated, the evidence for the prosecution is not sufficient to warrant a conviction. The question reserved for consideration is whether, under the circumstances, this woman was a competent witness for the prosecution? If the question is answered affirmatively, the conviction stands—if negatively the conviction is bad."

Mr. J. E. de Villiers in support of the point reserved; Mr. Pyemont for the Solicitor-General of Southern Rhodesia.

Mr. De Villiers quoted from the Rhodesian Order in Council, section 49, subsection 2, and said it was quite clear that the Colonial Amendment Act No. 40, 1890, did not apply to Rhodesia, and that by the Roman-Dutch law and the common law of the Colony as it then existed, marriage to the widow of one's deceased uncle was invalid as coming within the prohibited degrees. That would be the law if the section had stood by itself, but in section 50 it was provided that in civil matters between natives the High Court and the Civil Court should be guided by native law or custom so far as that law or custom was not repugnant to natural justice or morality. It appeared from the statement of the Judge that a marriage with the widow of one's maternal uncle was recognised by native law or custom. He submitted that that law was not "repugnant to natural justice or morality," and that the principle which was adopted in regard to civil matters should be applied to the law of evidence in a criminal matter such as this, because, after all, the civil law was the law that regulated marriage.

Mr. Pyemont addressed the Court in support of the theory that the woman was not prisoner's lawful wife, and that her evidence was admissible.

De Villiers, C.J.: By the law of this colony, as it existed before the Order in Council was framed, a wife was not competent or compellable to give evidence in a criminal case, for or against her husband. The only question, therefore, in the present case is whether Marekwa was or was not the wife of the prisoner, Mawaba. If she was his wife, her evidence was not admissible; if she was not, her evidence was admissible. The judge, in his reasons, says: "My reason for allowing her evidence to be led was that while holding that we must recognise the native polygamous marriages, if such be recognised by native custom. I did not consider this particular marriage valid in view of the relationship between the accused and Marekwa." It is clear, therefore, that in his opinion, but for the relationship between the parties, the marriage was legal, and the only point for this Court to consider is whether that relationship is or is not a bar to the legality of the marriage. Now, upon this point I think that we must hold that the marriage is legal. If it was legal, notwithstanding its polygamous nature, then it can only be because of native customs being introduced and if native customs recognise polygamous marriage I do not see why these customs should not be introduced, unless they are contrary to natural law. I am not prepared, for instance, to say that if there was a native custom that a man may marry his own daughter the Court would have held that that was not contrary to all natural law, that the Court would hold that that would be a legal marriage. The Court could not well hold that a marriage with the widow of the uncle is contrary to all natural law, seeing that in this colony the marriage of a man with his deceased wife's sister is considered as a lawful marriage. The Court has also held in the case of Wills that since the Act allowed such a marriage it is also lawful for a man to marry the widow of his deceased brother. I think that the Court should have held that this marriage was legal, notwithstanding that it was a marriage of a nephew with the widow of his deceased uncle. I think, therefore, that the evidence was not admissible, and the point reserved ought to be answered in favour of the objection. The Court will direct that the judgment be set aside notwithstanding the verdict.

Buchanan, J., concurred, and said that he would like to add that this decision was based upon the Order in Council in force in Rhodesia, that was the statutory enactment for that country. It did not necessarily apply to this country, there being no similar Statute in this country.

REX V. SIMMONS AND WILLIAMS. { 1903. Nov. 26th. „ 27th.

Auctioneer—Principal and agent Breach of trust — Culpable insolvency — Insolvent Ordinance.

An auctioneer who does not within a reasonable time pay over to his principal money realised by him on behalf of his principal commits a breach of trust and if he becomes insolvent without having paid the money he is guilty of culpable insolvency in having incurred a debt by reason of a breach of trust.

This was an appeal on a point reserved by Mr. Justice Watermeyer in the High Court of Matabeleland in a case in which the appellants were criminally prosecuted for culpable insolvency.

From the record in the Court below it appeared that the appellants were auctioneers, and under six counts they were indicted for incurring a debt by breach of trust, by reason of having wrongfully appropriated the proceeds of a sale of four horses, the property of the Native Affairs Department. The jury brought in a verdict that the accused were guilty of having failed to pay over the money to the persons who authorised them to sell the horses. The Judge directed the jury that that was tantamount to a verdict of guilty of breach of trust. Counsel for the accused objected, and the following point was reserved for the decision of the Court of Appeal: "Whether an auctioneer, who has sold goods belonging to a client either at public auction or by private treaty as principal, without, at the time of the sale, disclosing the names of the seller or purchaser, can be indicted for culpable insolvency for incurring a debt by reason of a breach of trust, when it is shown that subsequent to the date of sale he had received payment from the purchaser, but had wilfully neglected to pay over to his client." The Judge did not comment on the point reserved, but said that the indictment itself sufficiently placed the point before the Supreme Court. The estate of the appellants, who traded as Simmons and Williams, was sequestrated on the 17th March, 1903, at Salisbury, and on January 11, 22nd March, and 5th April they received from the Native Affairs Department, for the purpose of sale, four horses. The horses were sold for £123, and the appellants failed to pay over the sum of £53, being part of the proceeds of the said sale.

Mr. Close for the appellants; Mr. Pyemont for the Attorney-General of Matabeleland.

Mr. Close said this case seemed to him to be of some importance to determine what the meaning of the crime was. The crime, he submitted, was loosely and vaguely defined therein as the incurring of a debt by reason of a breach of trust. Counsel discussed the nature of trusts. He was not aware of any convictions for culpable insolvency by reason of a breach of trust. He submitted that the debt was an ordinary civil liability. The auctioneer took the money in the ordinary way from the buyer. He was not responsible for the pieces of money just he received from the buyer to the seller. He contended that the appellants had not committed such a breach of trust as to amount to a crime under the Criminal Law Amendment Ordinance.

Mr. Pyemont said that the question had been asked what was a breach of trust. His definition was that it was a breach of any duty thrown upon a man by his fiduciary relationship. He submitted that there was a fiduciary relationship between an auctioneer to whom goods were entrusted for sale and the person who employed him.

Cur. Adv. Vult.

Postea (November 27):

De Villiers, C.J.: This is an appeal from the High Court of Southern Rhodesia, which comes before this Court under the following circumstances: The prisoners were tried for culpable insolvency, the culpable insolvency alleged consisting in incurring a debt by reason of a breach of trust. The jury returned the following verdict: "The accused, having received the money, specified in such counts, wrongfully and unlawfully failed to pay over the same." The Court thereupon directed the jury that this amounted to a verdict of guilty on those counts, and they thereupon returned a verdict of guilty. Before sentence was passed, counsel for the accused objected to the finding of the jury, and asked that the point of law be reserved for the consideration of the Supreme Court. The following point of law is therefore reserved: "Whether an auctioneer, who has sold goods belonging to a client, either at public auction or by private treaty as principal, without, at the time of the sale, disclosing the names of the seller or purchaser, can be indicted for culpable insolvency for incurring a debt by reason of a breach of trust, when it is shown that subsequent to the date of sale he had received payment from the purchaser, but had wilfully neglected to pay over to his client." The question therefore arises, what is the duty of an auctioneer on receiving the proceeds of a sale? There can be no doubt that it is his duty, within a reasonable time, if not immediately, to pay over the proceeds to his principal. If he wilfully neglects to perform this duty, I am of opinion that he is guilty of a breach of trust. The question reserved distinctly says that the accused in the present case wilfully neglected to pay over to his client, and in my opinion, therefore, such wilful neglect was a breach of trust. Next, how does this debt arise? It is urged on behalf of the appellant that the debt arises only from the receipt of the money. In my opinion, however, the two should be connected. The debt arises from the receipt of the money, and the non-payment of that money to the principal. If the non-payment of that money is a breach of trust, then, in my opinion, the debt is incurred by reason of a breach of trust. In the case which was cited by Mr. Pyemont, the case of Crowther v. Elgood, the duty of the auctioneer was incidentally considered by the Court of Appeal. It was there held that "an auctioneer is a person acting in a fiduciary capacity within the meaning of the Debtors' Act, 1869 (sec. 4, sub-sec. 3), and if he makes default in payment of the money produced by the sale of goods entrusted to him for sale when ordered to pay it by a Court of Equity, he is liable to attachment, whether he still holds the money or has parted with it." The remarks of Lord Justice Cotton have an important bearing upon the present case. "In the first place," said the judge, "was the appellant acting in a fiduciary capacity in the transaction? In my opinion he was. He was an auctioneer, and as such he held the goods in trust to sell them for the benefit of the person who entrusted them to him, and if any deposit was paid at the time of the sale, he held it in trust for the vendor. It was not, in fact, disputed that the auctioneer is in a fiduciary capacity as to the goods, and it appears to me to follow that when he has received the money produced by the sale he holds that as the money of his principal." That appears to me to be an accurate statement of the law of this colony also. The auctioneer holds the money as the money of his principal, and if he does not, within a reasonable time, pay the money to his principal, he incurs a debt by reason of his breach of trust. For these reasons, I am of opinion that the question reserved should be decided against the prisoners, and that the appeal should be dismissed.

Buchanan and Maasdorp, J.J., concurred.

[Appellant's Attorneys: Fairbridge, Arderne and Lawton.]

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.), the Hon. Mr. Justice BUCHANAN, and the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

APPEALS.

REX V. INFINANA AND OTHERS. 1903. Nov. 27th.

Skins—Unlawful possession.

Six weeks after some natives had occupied a certain hut, which was burned down as soon as they left it, skins were found buried in the site on which the hut had stood.

Held, that this was not sufficient evidence of possession of the skins by any of the natives.

This was an appeal against a judgment of the Resident Magistrate of Matatiele, brought by four natives, Infinana, Dangatye, Mtowinski, and Kati.

The charge against the prisoners was of contravening the provisions of Act 35 of 1893, amended by Proclamation 109 of of 1900. They were found guilty, and sentenced to 12 months imprisonment, with hard labour, and to pay a fine of £5 each, or an additional three months' imprisonment. The charge was two-fold: (1) That they wrongfully and unlawfully stole one goat, the property of one Malifani; and (2) that they were wrongfully and unlawfully found in possession of two goat skins, which were found buried in a hut which they had occupied during the native ceremonies of Abakweta.

The Magistrate, in his reasons for judgment, said there was not sufficient evidence to establish the identity of Malifani's goat. The Court believed the evidence of the witnesses for the prosecution; there were minor discrepancies, which, however, were not considered sufficient to make bad the evidence given.

Mr. Benjamin for appellants, Mr. Joubert for the Crown.

De Villiers, C.J. intimated that the Court would first like to hear Mr. Joubert.

Mr. Joubert said he understood that the point made by the appellants was that there was no evidence of possession. The facts deposed to by the witnesses were found to be proved. Taking the evidence as proved, was there not sufficient evidence of possession? The main facts proved were that in May the complainant lost a goat; that in that same month or before he lost the goat, the accused occupied this hut, and that, after the accused had left the hut, the skin belonging to this goat was found buried. Counsel contended that the surrounding circumstances warranted the Court in believing that the skins found there were buried there during the occupancy of the accused.

Mr. Benjamin was not called upon.

De Villiers, C.J.: The charge against the prisoners was that of having been found wrongfully and unlawfully in possession of certain goat skins. Now, what is the evidence to support the charge? That the four prisoners, along with three others, had occupied a certain hut for the purpose of Abakweta, and that, between six weeks and two months after, the hut had been burned down, and they had left it, certain goat skins are found buried there. There is no evidence whatever of possession on their part. It is quite consistent with the whole of this evidence that these skins may have been buried there after the hut had been burned down. If persons act skilfully, they might bury the skins without allowing any of the ashes which were lying about on the ground to fall into the holes. The absence of ashes is the reason upon which the witnesses for the prosecution rely for stating that the hut was burnt down after the burial of these skins. But even if the skins had been buried in the hut while the men were there, it would not necessarily follow that every one of these seven men must be held to be in possession of the skins. There should be some evidence given to connect these men with the theft, that they partook of the meat, or took part in the cooking or some evidence connecting them with the possession of these skins, which were two months afterwards found buried. The Act certainly is not intended to apply to a case of this kind, and to justify the Court in holding that there was possession under circumstances like the present. The appeal must, therefore, be allowed, and the conviction quashed.

Buchanan, J. said he concurred. There was no actual possession, and there could not be said to be constructive possession.

[Appellants' Attorneys: Findlay and Tait.]

REX v. BILLINKIN. { 1903. Nov. 27th.

Liquor licence — Condition — Natives — Illegal proclamation.

The Licensing Court of K. granted a licence to the appellant subject to the provisions of a Proclamation issued by the Governor, prohibiting the sale of liquor to natives.

Held, that the condition imposed by the licence amounted to a prohibition to sell to natives, and that as such prohibition could legally have been imposed independently of the Proclamation, the illegality or otherwise of such Proclamation could not affect the question whether the appellant could legally sell liquor to natives.

This matter came up for review at the instance of the defendant upon a conviction of the Resident Magistrate for King William's Town under the Liquor Licensing Act. Mr. Benjamin was for the appellant; Mr. Nightingale was for the Crown.

Mr. Benjamin said that the summons called upon the Resident Magistrate for King William's Town to produce the records and all proceedings in the case of Rex and Abram Billinkin. The defendant was charged with the crime of contravening section 22 of the Act 28 of 1883, in that on or about the 11th day of April last, he being a licensed dealer in wine and spirits, did wrongfully and unlawfully sell one bottle and one half-bottle of brandy to an aboriginal native within the proclaimed area of King William's Town. The defendant was found guilty, and sentenced to pay a fine of £50, or in default, six months' imprisonment with hard labour, licence to be forfeited, and accused disqualified to hold a retail wine and spirit licence for a period of three years. The said proceedings were brought on the 19th June last for review, before the Hon. Mr. Justice Sheil, who certified the same to be in accordance with real and substantial justice. Mr. Benjamin contended that the Magistrate had no jurisdiction in the matter, that the Proclamation was unlawful, and that the proceedings were irregular.

Without calling upon Mr. Nightingale,

De Villiers, C.J.: The summons in this case alleges two grounds of review — first of all, that the Magistrate acted beyond his jurisdiction, and secondly, that the proceedings were wholly irregular. In regard to the first of these objections, the Magistrate clearly had jurisdiction to decide whether there was a contravention of section 22 of the Act 28 of 1883. In regard to the second objection I fail to see that the proceedings were grossly irregular. The Magistrate may have made a mistake in point of law, but that does not constitute a gross irregularity. Probably the Magistrate was wrong in allowing the prosecution under one section of the Act, instead of under another, and if this proceeding had been by way of appeal, then the Court would have had to consider whether the Magistrate was justified in convicting under the 22nd section of the Act. It is by no means clear that he would not have been justified in convicting under another section of the Act. If the defendant had not taken the licence subject to these provisions, it would have been competent for the Licensing Court to say: "We will give you a licence, subject to the ordinary condition that you shall not sell to the natives." The Licensing Court is put off its guard, it issues its licence subject to the Proclamation, and then the accused goes on selling contrary to the Proclamation. The condition imposed really amounted to a prohibition to sell to natives, and as such a prohibition could be imposed independently of the Proclamation, the illegality or otherwise of the Proclamation cannot affect the question whether the defendant could legally sell liquor to natives. He sold liquor contrary to the conditions of his licence, and the appeal against the conviction must be dismissed.

Buchanan, J., concurred.

REX V. CLARENCE.

Remittal of cases by Attorney-General—Section 29 of Act 3 of 1861—Reading of evidence taken at preparatory examination.

The reading at the trial of a case remitted to a Resident Magistrate of depositions taken at a preparatory examination, is left to the discretion of such Magistrate by the 29th section of Act 3 of 1861, but such discretion must be judicially exercised.

If at the trial the accused pleaded guilty and the evidence taken at the preparatory examination establishes such guilt, it would be a judicial exercise of the Magistsate's discretion not to read the evidence aloud in the presence of the accused.

This was an appeal against a judgment of the Resident Magistrate of Sutherland, who had convicted the appellant Clarence of the crime of stealing £103 9s., the property of a farmer. Mr. Gardiner was for appellant; Mr. Joubert was for the Crown.

Mr. Gardiner said that the ground of appeal was that the conviction and sentence were contrary to law, inasmuch as the case, having been remitted by the Attorney-General to the said Resident Magistrate under Act 43 of 1885, and his attention having been drawn to section 29 of the Act 3 of 1861, the Resident Magistrate having taken the preparatory examination, although at the trial the prisoner pleaded guilty, the sentence aforesaid was passed without the evidence having been read over to the prisoner; that the said proceedings were irregular, and contrary to law. The charge against the prisoner was that on the 11th September he did wrongfully and unlawfully steal a sum of £103 9s., the property or in the lawful possession of one Gert Johannes Nel, a farmer. The preliminary examination was taken, and at that preliminary examination the accused did not admit his guilt. The accused said he reserved his defence. The prisoner was committed for trial, and the case was remitted by the Attorney-General in the following letter: "I have the honour to remit this case to the Court of the R.M., under Act 43 of 1885, and in doing so to draw your attention to section 29, Act 3 of 1861." He was then brought up before the same Magistrate, and put in a statement in which he pleaded guilty. The Magistrate found him guilty, and sentenced him, but the Magistrate did not comply with the provisions of section 29, Act 3 of 1861, and did not read over the evidence to him, as he (counsel) should show he was required to do by law. The Magistrate, in enclosing the record, said that he had to express his regret for the error that had occurred in using the wrong charge form. It was after the case was over that the attorney for the defence drew his attention to it. Counsel went on to say that it was important in this case to notice that the prisoner, at the preparatory examination, did not admit his guilt.

De Villiers, C.J.: A preliminary examination was taken against the accused for theft before the Resident Magistrate of Sutherland. The papers were sent to the Attorney-General, who then remitted the case to the Resident Magistrate of Sutherland. The trial accordingly took place before the same magistrate who had taken the preliminary examination. The prisoner was informed that the case had been remitted, and he pleaded guilty. The record proceeds thus: Mr. Attorney Marais appears on behalf of the prisoner, but does not intend to call any witnesses for the defence, and puts in a statement by prisoner. The statement is as follows: "I, France Clarence, charged with the crime of theft, hereby admit my guilt in having done the regrettable deed of taking money belonging to another person. It was in an hour of great temptation to which I succumbed. I throw myself upon the leniency of the Court, and plead for mercy, as this is my first offence."

Thereupon sentence is passed, and apparently a lenient sentence, considering the amount which he admitted to have stolen. Now, however, there is an appeal against that decision on the ground that the Magistrate did not read over to the prisoner, and in the presence of the prisoner, the evidence given in the preparatory examination. Reliance has been placed upon the case of the Queen v. Strydom (1 Juta 60), where undoubtedly this Court held that a simple plea of guilty in a Magistrate's Court, without any corroborative evidence will not justify a Magistrate in convicting a prisoner. In that case there was no evidence whatever beyond the mere admission of the prisoner, and the Court then, following previous decisions, held that that was not enough, and that there ought to be some evidence upon oath that a crime had been committed. In the remarks made by me it was said: "It was stated that before the Superior Courts the confession of a prisoner was continually taken, and upon that confession the prisoner was convicted, and sentenced, but no judge would accept the plea, or at all events sentence the prisoner, until he had been satisfied that the crime with which the prisoner stood charged had actually been committed." But how does he satisfy himself? From reading the preparatory examination, where the evidence is taken on oath. Then being so satisfied, he sentences the prisoner. Then the judgment goes on: "In fact, there can be no committal of a prisoner for trial in a superior court unless the Magistrate and the Attorney-General, or private prosecutor were firmly convinced that a crime had been committed. Even with all these safeguards every judge, before he accepted a plea of guilty, or, at all events, before he sentenced a prisoner, took care to ascertain from the preliminary examinations whether the crime had actually been committed." But then reliance is placed upon the 29th section of the Act of 1861, to which the attention of the Magistrate was directed by the Attorney-General. The provision is as follows: "Cases remitted by the Attorney-General to Courts of the Magistrate shall be proceeded with in Courts in like manner in all respects as if no preparatory examination had been previously taken, save and except that when the Magistrate trying such case shall himself be the person before whom the preparatory examination was taken it shall not be imperative on him to recall any witness, and it shall be competent and sufficient to read as evidence the deposition of such witness." Admitting, then, that if the accused pleads not guilty the evidence should be read aloud in his presence, it does not follow that if the accused pleads guilty the same course is necessary. The section enacts that it shall be competent and sufficient to read the evidence, and thus leaves a discretion with the Magistrate. That discretion would, perhaps, not be properly exercised if on a plea of not guilty the Magistrate were to find the accused guilty without reading the evidence previously taken. On a plea of guilty, however, it appears to me sufficient that there should appear on the record evidence on oath that the accused had committed the offence, and such evidence there certainly was in the present case. For these reasons I think that the appeal should be dismissed.

Buchanan, J., concurred, and added that he thought that the learned Judge who sat in the case of Rex v. Mpala and others (Mr. Justice Kotze), was not aware of the practice of this Court. "I know," added his lordship, "that the practice has been to confirm these cases constantly."

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D. (Chief Justice), and the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

HUGO v. HUGO. { 1903. Nov. 30th

This was an application by Elizabeth Hugo, of the Paarl, for an order declaring her husband, Francois Jacobus Hugo, incapable of managing his affairs, and appointing applicant curator of his person and property.

Elizabeth Hugo, the applicant, stated that her husband was in a weak state of mind, and was not fit to take the charge of his business. He was blind.

Dr. Crakowski said he had attended the respondent during the past two years. He had treated the respondent for paralysis. Witness did not think he was capable of looking after his own affairs. Respondent was suffering from mental weakness, with partial paralysis.

By the Court: He would not say that the case was hopeless.

Mr. Nicholson, Resident Magistrate at the Paarl, in an affidavit, said that, as curator ad litem, he had seen the respondent, who he found was quite willing that the management of his affairs should be entrusted to his wife. He was of a weak intellect, though, in deponent's opinion, by no means insane. The respondent's sight was failing. In deponent's opinion, it would be for the respondent's benefit that the management of his affairs should be taken out of his hands.

On the motion of Mr. Benjamin order was granted, declaring the respondent incapable of managing his own affairs, and appointing Mrs. Hugo as curator bonis, with leave to the defendant to apply to be released from curatorship, costs of the application to come out of the estate.

Ex parte HURD.

Mr. Buchanan said that this matter had previously been before the Court, but had been ordered to stand over pending the production of further evidence of the petitioner's identity. The petitioner applied for leave to have his correct name entered in certain documents, including a transfer deed, mortgage bond, and an ante-nuptial contract. His name at present appeared as Sidney Hurd—by which name he was commonly known—whereas his correct name was Herbert Hurd. Counsel read several affidavits as to identity and the entry in the documents at present.

Order granted as prayed.

REX V. RUBINSTEIN.

Mr. Gardiner moved for leave for this matter, which was an appeal against a judgment of the Assistant Resident Magistrate of the Cape (Mr. C. W. Broers), to be set down for the 12th December, or such other date as the Court may direct. The affidavit of an articled clerk in the employ of the defendant's attorneys (Messrs. Friedlander and Du Toit) stated that the defendant was tried on the 20th October last on a charge of theft by pocket-picking, and sentenced to three months' hard labour, and the infliction of fifteen lashes. Some 37 days had now elapsed out of the 41 allowed, and it was impossible to set down the matter within the required period, because the term was now over. The defendant was in gaol, and had been prevented from bringing the appeal earlier, owing to lack of funds. Counsel quoted the case of Queen v. Botha (9 C.T.R., 389), and Queen v. Bruynes (4, E.D.C., 258), in support of the application.

Mr. Nightingale (on behalf of the Crown) said that he did not wish to offer strenuous opposition to the application, inasmuch as the defendant had been delayed by want of funds, but he contended that the Court would be perfectly justified, following the principle laid down in other cases, in refusing the application. It was entirely a matter of grace. The defendant was convicted on the 11th May of this year, and sentenced to three months' imprisonment. He was discharged on the 10th August, and then on the 20th October he was convicted on a precisely similar offence in Cape Town.

De Villiers, C.J. said that he found, from reading the record of the case before the Magistrate, that the defendant pleaded guilty.

Mr. Gardiner said he thought there must be a mistake. He was very much surprised to hear that the defendant pleaded guilty.

De Villiers, C.J.: He took the purse out of her pocket, and dropped it. There will be no order given in this case.

REX V. RATOWSKY.

Appeal in criminal case—Leave to prosecute appeal.

The defendant, in a criminal case having allowed a full term of the Court to elapse after conviction, applied for leave to proceed with the appeal.

Held, that in the absence of any statement of the grounds on which the special leave was asked for, the application should be refused.

Mr. Gardiner moved for leave for this appeal to be set down for hearing on the 12th December, or such other date as the Court might direct.

The Chief Justice said it was well that counsel should have an opportunity of reading the record before applications of this kind were made.

Mr. Gardiner said the applicant brought the appeal against a judgment passed in the Court of the Assistant Resident Magistrate of the Cape on the 15th October last. Defendant was charged before Mr. Broers with being the owner of certain premises used for immoral purposes, and he was sentenced to three months' imprisonment with hard labour. Counsel had been briefed, and notice served on the Attorney-General, and accepted, but subsequently the notice was returned. He (Mr. Gardiner) was not the counsel retained in the matter, and he made the application in the absence of Mr. Burton, who was away. The specified period of 41 days had elapsed, and, unless the Court would grant the defendant leave to appeal, he would be debarred from doing so, and compelled to serve his sentence. It was purely a matter of grace.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Is there no reason given for the application?]

A mistake on the part of the defendant's attorneys. Unless your lordship will grant him that indulgence, he will have to suffer for the mistake of his attorneys.

Mr. Nightingale (for the Crown) said that this matter differed from the last. The notice of appeal was served on the Attorney-General on the 24th of this month, and it was immediately returned to the applicant's attorneys with an explanation that they were debarred from setting down the appeal in the way they desired by the provisions of the Act. In regard to the merits of the affidavit which had been put in in support of the appeal, there was nothing whatever to show that it was compulsory on the Court to grant this application. The Court, of course, had the right to grant applications of this kind, but in the past it had always been satisfied that there were exceptional grounds. The applicant put this down to a mistake on the part of his attorneys, but that point had already been decided in the case of Brink v. the Attorney-General, decided in 1898, where it was held that neglect on the part of the defendant's attorneys was not a sufficient ground for grace to be exercised.

De Villiers, C.J.: There is no reason whatever stated in the notice of motion why this Court should grant special grace to the defendant. He has had ample time, the judgment was given on the 15th October, there has been the whole term intervening when the Court would have been prepared to hear the matter. Now counsel, without stating any ground, asks for leave to set down the appeal for a day which, according to the new rules of Court, the Court is supposed to be on vacation. If counsel had said that he had read the record and that there is good reason to believe that an appeal would be successful upon the merits, the Court might have strained a point in favour of the defendant, but there is nothing of the kind to show that there is a possibility or a probability of appeal being successful. Under these circumstances, I am of opinion that leave should not be granted.

Appellant's Attorneys, Friedlander and Du Toit.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.), and the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

FRANCK V. SACHS, GINSBERG AND OTHERS. { 1903. Dec. 1st.

Common or party wall—Urban servitude—Interdict.

The respondents, with the view to erect a higher building, pulled down a building belonging to them, with the exception of a party wall, which was common to the applicant and respondents' premises, and the consequence was that the common wall became less safe than it had been before, although it was sufficiently safe for the purpose of the applicant's building. The respondents having been directed by the Town Council either to render the common wall safe or to pull it down, proceeded to take it down.

Held, that the applicant was entitled to an order restraining the further demolition of the common wall.

Mr. M. de Villiers moved on behalf of Miss Franck, owner of Madeira House, for a rule nisi to be made absolute restraining the respondents from proceeding with the demolition of a party wall between Madeira House and Claridge's Hotel. Mr. Searle, K.C., was for the respondents, Sachs, Ginsberg, and Hoffmann; Mr. Schreiner, K.C., was for the Cape Town City Council.

From the affidavits it appeared that the Town Council acquired certain property in or near Staal Plein, known as Claridge's Hotel, for street improvement purposes, and that they disposed of the surplus ground to the other respondents, who proposed erecting a new hotel. The latter respondents, acting, as they said, under an order from the Town Council, commenced to pull down the party wall, because of its dangerous condition, whereupon the applicant objected, and moved the Supreme Court for an interdict. The applicant desired the wall to be reinstated in its former position, and contended that the acts of the respondents had rendered her building less secure.

Mr. Searle said that the affidavit of Mr. De Korte (who acted for applicant) was very bald, and that no case had been made out by the applicant for an interdict. It had not been stated to the Court that days before the application for a rule was made the Town Council had directed the wall to be removed as it was dangerous. Respondents had made a very satisfactory offer to the applicant. They stated that they intended to put up substantial buildings, and to re-build the said party wall substantially at their own expense, on condition that the proprietor of Madeira House should not be entitled to use the wall more than at present without contributing towards the cost. His clients did not intend to knock down any portion of the Madeira House property. They did nothing except what they were called upon to do by the Town Council, who had condemned the wall.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Are you prepared to give an undertaking that you will not interfere with any portion of this party wall?]

I understand that the portion which does not form part of Madeira House is demolished.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Yes, but what right had you to do it?]

We did it in answer to the Town Council's notice.

[De Villiers, C.J.: But then, you see, this wall became dangerous through removing a portion of your building.]

That may be, but I don't admit it.

De Villiers, C.J. said it was quite conceivable that a party wall might have been quite safe as long as other buildings were joining up to it, but when the other buildings were removed it became dangerous. What was there to prevent the respondents, Ginsberg and the others, from building another wall?

Mr. Searle said he did not see that the respondents were called upon to build another wall. What had happened was this, that no portion of Madeira House had been touched, and all that had been touched was a portion that formed the wall of Claridge's Hotel. The respondents did not intend to pull down any further portion of the wall. They recognised that they could not touch a portion of Madeira House in any way, and they did not intend to do so, unless they came to some arrangement with the applicant, or they should build a wall on their side of the party wall.

De Villiers, C.J. said if that were so it would simplify the matter a good deal, but the impression given by the affidavits of the respondents was that they would proceed with the destruction of the remainder of the wall in spite of the applicant.

Mr. Searle said he did not see how that impression could possibly have been drawn from the affidavits.

Mr. Schreiner said that the position of the Town Council was that they had simply performed a public duty in accordance with their regulations. They directed that this wall, which was a dangerous structure, should be taken down, and counsel thought it was very much to be regretted that this notice from the Town Council did not come before the Court when the rule nisi was granted. The City Engineer, in his affidavit, said that the wall was "in a ruinous state, or dangerous to the public, and the occupiers of the adjoining buildings." To interdict the Town Council from proceeding to do their duty was a thing the Court had never hitherto done so long as they were shown to have acted bona fide. The regulation under which the Council acted was No. 164, and was framed under the Act 26 of 1893. In this matter the Town Council, qua owner, had done nothing; they had simply acted as a Corporation with a public duty to perform. He contended that the motion was very premature, and that it would have been well if the applicants had approached the Council to see if some arrangement could be entered into whereby the wall could be rendered safe and preserved. The logical position was that the rule should be discharged, with costs as against the Town Council.

Mr. De Villiers said that his learned friend had complained that the motion was premature, but already a hole had been made in the lumber room of the Madeira House, of which the present occupier complained. If the wall had been put in a dangerous condition at all, it had been put into that condition by persons for whom the Town Council was responsible. He contended that the regulation under which the Town Council had proceeded did not apply to such a case as this. The applicant asked that the wall should be reinstated in its former position. A certain amount of damage had already been done, making that wall dangerous. His learned friend (Mr. Searle) seemed to forget this. He also forgot that, while they were prepared to arrive at a settlement, the respondents required the applicant to bear a portion of the expenses. He submitted that the applicant had been quite justified in moving for an interdict against the Town Council, who, through Messrs. Ginsberg and Co., had rendered unsafe a wall which had been quite secure.

De Villiers, C.J.: It appears from the affidavits that the Town Council of Cape Town is the registered owner of the premises known as Claridge's Hotel. According to the affidavit of Mr. Finch, the Town Clerk, the Town Council has sold so much of the site as is not required for improvements—that is to say, the portions of the property adjoining Madeira House—to the other respondents, on condition that they should pull down and rebuild the premises, and that, upon the execution of certain work thereon, transfer should be passed to them. In the fulfilment of the conditions so imposed upon the other respondents they proceeded to pull down what is admitted to be a party wall between the applicants' premises and the respondents' premises. They began by pulling down a party wall which does not form any portion of the support of the buildings of the applicant. But still it was a party wall, which the respondents, other than the Town Council at all events, had no right in any way to interfere with. In consequence of the pulling down of the remaining walls of Claridge's Hotel, the party wall in question became less safe than it had been before. I am not satisfied that it is so unsafe as to render the continued existence of Madeira House as a building unsafe, but this I am satisfied of, that it is in consequence of the removal of the walls which acted as buttresses to the party wall, that the party or common wall became less safe than it was before. The party wall being so rendered less safe the Corporation of Cape Town thereupon gave notice to the occupants of Claridge's Hotel, as well as Madeira House, calling upon them respectively to pull down this party wall. The applicant thereupon applied to a Judge in Chambers for an order restraining the respondents from continuing to pull down that party wall, and the question now is, whether the order which was then made, restraining the further demolition, should be made absolute. There is no serious dispute as to the law applicable in the matter. The rights of the owners of two adjoining properties in respect of a party wall which is common to both, although not strictly servitudes, are generally treated in the books as urban servitudes. Without the consent of the one the other is not entitled to pull down the common wall unless, of course, the demolition becomes absolutely necessary for the protection of both properties. In the present case the evidence is wholly insufficient to prove such urgent necessity. It is true that the wall is not quite as safe as before, but it is quite safe enough for the applicant's purposes, and if it is not sufficiently safe for the respondent's purpose, it is because by demolishing the rest of their building they have removed the walls which have hitherto served as buttresses to the common wall. It is true also that the Town Council has directed the other respondents to render the common wall safe, or else to pull it down, but it is clear that they could render the wall perfectly safe by restoring the building to the condition in which it was before. This, however, is not what they intend doing, for their plan is to raise the height of their new building for which purpose the party wall would be insufficient. But surely they cannot effect their improvements at the risk and expense of their neighbours. Nothing would be easier than to build a proper wall on their own property, and next to the common wall. If, however, they choose to pull down a wall to which the applicant has a right equal to theirs, she is entitled, under the practice of this Court, to an order restraining such demolition, that being a more expeditious mode of relief than the ancient cautio de damno infecto. For these reasons I am of opinion that the order should be made absolute. It is said that there is no proof that the respondents intended to pull down any portion of the wall which serves as support of the premises of the applicant, but it is admitted that they began by pulling down the party wall which does not serve as such support, and the applicant was quite justified, on seeing this beginning of mischief, in coming to Court to prevent any extension of the mischief. It is said there was no intention on the part of the other respondents than the Town Council to pull down the rest of the wall, but, reading the correspondence carefully, I am not satisfied that it was not their intention ultimately to pull down these walls, even without the consent of the applicant. They would have preferred to have had their consent, they endeavoured to extract a consent, but a hint is given that even if she does not consent the thing would be done in some way or another. At all events, the fact that there was a beginning of the demolition by pulling down a portion of the wall was sufficient justification for the plaintiff to come into Court to prevent any further mischief being done. I am of opinion, therefore, that the rule should be made absolute as against the other respondents than the Town Council. As far as the Town Council is concerned, if that body had not been the owner of these premises, and had not entered into the contract to which I have just referred, I should certainly not have made any order against the Town Council, as the Court would not wish to interfere with their carrying out their regulations, but the Town Council appears in this case in a two-fold capacity. It is by the order of the Council that the alterations were made, and it is impossible to suppose that what was done was not done with the full consent of the Council. There is no allegation that it was not done with their consent, and it is impossible to believe that it could have been done without their knowledge. At any rate, it is part of their contract, according to Mr. Finch's own affidavit, that the respondent should pull down and rebuild the premises, and I consider, therefore, that the Town Council was properly made party with the respondent to the proceedings in this case, and should also be included in the interdict. The rule will, therefore, be made absolute with costs against both respondents.

Replying to Mr. Schreiner,

The Chief Justice added: The regulations were not mentioned at all in the affidavits before the Court, and, therefore, the Court is only now dealing with the Town Council in its capacity as the owner, and as the party who had authorised the demolition of the respondent's premises. Any interdict, therefore, will not affect any powers which the Town Council has under these regulations. In making this remark, I do not wish it to be supposed that, in my opinion, a case has arisen for the Town Council to pull down this wall under the regulations. The order of the Court will be that the rule be made absolute with costs against both respondents, half the applicant's costs to be paid by the Town Council and the other half by the other respondents, without prejudice to the rights of the Town Council under their regulations.

[Applicant's Attorneys: J. C. De Korte; Respondent's Attorneys: Mc Intyre and Bisset.]

HARRISON V. HARRISON.

Mr. Benjamin (for the applicant) said that this was the return day of a rule nisi granted by the Chief Justice in Chambers calling on the respondent to show cause why he should not be restrained from parting with certain assets of the joint estate, pending the result of an action to be instituted by the plaintiff against the defendant; also an order appointing a receiver to receive the rents of the property belonging to the joint estate, and authorising the said receiver to pay to the plaintiff's attorneys £30 to enable her to proceed with the said action. Mr. Benjamin said that the replying affidavit of the defendant had only been handed to the applicant's attorneys this (Tuesday) morning, so that it would be necessary to apply for the matter to stand over to enable applicant to put in a replying affidavit. Applicant had attempted to come to a settlement for a separation, but without success, and applicant was penniless.

Mr. Alexander appeared for the defendant.

The matter was ordered to stand over till the 3rd inst.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.), the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP and the Hon. Mr. Justice KOTZE.]

HARRISON V. HARRISON. { 1903. Dec. 3rd.

Mr. Benjamin moved for a rule nisi to be made final, restraining the respondent, William Edward Harrison, from in any way parting or dealing with the assets of the joint estate, and calling him to show cause why a receiver should not be appointed, and why he should not be directed to pay £30 to the petitioner's attorneys to enable her to institute an action for judicial separation, and a sum for the maintenance of the petitioner and her children. Mr. Alexander appeared for the respondent.

Mr. Benjamin read the petition which set out that the parties were married in community of property in Cape Town in 1881, and that a rule nisi had been granted by the Court requiring the respondent to pay to her attorneys £30 to enable her to institute an action for separation. This the respondent had failed to do. He had paid her £31, but said that the money was for household bills.

Mr. Alexander read the answering affidavit of the respondent, which stated that he paid £30 to the respondent on the 30th September to enable her to proceed with the action. He was quite willing to separate from the petitioner and to make her an allowance, but the amount that she specified was unreasonable. In a further affidavit the respondent said that he handed the money to one of his daughters at the house to be given to the plaintiff, who was then in bed, and to be used by her for the purposes of the action. He denied that he had ever evaded a settlement. He denied the plaintiff's allegations as to his cruelty and drunkenness, and squandering the estate, and said that it was owing to the violence of the plaintiff that he had been compelled to leave his house at Sea Point, where the plaintiff now resided and to take up his residence in Cape Town. The plaintiff was already amply provided for. Deponent was very unwilling that the estate should be realised at the present time, in consequence of the state of the money market, and he was of opinion that it would not realise more than half of what it was worth.

[De Villiers, C.J.: If he possesses this estate, it is the least he can do to give her £30.]

Your lordship ordered him previously to pay her £30, and he says that he has paid her that money. She now alleges that he gave her £31 for another purpose, to pay household bills, whereas he says in his affidavit that he pays all household bills himself.

Mr. Benjamin read a further affidavit by the petitioner, in which she said she believed that the estate to-day, notwithstanding the squandering by the defendant, was worth £12,000. She did not wish the estate to be realised immediately, but she said that, in the interests of herself and the children of the marriage, it should be realised by degrees. Owing to the drunken, dissolute habits of the respondent, there was great danger of the entire estate being dissipated.

Counsel submitted that inasmuch as the parties were married in community, and there would be a considerable sum due in the way of rent at the end of the year, which the defendant might dissipate, no injury would be done to the respondent if he were prevented from dealing with the assets of the joint estate.

De Villiers, C.J.: It is to be regretted that the parties did not come to an amicable arrangement, as the Court suggested when the matter was previously before it, and it is to be hoped that before next February the parties will have come to an arrangement, and an opportunity will be given to them, on the 12th, if they come to an arrangement, to have it made an order of Court. The Court will grant an interdict restraining the respondent from parting with any bonds or landed property belonging to the joint estate, pending an action to be instituted forthwith by applicant for judicial separation, the respondent to pay forthwith the sum of £30 to applicant's attorneys to enable her to proceed with the action, and a further sum of £30 per month, until the further order of Court, for the maintenance of the applicant and her children, first payment to be made on the 15th December next. As to the application for the appointment of a receiver, the Court is of opinion that this is not the proper stage for that to be done. The respondent, as the husband, is entitled to the administration of the estate until it has been clearly proved that he is not a fit and proper person to have such administration. Costs will be costs in the cause.

SUPREME COURT

CRIMINAL SESSIONS.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice KOTZE and a Jury.]

REX v. CONRAD COHEN AND FOUR OTHERS.

1903.
Dec. 9th.
" 10th.
" 11th.
" 12th.
" 13th.
" 14th.

An application to compel the Attorney-General to produce an affidavit made by a witness in a criminal case refused.

A Judge may, in the interests of justice, call a witness not summoned by either the Crown or the prisoner. Such witness may, with leave of the Judge, be cross-examined by counsel for the party against whom the witness has testified, but only in so far as the evidence of the witness is adverse and no further.

The accused were indicted for the theft of thirty-two tarpaulins and sixty-four sail-covers from the Imperial Ordnance Compound at Fort Knokke. At the trial it appeared that a witness, Charles Banks, had given the police certain important imformation. Banks was not called as a witness at the preparatory examination. He was subsequently arrested in Cape Town as a deserter from the South African Constabulary, a police force in which he was a private at Lydenburg, in the Transvaal. Banks was sent back to the Transvaal, where he was punished for desertion. At the request of his superior officer he made an affidavit in the Transvaal in connection with the above case of The King v. Cohen and Others. This affidavit was sent to the Law Department, Cape Town. Banks was subsequently brought down to Cape Town under an escort to give evidence at the trial in the Supreme Court. On his arrival in Cape Town he made a statement which was reduced to writing, and a copy of it was supplied to the legal advisers of the prisoners.

After the case for the Crown had been closed,

Mr. Wilkinson (for the prisoner Conrad Cohen) moved that an order be granted directing the Attorney-General to produce the affidavit made by Banks in the Transvaal.

Mr. Howell Jones (for the Crown) objected, and submitted that a bad precedent would be laid down if such an application were allowed.

Kotzé, J.: The affidavit in question is not an original affidavit upon which the arrest of Conrad Cohen, the prisoner on whose behalf the application is made, took place. No authority justifying such a course has been cited, and I must refuse the application.

At the conclusion of the evidence for the defence, Kotzé, J., who presided at the trial, intimated that he intended, in the interests of justice, if the jury so desired, to call as a witness one Drayson, who had not been summoned as a witness for the prosecution or the defence. The Jury expressed a wish that Drayson should be called. He was thereupon called and sworn, and questioned by the Court as to a certain cheque for £19, which had been put in by counsel for the prisoner Cohen, and which had been endorsed by Drayson, to whom it had been handed by Cohen.

Mr. Wilkinson then asked leave to cross-examine Drayson.

Kotzé, J.: As the witness has given certain answers which are adverse to the interests of the prisoner Cohen, I will allow him to be cross-examined, but only with regard to those answers, and no further. The matter is entirely in the discretion of the Presiding Judge, and I think it will be right and proper that an opportunity be given of cross-examining the witness upon what he has said.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Honourable Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.) and the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

ADMISSIONS. { 1903. Dec. 12th.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C., moved for the admission of Charles Herman Maasdorp as an attorney and notary.

Application granted and oath administered.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for the admission of Harold Wm. Carolin as an attorney and notary.

Application granted, and oath administered.

Mr. Upington moved for the admission of Arthur Fincham Chaplin as an attorney and notary.

Application granted, oath to be taken before the Resident Magistrate of East London.

Mr. C. W. de Villiers moved for the admission of Arthur Wm. Monkhouse Norton as a conveyancer.

Application granted, oath to be taken before the Resident Magistrate of East London.

Mr. Buchanan moved for the admission of Rufus George Robert MacLeod as a conveyancer.

Application granted, and oath administered.

Mr. Benjamin moved for the admission of George Wm. Dillman as a conveyancer.

Application granted, and oath administered.

Mr. Benjamin moved for the admission of Louis Arthur Mybergh as a conveyancer.

Application granted, and oath administered.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C., moved for the admission of George Frederick Charles Williams as a conveyancer.

Application granted, and oath administered.

PROVISIONAL ROLL.

DOUGLAS AND DOUGLAS V. GLASS. { 1903. Dec. 12th. „ 17th.

Provisional order of sequestration —Return of nulla bona—Act of insolvency.

On the return day of a provisional order of sequestration a creditor of the defendant opposed the granting of a final order on the ground that the plaintiff was not a creditor. The plaintiff was a judgment creditor but the defence was that the judgment had been obtained by fraud and collusion.

Held, that until the judgment was set aside it must be held to be valid, and thatas no proceedings had been taken to set it aside the plaintiff should be regarded as a lawful creditor.

Mr. Buchanan moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent, provisional order having been granted on the 14th October. It appeared that the defendant, Herbert Wm. Glass, had failed to satisfy a judgment of the Resident Magistrate of Maclear, given in favour of the petitioning creditors for £250.

Mr. Searle, K.C., on behalf of Francis Bros., opposed the application. He read the affidavit of Albert Wm. Francis, who stated that the debtor was indebted to his firm in the sum of £2,500. Francis Bros.' position was that the judgment was improperly obtained.

De Villiers, C.J., intimated that the case could not be gone into that day. The Court would be prepared to hear it on Thursday next.

Postea (December 17):

Mr. Buchanan stated that when the messenger sought to levy execution, the defendant said he had no money or property with which to satisfy the debt, nor could any goods or property be found by the said messenger. In consequence of the failure of the defendant to satisfy the said judgment, he had committed an act of insolvency.

Mr. Searle, K.C., said he appeared for the firm of Francis Bros., who were apparently the largest creditors of the defendant, and to whom, it appeared, Glass had made over practically the greater part of his property, on condition that they should pay all his debts, though this debt of the plaintiffs was not named at that time. Counsel read the affidavit of Albert W. Francis, which was to the effect that he was a member of the firm of Francis Bros., who were general merchants in the district of Maclear. They had had dealings with Glass, and on the 11th August last he owed them £2,500 more or less, as shown in the deed of sale to be hereafter referred to. In August last they were approached by the said Glass, with a view of raising a further sum of money. On that date a writ had been issued against Glass by one McKenzie for £400. As Glass was heavily indebted to deponent's firm, they made him an offer to purchase certain properties, both movables and immovables, belonging to him, and after satisfying his debts, to hand over any balance that there might be in their possession. On the 12th August a deed of sale was prepared and signed by the firm and the said Glass to give effect to this arrangement. After the deed had been signed, they received an application for the sum of £250, which would become due and payable to the plaintiffs, in terms of a certain agreement entered into between Douglas and Douglas and the debtor on the 28th May, 1903. Francis Bros. absolutely declined to have anything to do with that debt. Glass said that the money had not become due to the plaintiffs. Counsel explained that the agreement between the plaintiffs and the debtor was to the effect that a certain sum should be paid to Douglas in the event of a certain property being sold.

[De Villiers, C.J. (interposing): Has there been an act of insolvency? If there has been, what is the use of reading the affidavits?]

We say not. The question is whether the debt on which this suit was brought was really due.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Have they got judgment for the amount?]

Yes, he confessed judgment. We say there really was practically collusion between Glass and the petitioning creditors.

[De Villiers, C.J.: We must assume that the judgment was properly given.]

With great submission, not if we can prove that the return was not a proper one.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Now, upon the question of the debt; so long as that judgment stands, the debt stands.]

Then we may have to take action to set aside the judgment. We have had no opportunity up to the present.

[De Villiers, C.J.: The judgment stands, and somebady must first set it aside.]

The question is whether judgment was properly obtained, and whether there was a return of nulla bona. The object of our opposing the sequestration is this, that we have entered into this agreement to pay all the debts of Glass that we know of, and we have already paid debts of Glass amounting to several hundreds of pounds.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Were the plaintiffs parties to that arrangement?]

No, but it is common cause that we took over the property and agreed to pay the debts.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Are you prepared to give up your rights under that agreement?]

No, but we are quite willing to let the agreement go through and to pay all Glass's debts. We have already paid some of them.

Mr. Searle said he would proceed with the reading of the affidavits. The deponent, Francis, went on to say that with regard to the plaintiff's debt the defendant took up the position that no sale had taken place, and, therefore, the claim of Douglas could not have accrued. Deponent had reason to believe that the statement was a correct one. Interviews took place between deponent's firm and the plaintiffs in regard to his debt, but no arrangement was come to. When the deponent's firm applied for the transfer of the property of Glass into their name, defendant refused to sign the papers. Deponent's firm had paid £480 upon the writ issued against Glass at the instance of MacKenzie. Sales of Glass's property took place, at which the Douglass's were present. Deponent was satisfied that the petition was being presented with the connivance of the defendant. He now thought he could get more for his farms. Counsel also read affidavits by Hugh Taylor, Messenger of the Court of the R.M., at Maclear, and others. The Messenger, in his affidavit, said that Glass confessed judgment. Immediately on completion of the hearing, plaintiff's attorney took up the writ and handed it to deponent. He informed deponent that he would seek Glass, and that he could make the demand upon him. Deponent saw Glass who said that he had nothing, and deponent then made the usual return. Afterwards the attorneys of Francis Bros., pointed out certain property as belonging to the defendant, and on the Magistrate's advice he telegraphed asking where it was situated? Nothing was heard until a few days afterwards, when the Magistrate showed him a letter from the debtor, in which he said that the property belonged to his father-in-law, Mr. Stephenson. Counsel urged that the Messenger had not made diligent inquiry to find out whether the debtor had property, and for that reason the return was not a proper one, and the provisional order should therefore be discharged.

Mr. Buchanan (for petitioners): This raises quite a new point. This offer is now made for the first time, and I am not instructed either to accept it or to refuse it.

[De Villiers, C.J.: The affidavits do not touch the point; if a return of nulla bona has been made we cannot go behind that.]

Surely it is open to us to show that the return was incorrect. It does not follow that a man is insolvent because he does not point out sufficient property to the messenger to satisfy the writ. Here Glass has a considerable amount of landed property. The same attorney was acting for Glass and for us; but now he tries to put us off. Surely this affords a strong presumption of collusion. The messenger ought to have made enquiry whether the property pointed out belonged to Glass or not. The messenger's own affidavit shows that he did not perform the duty imposed upon him by Section 4 of the Insolvent Ordinance. Only a few months before Glass confessed this debt, he wrote denying it. We are not bound to assume that the messenger's return is correct.

[De Villiers, C.J.: I think we are. Was there any sentence of a competent Court?]

Yes.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Did he point out sufficient property to satisfy the writ?]

He was not asked to do so. It was the duty of the messenger to enquire and to look after the property. He is bound to make diligent enquiries, and his own affidavit shows that he did not do this; in fact, it contradicts the terms of his return.

De Villiers, C.J.: If there have been fraud and collusion between the plaintiff and the defendant, any judgment which the Court may now give may still be set aside upon proof of such fraud and collusion. The question now to be decided is whether there has been an act of insolvency on the part of the defendant. The first objection raised is that the plaintiff was really no creditor at all. In my opinion, the Court is bound to assume that the plaintiff is a creditor. There can be no better proof of a debt than a judgment of the Magistrates' Court, or of this Court, and there stands on record the judgment of the Magistrates' Court for the plaintiff against the defendant. Until that judgment is set aside, we assume that it is a valid judgment. The plaintiff must, therefore, be assumed to be a creditor of the defendant. The act of insolvency relied upon is a return of nulla bona. I have the original return before me by Taylor, the Messenger of the Magistrates' Court: "On the 29th September, 1903, I made demand on the defendant, personally for payment of this sum and costs, but was informed that he had no money to pay with or property to realise, either in this district or elsewhere, and I certify that I made diligent and careful inquiries, and could not find any property to attach to pay the whole or any part of this judgment and costs." If the defendant himself had raised this objection, which is now raised by some creditors, it is quite clear that he would have failed because in every respect the terms of the Insolvent Ordinance have been complied with. One of the acts of insolvency is: "If the debtor, having against him a sentence of any competent Court being thereunto required, shall not satisfy the same or shall not point out to the officer charged with the execution thereof sufficient disposable property to satisfy the same, if it shall appear from the return made by such officer on his affidavit that he has not found sufficient disposable property to satisfy such sentence." Well, there is that return that he has not found it He now does state in an affidavit of his, made subsequently, not forming any part of that return by which alone the Court should be guided, that there appeared to be a desire on the part of the plaintiff that such return should be made. But, how does that affect the question of whether the return was properly made or not? The defendant's failure, under the circumstances, to satisfy the judgment was an act of insolvency upon which the estate was properly sequestrated. The provisional order must be made final, but as an offer has been made by the opposing creditors to pay the plaintiff's claim, the final order might be delayed for that purpose.

Mr. Searle: I was instructed, if the Court was against me, to make that offer. I have no instruction in the matter of costs.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Well, then, that may be considered, and then, of course, the Court might stay its hand, because the petitioner can have no interest beyond getting his debt.]

Mr. Buchanan: The attorneys of the plaintiffs are willing to consent to that upon payment of £250 in full, and, of course, all their costs.

Mr. Searle: I have no instructions as regards costs, but I suppose it will be better for me to take that upon myself.

De Villiers, C.J.: The Court will order that the provisional order be made final on the 12th January, 1904, unless the opposing creditor shall before that day pay to the plaintiffs the amount of the debt owing to the plaintiffs and their costs, including costs of this action, in which case the provisional order shall be discharged.

[Applicant's Attorneys: Syfret, Godlinton and Low; Respondent's Attorney: F. H. B. Moore.]

LITHMAN, LANDSBERG AND CO. v. SIERADZKI.

Mr. Simpson moved for provisional sentence on a certain promissory note for the sum of £66 9s. 9d. The note became due on November 7,

Order granted,

SMITH AND HOLDEN V. FOX.

Mr. Greer moved for a decree of civil imprisonment against the defendant on an unsatisfied judgment of the Supreme Court for the sum of £33 16s. 11d., with interest and taxed costs.

Order granted.

BOSMAN, POWIS AND CO. V. WHYTE.

Mr. M. Bisset moved for provisional sentence on the sum of £53 13s., with interest from September, 1903, and costs. The amount became due under a bill of exchange, which was drawn on "W. H. Whyte," but the acceptance was signed "E. A. Whyte," and counsel was informed that they were one and the same person.

Order granted.

SPILHAUS AND CO. V. SALKWODIEN.

Mr. Close moved for a writ of civil imprisonment against the defendant upon an unsatisfied judgment of this Court.

Defendant did not appear.

Order granted.

FLETCHER'S WHOLESALE AND OTHERS V. GORDON. { 1903. Dec. 12th.

Mr. Struben moved for the provisional order for the sequestration of the defendant's estate to be made final.

Order granted.

ROWLAND HILL AND CO. V. KRYNAUW.

Mr. Struben moved for provisional sentence on eight separate promissory notes, amounting in all to £520 17s. 2d., less £243 9s. 2d. paid on account, and interest from the respective due dates at the rate of 6 per cent., less £51 11s. 10d. paid, and also for interest at the rate of 2 per cent. to be paid in addition in accordance with an agreement between the parties.

Order granted as prayed.

HOFFMAN V. BLACK.

Mr. Benjamin moved for a final order of sequestration of the defendant's estate. The provisional order was granted on the 19th November, 1903. The ground on which the provisional order was granted was that an agreement to submit to a deed of inspection had been broken.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C., for the defendant, opposed the application on the ground that his client had committed no act of insolvency, and the necessary requirements of the Act of 1884 had not been fulfilled. If the affidavits of the plaintiff were to be taken as new matter the defendant would require more time than Thursday to answer them, and if the right course, which he submitted was to exclude them altogether, was not acceded to, he would apply for a postponement until the 1st February next.

Mr. Benjamin said that the objection which the plaintiff had to the matter standing over was that the business of the defendant consisted of an extensive consignment of toys, which it was essential that the trustee should have power to dispose of at Christmas.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Couldn't the Court appoint a curator?]

Mr. Benjamin: Yes, my lord. Mr Gibson is at present acting as curator.

Mr. Schreiner suggested that Mr. E. R. Syfret's name should be coupled with Mr. Gibson's in order to make a fair representation to both parties.

[De Villiers, C.J.: For the purpose of selling toys surely one curator would be sufficient.]

Mr Schreiner: It is a large estate, my lord; the assets run into £5,000 or £6,000, and the debts amount to £4,000 or £5,000.

Mr. Benjamin pointed out that Mr. Gibson was already acquainted with the business.

De Villiers, C.J.: This case will stand over until next term. In the meanwhile, the estate should be realised for the benefit of all concerned, and as Mr. Gibson has already been appointed by the Master as curator bonis, the Court will authorise him to continue the business on behalf of the creditors. If the appointment had not already been made, the Court might have appointed two curators, but, as the appointment has been made, the person so appointed should realise the estate, and Mr. Gibson will therefore be authorised in the interval to continue the business.

TRUTER V. MCMULLEN.

Mr. M. Bisset moved for provisional sentence for £200 on a promissory note, together with interest and costs.

Order granted.

LITHMAN, LANDSBERG AND OTHERS V. GOLDSTEIN, CORKLAND AND CO.

Mr. Benjamin moved for the final adjudication of the defendants' estate as insolvent.

Order granted.

ADSHADE V. FREDERICKS.

Mr. C. W. de Villiers moved for provisional sentence for £2 1s., together with costs, amounting to £3 10s. 7d., on an unsatisfied judgment of the Resident Magistrate's Court at Swellendam, and also for the landed property set out in the summons to be declared executable.

Order granted, execution to be confined to one of the properties specified in the summons.

LANDSBERG V. WUSNACH.

Mr. Pyemont moved for provisional sentence for £108, interest due for the eighteen months, 1st January, 1902, to 30th June, 1903, at the rate of 6 per cent. upon the capital sum of £1,200 sterling, on a mortgage bond, dated 26th November, 1898.

Order granted.

ROBERTSON AND CO. V. HENDRICKS BROS.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for judgment on a promissory note for £160 5s. 3d., due on the 15th November, with interest and costs.

Order granted.

CAPE MARINE SUBURBS V. STAPLES.

Mr. Benjamin moved for provisional sentence for £307 10s. upon certain conditions of sale, plaintiff tendering transfer of the property. The first instalment had been paid, but upon subsequent instalments the defendant was in default, and by reason of that, the full purchase amount had become due, and also by reason of the absence of surety and a mortgage bond.

Defendant said he would like three months' time to be allowed to him to pay the second instalment. The property cost £415, and he had paid £110. He thought he should be able to pay the balance in that time.

Provisional sentence granted, with stay of execution for a period of three months.

BARTRAN V. BURRILL AND ANOTHER.

Mr. Gardiner moved for a decree of civil imprisonment upon a judgment of this Court for £190 19s. A return of nulla bona had been made.

Mr. Upington, for the defendant Charles S. Burrill, said he was instructed to apply for a postponement, to enable the defendant to file an affidavit. The defendant, who was at present in Port Elizabeth, was practically without means, and counsel understood that he would be prepared to offer £2 a month.

[De Villiers, C.J.: What is the amount of the debt?]

Mr. Upington: About £200, I believe.

Mr. Gardiner said that he could not consent to the application by his learned friend, as the defendant had had ample time in which to prepare his affidavit.

De Villiers, C.J., said that if the Court subsequently decided to order the defendant to pay £2 a month, it would be upon the plaintiff to pay costs of the postponement.

Mr. Gardiner said he would leave the matter in the hands of the Court.

De Villiers, C.J.: According to the new rules, no case should be heard on the 12th December or the 12th January, unless in the opinion of the presiding judge it would prejudice either party if the case were not so heard. The Court is of opinion that it will not be to the prejudice of either party to postpone the case until the first day of term.

MCKENZIE AND CO., LTD., V. STEENSMA.

Mr. De Waal moved for provisional sentence for the sum of £109 1s. 4d. on a certain mortgage bond which had become due and payable, and by reason of non-payment of interest, and for interest at the rate of 7 per cent., and that the property should be declared executable.

Order granted.

BOYES AND BROWN V. FOURIE.

Mr. Sutton moved for provisional sentence for the sum of £50 on a certain note for value received, with interest at the rate of 6 per cent.

Order granted.

ESTATE HUDSON V. ABDOELA DOLLIE.

Mr. Upington moved for provisional sentence on certain five mortgage bonds, for the sums of £300, £50, £350, £600, and £50, with interest at the rate of 7 per cent., and that the property be declared executable.

Order granted.

ESTATE HUDSON V. PAGE.

Mr. C. de Villiers moved for provisional sentence for the sum of £400 on a certain mortgage bond, with interest at the rate of 7 per cent., and that the property be declared executable. The bond had become due by reason of non-payment of interest.

Order granted.

GINSBERG V. DAVIES AND CO.

Mr. Alexander moved in the first case for provisional sentence for the sum of £130, being rent on a certain lease signed by the defendant, and in the second case to make absolute the rule nisi calling upon the respondents to show cause that day why they should not be restrained from disposing of any stock on the plaintiff's premises, pending an action to be brought to recover the arrear rent.

Orders granted.

D.C., OUDTSHOORN V. ESTATE APPEL.

Mr. M. Bisset moved for provisional judgment on an unsatisfied judgment of the R.M. of Oudtshoorn, for the sums of £20 16s. 9d. and £2 11s. 10d., with costs, and that certain property should be declared executable.

Order granted.

MORSER AND CO. V. AWTY.

Mr. Benjamin moved for provisional sentence on certain promissory notes for the sums of £18 12s. 8d. and £25, with interest.

Order granted.

HOFMEYR V. IZAAKS.

Mr. De Waal moved for provisional sentence for the sum of £375 on a certain mortgage bond, dated January 19, 1902, together with interest at 6 per cent. on £500, the amount of the bond, and that the property should be declared executable. The bond became due and payable by virtue of non-payment of rent.

Order granted.

WIENER AND CO. AND OTHERS V. ALLAN AND CO.

Mr. Benjamin moved for a final order of sequestion against de defendants' estate. The provisional order was granted on the 5th December.

Order granted.

BETHE AND VON EHREN V. DREYER AND SUSMAN.

Mr. Upington moved for the discharge of a provisional order of sequestration.

Order granted.

SCOTT V. CHIAT.

Mr. De Waal moved for provisional order for the sum of £6 17s. 6d., which became due under certain conditions of sale, with interest at the rate of 6 per cent.

Order granted.

BOSMAN, POWIS AND CO. V. LATEGAN.

Mr. De Waal moved for provisional sentence on three promissory notes, amounting in all to £782 17s. 11d., less £213 17s. 6d. paid before issue of summons, and £350 paid thereafter, with interest on the various sums from the due dates.

Order granted.

PURCELL, YALLOP AND EVERETT V. NILSEN.

Mr. Upington moved for a decree of civil imprisonment upon an unsatisfied judgment of this Court for £97 1s. 1d., together with the sum of £7 6s. 9d., costs.

Defendant said he should be prepared to pay £3 a month.

Mr. Upington said he would accept the offer.

Decree granted, with costs, to be suspended pending payment of £3 a month, first payment to be made on January 1.

PURCELL, YALLOP AND EVERETT V GOODMAN.

Mr. Upington moved for a decree of civil imprisonment for £74 7s., together with £9 costs.

Defendant did not appear.

Decree granted with costs.

GREEN AND CO., LTD, V. SHANAHAN.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved for the final sequestration of the defendant's estate.

Order granted.

JAGGER AND CO. V. SCHAPIRO AND GOODMAN.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers applied for the provisional order for the sequestration of the defendants' estate to be discharged, a settlement having been arrived at between the parties.

Application granted.

GARLICK AND OTHERS V. RABINOWITZ AND ANOTHER.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved for the final sequestration of the defendants' estate.

Order granted.

DUNDAS V. HYMAN COHEN.

Mr. Smith moved for provisional sentence for £1,350 on a mortgage bond, with interest thereon, the bond having become payable after three months' notice, and also for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable.

Order granted.

S.A. FIRE CO. (IN LIQUIDATION) V. BOARD OF EXECUTORS. { 1903. Dec. 12th. „ 17th. „ 18th.

Provisional sentence — Account stated.

Provisional sentence granted on account which plaintiff had objected to as incorrect and which defendant had thereupon withdrawn. Subsequently in an action defendant had pleaded that this account was true and correct and the Court had found that it was so.

Mr. M. de Villiers moved for provisional sentence for £4,336 19s. 2d., being the amount of the balance of account stated and rendered to the defendants by the plaintiff (C. C. de Villiers) in his capacity as surviving liquidator of the life branch in liquidation of the South African Fire and Life Assurance Co., in respect of certain funds which were in the hands and under the administration of the defendants.

The Chief Justice: Does this arise out of the previous case?

Mr. M. de Villiers: Yes, my lord.

Mr. Searle, K.C. (for the defendants) said that they had had certain affidavits prepared, which they proposed to read.

Mr. M. de Villiers submitted that no affidavits should be read. He believed the defendants' plea would be res judicata. The plaintiff likewise relied upon res judicata, and he therefore submitted that it was unnecessary to hear any affidavits.

[De Villiers, C.J., said that the matter would have to stand over.]

Mr. M. de Villiers said that a very large amount was involved, and interest was running.

[De Villiers, C.J.: I think the Board of Executors will be able to pay it.]

Mr. M. de Villiers: At present they refuse to do so.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Yes, but ultimately, if they are ordered to pay, they will be able to pay. It is impossible to take the case now.]

Mr. M. de Villiers asked if the Court would fix a day for the hearing.

[De Villiers, C.J.: I think we shall be able to take it on Thursday.]

Postea (December 17th).

Mr. De Villiers said that when the matter was last before the Court, his learned friend (Mr. Searle) proceeded to read some affidavits, to which he objected, and he submitted that his learned friend should intimate what his defence was, in order that the Court might be put in a position to judge whether the objections counsel would raise were valid or not.

Mr. Searle said he would read affidavits showing, before the action was brought, that the account was withdrawn.

Mr. De Villiers said he did not know whether that could be pleaded. The whole of the proceedings went on the supposition that the only question before the Court was whether, for the period of three years, interest should be paid, and whether after that the account should be stated half-yearly or not.

Mr. Searle read the affidavits of Johannes Roos, secretary of the respondent Board, which set forth that the summons had been served on him on the 18th September last, calling on him to pay £4,336 15s. 9d., which it was alleged the Board of Executors owed by virtue of a certain account. Deponent attached minutes of a meeting held on the 18th September, 1896, at which the administering liquidator, the late Mr. Hofmeyr, was present, when it was resolved to give notice that interest would not be allowed after 31st December, 1896. On the 18th September, 1903, the plaintiff claimed interest at the rate of 4 per cent. on the amount in the hands of the Board. Before issue of summons, the defendants' attorneys addressed a letter to the plaintiffs' attorneys, stating that the offer of £4,336 15s. 9d. was withdrawn, and the capital only was tendered. On the 26th September, the plaintiffs' attorneys were tendered a cheque for £3,817 9s. 1d., which was refused. Certain correspondence between the respective attorneys was then read, in which it appeared that the defendants tendered the sum of £4,336 on July 18, and they claimed the right to withdraw it when it was refused. The Board of Executors was not prepared to pay the interest claimed. Counsel said that thereafter judgment was given for the Board of Executors, with costs. The account now sued on had already been before the Court, the Court holding that the agreement come to between Mr. J. H. Hofmeyr that no interest was to be paid was a valid agreement. Since judgment had been given, the defendant Board sent a cheque to the plaintiff for the amount of the capital without interest, but this was refused. An affidavit was read from Mr. Buissinne stating that the offer of payment of £3,817 9s. 1d. was verbally admitted by plaintiffs' attorney to be a legal tender.

Mr. M. de Villiers read the affidavit of Charles Christian de Villiers, which set out that as a result of an action instituted by him to amend certain accounts rendered by the defendant, bringing up interest for the years 1897, 1898, and 1899 (the defendant having admitted his liability to pay interest from 1st January, 1900, to 30th June, 1903), the defendant rendered a true and correct account to the 30th June, 1903, and that the balance on hand then was £4,336 15s. 9d. When judgment was given for the defendant with costs, the deponent interpreted it to mean that the accounts rendered by the defendant were true and correct, and that the Court refused deponents' claim to have such accounts amended or debated. He pointed out that no plea of tender was placed on record by the defendant, nor was any evidence led to prove any tender beyond the admission of the amount in the plea. He denied most emphatically that he concurred in the agreement made by the administering liquidator with the defendant board on the 18th September, 1896, deponent having been in Europe at the time. Counsel then read a letter from the plaintiff to the defendant Board, abiding by the judgment of the Supreme Court, and offering, as they had refused to do so, to take over further payments of premiums, and pointing out that the action of the Board appeared not to be in conformity with the agreement entered into between them and the late Mr. Hofmeyr. Plaintiff was desirous of avoiding further disputes, and he would be glad to be informed whether the Board intended continuing the administration under the terms, and with payment of the interest allowed in the accounts since January 1, 1900. He was willing to allow the funds of the life branch to remain with the Board under those terms, the agreement to that effect to terminate upon three months' notice on either side. In reply, the defendant's attorneys wrote on the 4th December that it was correct that the Board refused to accept any further premiums. There was no intention of continuing the administration, and the Board had no desire to keep the fund one moment longer than was necessary, nor had they any intention of paying any interest. They enclosed a cheque for £3,686 15s. 11d., being the amount tendered on the 18th September, 1903, a tender which he agreed in person to the writer to admit as a legal tender, less the taxed costs amounting as per enclosed bill, which was taxed on the 3rd December, 1903, to £130 13s. 2d. The cheque was returned by plaintiff's attorneys on the 8th December, and the defendant's attention was drawn to paragraphs 12 and 13 of the plea.

Mr. Searle, K.C. (for defendant): In this case we ask for judgment on an account stated. The account was not accepted, and was withdrawn. In September summons was issued, asking for an account from January 1st, 1897, to June 1st, 1903. The Court did not give judgment in terms of any tender. (See 13, C.T.R., 1019.) I submit that the form of this action is incorrect: the plaintiffs might sue on a judgment, but not on an account which has been withdrawn.

Mr. M. de Villiers (for plaintiffs): The defendant's procedure in this case is most dangerous. He varies his defence, and then reverts to his original defence. We say that this matter is res judicata, and that now it is simply a question of interpreting the judgment. (See paragraph 15 of the declaration. The only defence was that a true and correct account had been rendered. We admit the account, as far as it goes, but we ask for some additional interest. The pleadings, to which we must adhere, disclose no tender. The only point argued was that we claimed interest as a matter of legal right, while they held that it was a matter of grace. In their affidavit the Board say that they agreed to let us have interest: now they refuse to let us have it, and want practically to re-open the case.

Mr. Searle in reply.

De Villiers, C.J., intimated that his brother Maasdorp would like to consult Mr. Justice Kotze before giving judgment. He simply wanted to hear from him whether he concurred as to the facts.

Postea (December 18):

Maasdorp, J.: The plaintiff prays for provisional sentence against the defendant for the sum of £4,336 15s. 9d., upon an account rendered and signed as true and correct by the defendant on the 30th June, 1903. The account referred to is an account of the funds of the life branch in liquidation of the South African Fire and Life Assurance Company in the hands of the defendant on the 30th June, 1903, which was rendered to the plaintiff in his capacity as liquidator of the life branch. The defendant admits that he rendered the account in question, but says that upon the plaintiff refusing to accept the account as correct, and to accept a settlement upon the basis of that account, the account was withdrawn. Upon that ground he opposes the granting of provisional sentence. If that were all that passed between the parties the defendant may be quite within his rights to withdraw a disputed account, and the plaintiff may be barred from suing for provisional sentence upon an account, which he had disputed after its withdrawal by the defendant. It appears, however that the plaintiff sued the defendant for an account in an action, which has been already decided by this Court. In that action the plaintiff stated in his declaration that the account now in question was rendered by the defendant, but that it was insufficient and incomplete, in that it did not bring up certain interest due upon the funds to the plaintiff. The defendant in his plea to that declaration alleged that the account rendered by him was a true and correct account to the 30th June, 1903, including interest allowed the Board after the 1st January, 1900, and that the balance in hand on the 30th June, 1903, was £4,336 15s. 9d. As a matter of course, the plaintiff in that case was entitled to a true and correct account of the administration of his funds by the defendant, and the only issue was with respect to the correctness of his account. If it had appeared to the Court that the account upon which he relied in his plea, as rendered before action brought was incorrect, an amended account would have been ordered. But the Court gave judgment for the defendant upon the ground that he had already rendered a proper account, which the parties might debate in detail if they desired. In that account the defendant admitted that he was liable to the plaintiff for interest on the funds in hand after 1899, and in opposing provisional sentence now he disputes, as appears from the affidavits, his liability for such interest. If at the trial the plaintiff had claimed judgment for the amount appearing due upon the account which the defendant in his plea alleged to be true and correct, he would, in my opinion, have been entitled to it.

The account in question is signed by Roos and Hoffman, on behalf of the Board of Executors, but it was contended that as it was withdrawn provisional sentence ought not now to be granted upon it, whatever other right of action the plaintiff may have. It seems to me, however, that the account was again revived by the defendant's plea in the former action. Mr. Searle, moreover, stated that there was no wish on the part of the defendant to insist upon any technicality, and that the object of the parties was to ascertain whether the Court intended when judgment was given in the case, to hold that the account of the defendant must be taken as true and correct. Judgment will be given as prayed with costs.

Mr. M. de Villiers (for the plaintiff) applied for costs from the time the defendants refused to give up the money, i.e., the 30th June last.

Maasdorp, J.: The usual judgment will be given for the amount claimed, with interest a tempore morae.

[Plaintiff's Attorneys: Van der Byl and Van der Horst; Defendant's Attorneys: Van Zyl and Buissinné.]

ESTATE LANDSBERG V. RAHINAN AND ANOTHER.

Mr. Benjamin moved for provisional sentence for £400 on a mortgage bond due by reason of non-payment of interest, and for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable.

Order granted.

CHAPLIN V. DEECKER.

Mr. Buchanan moved for provisional sentence for £100 on a promissory note signed by the defendant to and in favour of the plaintiff. Defendant had, in a letter to plaintiff, offered to pay instalments of £5 a month.

Order granted.

MARAIS V. ROSSOUW.

Mr. Benjamin moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond due by reason of non-payment of interest, and for interest from the 10th March, 1902.

Order granted.

BRUYNS V. ACHMATT AND ANOTHER.

Mr. Upington moved for a decree of civil imprisonment upon an unsatisfied judgment of this Court for £28 3s. 9d., together with £7 10s. 6d. costs. Counsel put in a certified copy of judgment and return of nulla bona.

Mr. Benjamin said he appeared for the first-named defendant, and was instructed to offer £3 a month from the 1st January. The second-named defendant, he believed, had gone to India. An arrangement was entered into between the first-named defendant, who was now in court, and the plaintiff, by which he was to pay £10 down and £5 a month afterwards, payable on the second day of each month. The instalment which fell due on the 2nd December was not paid. A letter was sent to the plaintiff's attorney by the defendants' attorney, saying that the money would be paid on the 7th inst. That, however, was not done, and the plaintiff thereupon took out the summons.

Mr. Upington said plaintiff's information was that the defendant was possessed of considerable property.

Mr. Benjamin said the properties were bonded, and the man owed other debts.

The first-named defendant said he offered £10 a month to the plaintiff. He paid £10 in November. He was to pay £5 on the 1st December, but he could not get the money, and he promised to make the payment on the 8th. He raised the money on the 8th, and paid it to his attorney. He had not then received a summons. He could afford to pay £3 a month. He had other creditors, to whom he owed money —£63 to one firm, £58 to another, £163 to a third. Lawrence and Co. had taken out judgment against him. The £5 he had handed to his attorney had been absorbed by costs.

Cross-examined by Mr. Upington: He owned a landed property in Cape Town, and he had an interest in property at Wynberg, Lakeside, and Claremont. He and his partners received about £30 to £35 a month in the way of rent.

Decree granted, with costs, to be suspended pending payment of £5 per month until the debt and costs be paid, first payment to be made on the 1st January.

KANNEMEYER V. CHETTY BROS.

Mr. Buchanan moved for provisional sentence for the sum of £600, less £69

18s. 6d., rent from July 1, 1903), which was due and payable on the first day of each successive month, and for the cancellation of the lease, in which there was a clause stipulating that if the rent was not paid within seven days of the date when it became payable, the lessor had the right to take over occupation.

Order granted.

FISHER V. ADRIAANSE.

Mr. Upington asked for a decree of civil imprisonment against the defendant, on an unsatisfied judgment of the Supreme Court for the sum of £52, together with interest and costs.

The defendant appeared in person, and said that he was prepared to pay £3 per month.

Mr. Upington: I am instructed that on the 17th November he made an offer of £5 per month.

The Chief Justice: Is that so?

Defendant: That is so. The plaintiff declined to take it.

Why didn't you repeat the offer?—I am not in the same circumstances at the present moment, my lord. I have other liabilities to meet by the end of the year, and £3 per month is as much as I am able to pay.

Mr. Upington: I think that the defendant should go into the box and say so.

The defendant then entered the witness-box, and stated that he had no property whatever. He was a missionary, attached to the African Methodist Episcopal Church, and had no means. He had to live on collections.

Mr. Upington: You purchased an erf, and you have erected a building on that erf worth £600?—The building is not at all worth £600. It is a two-roomed house, and the people living in it pay no rent. At the present moment, the conditions of things are very bad. The collections have fallen off. The £50 was for money that was lent to me. If things go better, I may be able at the end of January to offer a little more.

The Chief Justice said that the Court was satisfied that the defendant had no means, and there would be no order.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.), the Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN, and the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

REX V. DU PLESSIS. { 1903. Dec. 14th.

Court of appeal in criminal cases —Special entry—Question reserved—Misdirection of Judge —Verdict of Jury.

Although it is a salutary practice on the part of judges presiding at criminal trials, where witnesses give evidence adverse to the accused and differing from their evidence given at the preparatory examination, to point out the danger of convicting on such adverse evidence, the omission to do so does not constitute a misdirection or illegality, if the discrepancy was brought to the notice of the jury.

After two witnesses had given such adverse evidence differing from their previous evidence the counsel for the accused asked the judge whether he would be allowed to call a Mrs. B. to contradict the statement of the two witnesses that she had intimidated them before they gave their evidence at the preparatory examination, to which the Judge assented. Thereupon counsel for the prosecution asked whether, in such case, he would be allowed to call rebutting evidence, to which the Judge also assented. The counsel for the accused accordingly did not call Mrs. B., but after a verdict of guilty he raised the question for the consideration of the Court of Appeal whether judgment should not be arrested on the ground that the judge's ruling was wrong.

Held, that as Mrs. B. was not produced as a witness the judge's alleged ruling as to what he would do in case she should be examined could not be called in question.

This was an appeal under the terms of the Act 35 of 1896, section 32. In this case the accused had been charged with the crime of murder and convicted, and an application was then made by his counsel under section 34 of the same Act, which enacted that in case any question of law should arise it should be lawful for the Court to reserve for the consideration of the Court of Appeal such point, etc. Application was made to the Court for an arrest of judgment under that section until such time as the Supreme Court should have decided upon certain points to be reserved for the consideration of that Court, and that meanwhile it should be ordered that the prisoner should be detained in the prison at Graham's Town until the Supreme Court should have determined thereon. The Court, however, refused to grant this application.

The points reserved were:

(1.) That inasmuch as the value of an estate is to be ascertained from the liquidation and distribution account, or from the evidence of some person having the administration of the estate and not from the mere inventory of the estate; inasmuch as there was no evidence produced to show that the estate was solvent; inasmuch as the terms of the mutual will of the accused and his wife should have been taken into account; and inasmuch as the burden of proving motive rests upon the prosecution, the presiding judge, after counsel for the defence had pointed out that there was no such evidence mis-directed the jury in saying, "Now, I shall deal with the motive. He (the accused) obtained through her death control of a large sum of money. The sum of money in the inventory was £10,300. There was the insurance policy also. There was to be nothing done in the way of giving security, and he could still retain the money in case of re-marriage."

(2.) That in face of the fact proved at the trial that most material witnesses for the Crown (not including Hazel du Plessis, whom the counsel for the defence carefully excluded from his remarks) had made declarations at the trial strictly at variance with the declarations made at the preliminary examination, or evidence given at the inquest, the presiding judge should have pointed out to the jury the danger of accepting such evidence.

(3.) That the presiding judge misdirected the jury in saying: "The prisoner could either himself or through his assistants have accounted for the disposal of the knife" (meaning thereby one of a set of knives bought at an auction sale by accused, and offered for sale by him in his shop), the prisoner having in his shop knives similar to the knife with which the murder was alleged to have been committed; inasmuch as if the evidence of such assistants was required, they should have been produced by the prosecution.

(4.) That certain two of the witnesses, named Lessing and Jansen, gave evidence at the trial directly in conflict with their evidence given at the preliminary examination, and stated that such variance was due to intimidation on the part of a certain Mrs. Botha, counsel for the defence (in consequence of certain remarks made by the presiding judge), before calling the said Mrs. Botha as a witness, to contradict such statements, inquired from the presiding judge, whether if he called her as a witness the prosecution would be entitled to call rebutting evidence, the presiding judge held that he would be so entitled, and that this holding of the Court was contrary to law.

Mr. M. de Villiers (with him Mr. McGregor) for the appellant; the Solicitor-General for the Crown.

Mr. De Villiers said that Stevens, in his Digest of Appeal Authorities, laid it down that where the judge's notes were defective reference ought to be made to other means of supplying what was defective in the judge's remarks. The judge's notes and remarks were not considered to be part of the record. The record was the official notes taken by the Registrar, and what was deficient in the judge's notes could be supplied from elsewhere

[Buchanan, J.: But that does not apply to the judge's summing up?]

Mr. De Villiers: I am speaking now with regard to the evidence. There are several points in which certainly the judge's notes are incorrect, and where we have other reports——

[De Villiers, C.J.: Have you seen this pamphlet report, because it is sent up as a statement that is fairly representative of what took place?]

The Solicitor-General: I must say that I cannot accept a newspaper report, however accurate it may be generally, as authentic.

[De Villiers, C.J.: The newspaper report is fuller than the judge's notes.]

Mr. De Villiers pointed out certain discrepancies between the judge's notes on the one hand and the newspaper report and his own notes on the other.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Will those discrepancies have any bearing on the question reserved?]

Mr. De Villiers: Yes, my lord. I think so to a very material extent. Counsel said he took a note word for word practically of what the learned judge said, and he found that the newspaper report agreed with it, and that the judge's note was at variance with that record.

[De Villiers, C.J.: You cannot go beyond the judge's notes.]

Mr. De Villiers: I shall ask my learned friend to read the record.

[Buchanan, J.: Surely, we are not going to re-try the case?]

[De Villiers, C.J.: I do not see for the purpose of arguing questions reserved that it is necessary to read the whole of the evidence.]

Mr. De Villiers was referring to the judge's remarks, when De Villiers, C.J., asked whether the inventory was put in during the trial.

Mr. De Villiers: I believe so.

The Solicitor-General said it was conceived by himself that the inventory was put in at the same time as the will. Apparently that view was taken by his learned friend, who appeared for the defence, and it certainly was the view taken by the learned judge who tried the case. As a matter of fact, the inventory was never put in.

[De Villiers, C.J.: But it was produced to the jury.]

The Solicitor-General: It was not produced to the jury.

[De Villiers, C.J.: The learned judge says that the inventory was used to show what the assets were.]

The Solictor-General: It was referred to by me in my address to the jury that the inventory showed the assets to be about £10,000.

[De Villiers, C.J.: But was not it practically put in? It was admissible as evidence.]

The Solicitor-General: Yes, that is so

[De Villiers, C.J.: Surely it was put in.]

The Solicitor-General: I can only state the facts as they are, because your lordship must see, on looking at the exhibits, and on reading also through the judge's notes, that the word inventory is not referred to.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Surely we must treat it as put in, for it was used.]

The Solicitor-General said it would have been the easiest thing in the world to put in the inventory. The man who valued the property, whose name was stated in the inventory as the valuer of the immovable property, himself gave evidence. The prisoner himself also could have given evidence as to whether the assets were or were not of the value of £10,000.

Mr. De Villiers said that this was the first word that he had heard about the inventory not having been put in. He had always understood up to that moment that it was put in. It was represented to the jury that the prisoner was to get £10,000, and besides that there was an insurance policy of about £1,000.

[De Villiers, C.J.: He says, "I further directed their attention to that fact."]

Mr. De Villiers said he did not think it was so much what the judge intended to say, but what the jury must have understood the judge to say. Now, he thought that the newspaper reports were of importance, as showing what the newspaper reporters, as members of the public, understood the judge to say, and his own note was to this effect, that the judge said that, in addition to what appeared on the inventory, there was also the life insurance. The impression therefore produced certainly was that there was the inventory, and there was also the matter of the insurance. Now, what led up to the question of motives? He supposed counsel would not object to his reading from the newspaper report what the learned judge stated.

The Solicitor-General: There is the judge's note. I think once we begin to let in newspaper reports we don't know where we shall end.

Mr. De Villiers: I think my learned friend should allow me to read what he said to the jury.

The Solicitor-General: Now I do object. I know that in one respect it misrepresents me.

[De Villiers, C.J.: I think it far better to confine ourselves to the judge's remarks.]

Mr. De Villiers said he did not think his learend friend would deny that he said the prisoner would reap an immense advantage from the death of his wife.

The Solicitor-General: I do completely deny that. That is the misrepresentation I referred to.

Mr. De Villiers said that there was a presentation of the case in regard to the property that he could not agree to. It was not stated whether the assets were liquidated or unliquidated. He maintained if they had been liquidated, not only the assets, but also the liabilities should have been shown. Then it might have been proved that the estate was virtually insolvent. No idea was given to the jury what was really the estate that remained in the hands of the accused after the death of his wife. He (counsel) urged before the judge that the motive must be of an overpowering character. Here was the motive supplied—viz., by the Solicitor-General—that he said the accused would gain a great advantage by his wife's death. If he did not gain the advantage, then where came the question of motive? There was no motive if he could gain nothing by his wife's death. He contended that under that will the accused would gain no advantage by his wife's decease, and that if anything he would be in a worse position than before. In the first place, by the terms of the will, whereas, before the property was under his entire administration and control as husband, he would become joint heir with the children of one-half. The other half would be his. As regarded the other half, he was really in a worse position, because he became joint heir with the children of the other half. In the first place, it was subject to the limitations of a life usufructuary, there was the life interest of the children, and the Supreme Court would be very vigilant with respect to the rights of minors, and so, if the one-half remained his, it remained under his control with limitations which did not exist before the death of his wife? Where, then, did the advantage come in that would accrue to the husband by the death of his wife? It was said he would have to give no security, but that fact would not cause any advantage to him. The Solicitor-General compared what the accused would get with what his wife would get. The question, however, was what would he get relatively before and after his wife's death? He submitted that the points were not put distinctly to the jury, so that they could properly grasp them. As a matter of fact, there was nothing really now to prove that a single penny would accrue to the prisoner on the death of his wife.

[Buchanan, J.: Those are the arguments to use to the jury, not to this Court.]

Mr. De Villiers: I am now referring to the motive as put before the jury. Continuing, he observed that, as to the second objection, the learned judge said that he was not sure whether he did use the word "danger," but he pointed out the discrepancies, and left it to the jury whether they did or did not believe any particular witness they had heard. Counsel said he was placed in a very difficult position by not being able to read the newspaper reports which he understood were sent in, as showing pretty fairly what was said by the learned judge.

[De Villiers, C.J.: It was stated that the newspaper record fairly represented what took place at the trial. That is signed by the Registrar.]

Mr. De Villiers said that what he objected to in the judge's remarks was this: the judge said to the jury "all the witnesses for the Crown are supposed by the defence to be liars, including Easton." With all due deference to the judge, he said that that was an exaggerated statement. He certainly considered that the majority of the witnesses for the Crown spoke truthfully, and it was only in regard to the two boys that he used the word advisedly, as he did now. There was no doubt that they were liars. He (counsel) thought it was the duty of the judge to point out to the jury the discrepancies in the evidence. He thought the language of the judge was somewhat exaggerated, and even sarcastic.

[De Villiers, C.J.: But supposing the judge believed the two witnesses?]

Mr. De Villiers: Then, in any case, my lord, I would submit that it is for the judge to say to the jury that there is a conflict of evidence, and the jury should be very cautious in accepting the evidence of such witnesses.

[De Villiers, C.J.: He called their attention to the discrepancy. Counsel on both sides mentioned the discrepancy.]

Mr. De Viliers said that the witness Seina gave different evidence at the trial to that given by her at the preliminary examination, and that she admitted that she had altered her story at the instance of her mistress, Miss Truby. Mr. De Villiers called attention to the discrepancies in the evidence given by the boys Lessing and Jansen between the preliminary examination and the trial.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Where does it appear that he accepted their evidence?]

Mr. De Villiers: I can only refer again to the printed record.

[De Villiers, C.J.: It is sent up by the Registrar as a fairly accurate report.]

The Solicitor-General: I did not know that that was so. I do not feel myself justified in saying that the Court should give the same value to a newspaper report as to the judge's notes. If, however, it would help the Court in any way to refer to the newspaper report, I shall not raise any objection.

Mr. De Villiers said that at the preliminary examination the witness Jansen said they were, to identify any per- could not distinguish whether it was a white man or a black man. Then at the trial he said the man was the accused. It was a very cloudy night, and it was a physical impossibility for anyone at the distance where these boys said they were, to identify another person. Counsel pointed out in regard to the evidence of Seina that at one time she said she was in the passage, and at another that she was sitting down in the room. It was admitted by the Crown that prisoner could not have committed the crime if it were done from the inside, and there were a dozen facts which, to his mind, clearly and uncontestably proved that it was not committed from the outside.

[Buchanan, J.: But the facts proved to the minds of the jury that the crime was committed from the outside.]

Mr. De Villiers said that the judge accepted Seina as a credible witness, and directed the weight of his remarks on the side against the prisoner.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Surely there is evidence that the crime was committed from the outside. How could it have been otherwise than from the outside from all the facts of the case?]

Mr. De Villiers: There are about a dozen distinct facts which, to my mind, prove the contrary.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Yes, but after all, it is the jury who have to decide that fact; not counsel for the defence.]

Mr. De Villiers: I say the judge overleapt physical impossibilities. There was evidence that the window was closed.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Was there a button on it.]

Mr. De Villiers: No.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Then what would be easier than to push the window open? Of course, it does not follow that because the crime was committed from the outside, that the prisoner did it.]

Mr. De Villiers: If the window were once opened, it would have remained open. The prisoner was in the room afterwards. That assumes that the prisoner did it.

[De Villiers, C.J.: I am not saying that. There is no evidence that this window was buttoned before the murder was committed.]

Mr. De Villiers: There was evidence that it was closed before the murder, and closed after the murder, and there is not a particle of evidence that it was ever opened. Continuing, counsel contended that the nature of the wound and the force required to have inflicted it, taken in association with the character of the window, were opposed to the theory that the murder was committed from the outside.

De Villiers, C.J., said that the greatest difficulty seemed to him to be the accuracy of aim with the bars in the window, and wire netting a few inches up.

Mr. De Villiers pointed out a change in one of the doctors' evidence as between what he said at the preliminary examination, and inquest, and at the trial. In the first place, this doctor seemed to think that whichever way the wound was inflicted, it was not done through the window.

[Buchanan, J.: These facts were all brought to the notice of the jury by you, I suppose?]

Mr. De Villiers: Yes, my lord.

[Buchanan, J.: You see, this is not the trial of the accused.]

[De Villiers, C.J.: You must first prove the irregularity or illegality, and we will then go into the whole of the evidence.]

Mr. De Villiers contended that the whole ground for saying that this was done from the outside was the discovery of a scratch on a bar of the window three weeks after the crime was committed. That might have been done by anyone before or after the crime.

[De Villiers, C.J.: It is hardly the thing to say that this was the only ground. Very little weight was attached to that. It was more the evidence of the doctors that went to prove this than anything else. The doctors' evidence was very strong. This scratch was a very minor point, and I don't think it was relied upon very much by the judge, or by the Solicitor-General.]

Mr. De Villiers, reverting to the first ground of appeal, said he would like to point out how entirely absent there was any motive, how Miss Trubie contradicted herself, and how the witness Coutts gave his evidence. The solicitor did not seem to have a very flattering opinion of Coutts; yet the learned judge, in his summing up, relied upon Coutts' evidence as showing certain relations to have existed between Miss Robinson and the accused. If the Court would refer to the evidence, it would be seen how little evidence there was with regard to motive. The accused said that he did not visit Miss Robinson for two and a half months after the murder; that was left out of the judge's notes. He (Mr. De Villiers) would liked to have gone into all the evidence, and especially the police evidence, because undoubtedly the police evidence must have made an impression on the jury. Dealing with the third objection, referring to the identity of the stick, counsel said His Lordship had said that accused denied that he had any acquaintance with the stick. He contended that His Lordship could not assume that he had any acquaintance with the stick. The judge seemed to reason in a circle: that because he was guilty, prisoner must have had acquaintance with the stick, and that because he had acquaintance with the stick, and denied it, he was therefore guilty. Accused recognised the fact that there were similar sticks in his shop, but he said he did not know that particular stick. This was one of the grounds used to assist in bringing the jury to the conclusion that prisoner was a guilty man. The same in regard to the knife. Then as to the supposed difference between the prisoner and his wife, the evidence all went to show that there had not been the slightest upset between accused and his wife. Yet, in order to credit the police evidence as to this, they must believe that prisoner acted the part of a lunatic, and went to the police, and manufactured evidence against himself. Pitt-Taylor, in his work, gave a warning against accepting the evidence of the police, saying that even if they had tried to speak the truth, nevertheless they were bent upon convicting a man.

[Buchanan, J.: Do you say the judge ought to have said that to the jury.]

Mr. De Villiers: No, my lord. I am now discussing the point that the learned judge said that the prisoner denied any knowledge of the stick. I am pointing out now that we have no evidence except what the police said I submit that the police evidence could not be accepted as correct. As regarded the knife the circumstances must be remembered. It must be remembered that the prisoner was badgered by the police about it. The police could have gone to the shop, and inquired whether there was such a knife as that in the shop. They probably did so, and then they came to prisoner even after his arrest, and again badgered him about the knife. They said to him, 'Do you stock knives like that?" and in the irritation of the moment, or perhaps with a certain amount of sarcasm, he said, "I don't know." Of course, it was most dangerous for a person to speak in that manner, but certainly with regard to the knife, there was no evidence, I would maintain, upon which the learned judge could go in saying prisoner denied having such knives in stock. As to the supposition that this knife was from the stock of the accused, there was absolutely no reason at all to suppose that it was ever in the possession of the accused. On the occasion when the accused bought the knives twenty other people purchased similar knives, and there was probably no more common pattern of knife than this. Surely, accused could not be required to prove these knives had not been sold from his shop. I contend further that the knife should have been preserved in the state in which it was found after the murder, instead of which it was carefully washed and cleaned by a constable. As far as the evidence went, the knife was an old one. The judge seemed almost to have assumed that this knife must have been one of the five in the prisoner's shop. I submit that the Crown should have led the evidence of the assistants in the shop as to whether they did not know what had become of the knife. The onus was not on the prisoner to prove that the knife had not been sold. With regard to the fourth point, I contend that if there had been intimidation, the Crown should have called evidence as to the use of threats. This talk of intimidation appears to me to be absurd.

[De Villiers, C.J.: The point is whether the learned judge was wrong in deciding beforehand that if rebutting evidence were called as to Mrs. Botha's statement, it would be admitted. Mrs. Botha's evidence would not be evidence for the Crown; it might be evidence for the defence.]

There is no doubt that if Mrs. Botha's evidence had been called, Wm. Jansen's would have been admitted on behalf of the Crown.

[De Villiers, C.J.: If Jansen's evidence was not admissible, the proper time to make objection to its admission was when he was produced.]

I say the judge had no right to assume that Mrs. Botha's evidence would in any way have been prejudicial.

[De Villiers, C.J.: He doesn't assume that. He simply says he allows Mrs. Botha's evidence to be taken, and if the Crown wished to produce rebutting evidence he would allow that.]

Mr. De Villiers said that representations had been made to the judge asking him to amplify the special entry, and his (counsel's) instructions were that the judge said it would not be necessary to amplify the entry, that he would admit the statements made, and would adhere to them.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Which statements?]

Certain statements which appear in the newspaper reports.

[De Villiers, C.J.: How does that affect this question as to the admissibility of evidence?]

Mr. De Villiers said his submission was that if these threats were made they must be proved by the prosecution.

[De Villiers, C.J.: When evidence was proposed to be given as to the threats you properly objected. How can you now object that the Crown did not lead the evidence?]

The judge told the jury that threats were used to Mrs. Botha, and the Crown was uncontradicted on that point.

[De Villiers, C.J.: The point is not so much whether threats were used, but whether the boys believed at the time they gave their evidence that such threats were made.]

These things show the imperative necessity of a shorthand writer being present. I am anxious that there should be before the Court the instructions of the judge to the jury when the jury came back after retiring.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Is that point before the Court? The Court cannot consider any question not reserved.]

It is very difficult for counsel in a moment of hurry to so formulate a statement that it exactly embraces the whole of the objections. I took the judge's remarks as a ruling. I asked his Lordship the question: "If evidence is brought that no such threats were used, that nothing in the way of intimidation was exercised, do I understand your lordship will allow rebutting evidence?" and the judge replied in the affirmative. That was a positive ruling, and I do not see how I could have done otherwise than be guided by such a ruling. That at once deterred me from bringing evidence. If Mrs. Botha had been called, the Crown would have called Jansen, who was going to give evidence of hearsay.

[De Villiers, C.J.: And it would have been properly stopped. You should have objected when it was proposed to admit it. You should have objected to the illegal evidence.]

I took the judge's remark as a ruling.

[De Villiers, C.J.: You could not assume that the judge would allow hearsay evidence, illegal evidence.]

I have completed my remarks on the four points. If the Court will allow me, I would like to deal also with other points which were really most important.

[De Villiers, C.J.: We haven't power to consider anything except what has been reserved.]

I would like to argue two further points in regard to the judge's direction. One is the statement of the judge that each juror must consider his fellow-juror's opinion, and the other was the judge's remark that he could not give any opinion at present, but, after the jury had brought in their verdict, he might be in a position to state his opinion, and to state it strongly. I contend that these were improper remarks for the judge to have used.

[De Villiers, C.J., said there was nothing in these two points which need be reserved for the consideration of the Court.]

De Villiers, C.J., said that the Court would like to hear the Solicitor-General on the three first points of the appeal.

The Solicitor-General said that an endeavour had been made to secure before their lordships a re-trial of a case that had been the subject of trial before a jury in Graham's Town. There was, of course, no such thing as a re-trial, and therefore he took it that his duty would be, as it was the duty of his learned friend, to confine himself to those points on which the special entry had been made, and also to deal with the judge's remarks thereon. Now, the first point was as to the question of inventory. He must deal with that from two points of view, because, as he stated at the outset, the inventory was never put in. But, even if the inventory were not in, if their lordships perused the minutes of the evidence, as taken down by the judge, they would find that there was in the evidence given before him plenty of material to show that, although the estate could not be fixed at a particular amount, still it was of a very substantial amount. The evidence went to show that the accused was, prima facie, at all events, the owner of at least four houses in the town of Middelburg. There was plenty of proof of property, and, besides, there was the insurance for over £1,000. Then, again, there was the fact that at the time when these transactions took place Manley had taken over the business. There was also the further fact that the accused was proceeding or intending to proceed with all his family to Europe, there to live and complete the education of his children. He also said that if there were any deficiency it could easily have been supplied by his learned friend, because both the auctioneer, who was the valuator of the immovable estate, went into the box, and the accused himself was in the box. Referring to the will, counsel pointed out that the interests of the accused under the will were very large, and the interests of his wife were only small. A further and important portion of the motive in this case was the relationship which was in the evidence established between the accused and a certain Miss Robinson, whose name had been mentioned in the case. He did not know whether their lordships wished to go into the facts in connection with that.

De Villiers, C.J., said he did not think it was necessary.

The Solicitor-General also proceeded to deal briefly with the other portions of the objections taken by the defence.

Mr. M. de Villiers, in reply, said that with regard to the first point he did not know whether their position was not really stronger after the statement of his learned friend. He (the Solicitor-General) said that there was a consensus of opinion with regard to the inventory being in. He (Mr. De Villiers) denied that. He said there was a failure on the part of the Crown to put in the inventory to prove the case, and there was a wrong impression on the other side that it had been put in. There was no proof of the property of the accused. A fortiori there was therefore a misdirection to the jury.

De Villiers, C.J., said he understood that it was agreed between the parties that the inventory had practically been put in.

Mr. De Villiers said that his learned friend had used the words "consensus of opinion." He contended that the Crown had failed to prove the property of the accused. Even if the inventory had been put in no proof had been given as to liability. Therefore, no proper evidence of property had been given. He claimed that the comparison between the position of husband and wife under the will introduced by the Solicitor-General was not a proper one. The Solicitor-General should have compared the position of the accused after the death of his wife with his position before her death. He acknowledged that the question of motive was left to the jury, but it was after they had been wrongly instructed. The evidence as to the accused's relations with Miss Robinson was to the effect that he once winked his eye at her and nudged her elbow. It transpired that the accused was fond of cracking a joke. That was all the evidence of this great fondness for Miss Robinson. Counsel again commented on the evidence of the boys Lessing and Jansen, and said it was impossible to believe that on a dark night the boys could at a distance of 50 yards identify any passer-by. It was curious that all the variances as between the evidence given at the preliminary examination, and the evidence given at the trial were strongly detrimental to the accused. Counsel cited "American Decisions and Reports" (Vol. 3, p. 237). He contended that the Crown had utterly failed to show any connection between the accused and the knife used, and that, as regarded the circumstantial evidence throughout, it tended, if not more, as much to the advantage of the accused as to his detriment.

De Villiers, C.J.: There are two modes in which the verdict of a jury can be brought on appeal before this Court, either by means of a special entry in terms of the Act of 1896 on the ground of some illegality or irregularity, or by reserving a question of law for the consideration of the Court of Appeal. In strictness, neither of these courses seem to have been taken in the present case. Certainly there has not been a special entry on the ground of irregularity or of illegality, but a paper containing a series of objections to the rulings of the presiding Judge was put in by learned counsel for the prisoner, after the jury had found prisoner guilty. Unfortunately the learned judge did not himself reserve the questions, nor did he then and there state whether that paper correctly represented the charge which he had made to the jury. It therefore became necessary to have a statement from the judge as to the charge which he had made to the jury, so far as that charge bears upon the objections raised. Upon that statement sent by the learned judge, it is now competent for the Court to ascertain more or less the questions to be decided by this Court. The first question relates to motive, to the motive which the accused must have had in committing the murder as alleged. It is not necessary in any case of a criminal offence to prove a motive. It frequently happens that there is no apparent motive, that people commit crimes without a discoverable motive; but that is no reason for acquitting a prisoner, if, by the evidence, the offence is clearly brought home to him. In every case where circumstantial evidence has to be relied upon, it becomes very important to ascertain whether the accused had or had not a motive for committing the crime with which he is charged. In the present case there is certainly evidence of motive, quite independently of any question of pecuniary benefit to the accused through the death of his wife. It was amply proved that there had been some degree of familiarity between the accused and Miss Robinson before the death of his wife, and there is certainly evidence that within a few months after the death of his wife, the accused made an offer of marriage to Miss Robinson, which, so far as one can judge, although she denies it, must have been accepted, seeing that she kept the ring which he had given to her. Now here, at all events, there is some motive which was properly introduced into the case for the purpose of ascertaining whether in addition to the other circumstances there was a reason why the accused should wish to have his wife out of the way. Then there was some evidence led as to property. It seems that at the preliminary examination an inventory of the joint estate of the accused and his wife was put in, that inventory being signed by the accused himself. It seems to have been assumed throughout the trial that that inventory was also put in at the trial. It does not now form part of the record, but it was used by all parties, by counsel for the prisoner, and by counsel for the Crown as well as by the judge, and referred to as though it actually had formed part of the record. But I think that quite independently of the state of the estate, as disclosed by that inventory, there was some evidence which might justify the jury in finding that there was a motive so far as pecuniary benefit also was concerned. It was proved that a considerable sum of money had been received by the accused as insurance on the life of his wife, one half of which would come to him and the other half to the estate of his wife. It was proved also that the accused and his wife had made a joint will by which the accused was to have, in addition to his half share, the sole control over the half share of his wife for his life. That, in itself, would be some advantage to be derived by the accused through the death of his wife. I consider that after all that has taken place that inventory must be regarded as part of the record. It would have been legal evidence; it was treated as legal evidence, and it was referred to by the judge, because it had been referred to by counsel on both sides. The judge might fairly say: "This inventory having been referred to by counsel for the Crown and counsel for the prisoner, it is my duty to inform the jury what the contents of the inventory are." There was no attempt made by the accused to show that his estate was insolvent. It is suggested now that his estate might have been insolvent. Surely, it would have been much easier for the accused to prove that his estate was insolvent, if it really was insolvent, than it would be for the prosecution to prove that it was solvent, if it was solvent. Upon the question of the accused's guilt, no doubt the onus lies entirely upon the prosecution, but upon a side question of this kind where once it is proved that the accused would have the administration of his wife's estate, and where he would gain some benefit through the death of his wife, it certainly would not be too much to expect of him that, if the fact was that he was insolvent, he should prove that fact. No evidence of that kind was given, and, at all events, as I said before, there was some evidence before the jury that the accused would derive some degree of pecuniary benefit through the death of his wife. But quite independently of that pecuniary benefit, there was other evidence of motive, far stronger evidence of motive, to my mind, arising out of the relationship between the accused and Miss Robinson. That disposes of the first question. With regard to the second objection it is stated as follows by counsel for the accused: "That in face of the fact proved at the trial that most material witnesses for the Crown (not including Hazel du Plessis, whom the counsel for the defence carefully excluded from his remarks) had made declarations at the trial strictly at variance with the declarations made at the preliminary examination or evidence given at the inquest, the presiding judge should have pointed out to the jury the danger of accepting such evidence." The remark of the judge upon that is as follows: "I am not sure whether I did use the word 'danger,' but I pointed out the discrepancies and left it to the jury to say whether they believed or did not believe any particular witness they had heard." It is quite clear that whatever discrepancy there was was pointed out to the jury, and that counsel for the accused pointed it out. Now I confess it would have been much more satisfactory if the learned judge had laid more stress than he did upon the discrepancy between the evidence given by the boys Lessing and Jansen at the preparatory examination and their evidence at the trial. It would have been more satisfactory also if he had pointed out to the jury that at this time—at a quarter to seven on a winter's night—on the 25th May—a dark, cloudy night, it would have been extremely difficult for any witnesses to swear positively as to who the person was whom they saw going on tiptoe at a distance of 15 yards. It is a salutary practice for judges presiding at criminal trials where witnesses give evidence adverse to the accused and differing from their evidence previously given to point out to the jury the danger of convicting on such adverse evidence. It does not follow, however, that where this practice is departed from, the Court of Appeal would be justified in holding that there was an irregularity or a mis-direction. After all, it is the function of the jury alone to decide upon the guilt or otherwise of the accused. The responsibility is wholly theirs, and if, after the discrepancy has been pointed out, they still believe the evidence of the witnesses, as given before them, it would be extremely dangerous for a Court of Appeal to usurp their functions by holding that they ought to have disbelieved the witnesses. The evidence as to the physical impossibility of identifying a person at the time and place when and where the witnesses are said to have seen the accused is very unsatisfactory. They do not say whether they used railway time or local time, nor does this Court know whether any local conditions existed which would have increased the duration of twilight at Middelburg on the evening of the 25th of May. The third objection is: "That the presiding judge misdirected the jury in saying: 'The prisoner could either himself or through his assistants have accounted for the disposal of the knife (meaning thereby one of a set of knives bought at an auction sale by accused and offered for sale by him in his shop), the prisoner having in his shop knives similar to the knife with which the murder was alleged to have been committed'; inasmuch as if the evidence of such assistants was required they should have been produced by the prosecution." The learned judge's statement upon that point is as follows: "As to the third objection, the knife with which the murder was committed might have belonged, as far as the blade was concerned to a set of five. Four of these sets were accounted for, and prisoner attempted to account for the fifth by saying he had sold it to one Forbes. Now this statement which the learned judge makes to this Court is not, I think, strictly accurate, because the accused did not say he had sold it to one Forbes. He only expressed the opinion—his belief—that he had sold it to Forbes; so that this statement to the Court is not strictly accurate; but the fact that the statement was made by the accused that he believed he had sold the knife to Forbes was quite a sufficient justification for the prosecution calling Forbes, and Forbes positively denied that he had bought such a knife from the accused. Then the learned judge goes on: "The fifth knife was certainly gone, and I remarked that, as Forbes denied he ever purchased such a knife, it was for the jury to consider this fact: that neither the prisoner nor his assistants had said what had become of it. If there had been other knives of the same kind, prisoner could easily have taken off the blade of one of them. Even if he did not use one of the five, he said he had the same kind in stock. In the first instance, he denied ever having kept such knives in stock, and also denied having any sticks of the kind found in the passage, both which latter statements were untrue." The general principle is undoubtedly true that it is for the Crown to prove the guilt of the accused, but, if certain knives are traced to the possession of the accused, then there was certainly nothing wrong in the judge simply commenting on the fact that the accused had not accounted for all the knives which had been traced into his possession, and that seems to me the learned judge did in the present case. He did not tell the jury they were to infer from this possession that the accused was guilty; he only called their attention to the fact that these knives had been traced to the possession of the accused, and that he had not been able to account for all these knives so traced to his possession—to account for his non-possession of them. Of course, it was still competent for the jury to take into full consideration all the other circumstances, which were strongly impressed on the jury in regard to these knives, especially the circumstance that it would be exceedingly difficult for any person, and especially a person who had a large business like the accused, to account for every article which comes into and leaves his possession. That was brought to the attention of the jury, but on the other hand it was not wrong to draw the attention of the jury to the fact that the accused had not accounted for all the knives traced to his possession. Then, in regard to the fourth point, objection is taken as follows: "That certain two of the witnesses, named Lessing and Jansen, gave evidence at the trial directly in conflict with their evidence given at the preliminary examination, and state that such variance was due to intimidation on the part of a certain Mrs. Botha. Counsel for the defence (in consequence of certain remarks made by the presiding judge), before calling the said Mrs. Botha as a witness to contradict such statements, inquired from the presiding judge whether, if he called her as a witness, the prosecution would be entitled to call rebutting evidence. The presiding judge held that he would be so entitled, and that this holding of the Court was contrary to law." Here then is an admission that the judge would have allowed Mrs. Botha to give her evidence to contradict the two boys

Lessing and Jansen. It appears that after the judge intimated that Mrs. Botha could be called, the public prosecutor asked whether, if she were called, he could produce evidence to rebut her statement. It seems that the judge stated that the Crown Prosecutor could do so. Thereupon the counsel for the accused did not call Mrs Botha. Now, in my opinion, not having called Mrs. Botha, it is impossible for him now to raise the objection. The proper course would have been to call Mrs. Botha, and if, after she had given her evidence, witnesses were called on behalf of the Crown to rebut the evidence given by Mrs. Botha, then would have been the time to object to such rebutting evidence. The fourth objection, therefore, in my opinion, also falls to the ground. There has been a great deal of argument upon other points, which have not been raised by these objections. Most of these arguments were very properly addressed to the jury, and I have no doubt they considered these arguments before they took upon themselves the responsibility of finding the accused guilty. Some of these arguments may be no doubt be properly presented to His Excellency the Governor, on whom the responsibility lies whether the sentence of death is to be carried into execution or not, but, so far as this Court os concerned, it can only decide the legal questions which have been raised. There is no proof on the record of illegality or irregularity of the proceedings or of misdirection on the part of the learned judge, and the appeal must therefore be dismissed.

Buchanan, J.: I concur in the decision just pronounced. At the same time it ought to be clearly stated that by the common law of this Colony there is no right of appeal in criminal cases from the verdict of a jury. Until recently even questions of law could not be brought under review. Statutory provision, however, has from time to time been made which is now to be found in Act No. 35, 1896, to which counsel has referred. By the 32nd section of that Act, where a trial is had of a prisoner before a judge and jury, if the accused thinks any of the proceedings are irregular or illegal, he may apply to the Court for a special entry to be made on the record showing the nature of the alleged irregularity or illegality. I am not now prepared to say whether or not the Court is bound to make such special entry. The section cited goes on to say that "if such a special entry be directed to be made," which seems to imply a discretion in the Court. It is only questions so raised, and points of law which, under a subsequent section of the Act the Court may reserve for the consideration of the Court of Appeal, that may be brought under review, and even then an irregularity or illegality is not fatal to the verdict where the Appeal Court is of opinion that no substantial wrong was thereby done to the accused. In this instance there has been no special entry on the record and no point of law reserved. The main argument has been directed against the verdict of the jury, and it cannot be too emphatically stated that we have no power to re-try the case. The statements made by prisoner's counsel were not accepted or settled by the presiding judge, on the contrary he has expressed his dissent therefrom. However, he raised no objection to their being brought before the Court, together with his remarks thereon; and though an irregular proceeding it has been treated substantially as if a special entry had been made. I need not now go into the details of these statements, as they have been so fully dealt with by the Chief Justice. I will content myself with expressing my concurrence with his lordship's comments. They may be summed up as being a complaint against the presiding judge for not having done his duty in summing up the case in that he did not condemn the evidence for the Crown in terms sufficiently strong to satisfy the prisoner's counsel. I concur in confirming the judgment of the Court below.

Maasdorp, J., concurred.

[Appellant's Attorneys: Van Zyl and Buissinné.]

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.), and the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

REX v. KRIGE. { 1903. Dec. 15th.

Appeal — Question reserved — Theft by means of false pretences — Variance—Theft by member of firm.

On the trial of an attorney for theft by means of false pretences the false representation alleged in the indictment was that the accused had stated to the prosecutor that he had paid certain money received by him on behalf of the prosecutor to his Cape Town attorneys, whereas the evidence shewed that he, without the knowledge of the other members of the firm, had stated that the firm had paid such money to its Cape Town Attorneys.

Held, on question reserved, that such variance was no ground for setting aside the conviction.

Held, further, that the fact of the accused having committed the theft on behalf of the firm was no ground for disturbing the verdict to the effect that he was himself guilty of the theft.

This was an appeal on a point reserved from the Circuit Court of Worcester.

The appellant, Evelyn William Krige, was an attorney resident at Ceres, and was a member of the firm of Weitz and Krige. There existed an agreement between the two partners of the firm that Krige should attend to the Court work, and that the profits were to be equally shared. A certain Kotze engaged the services of the firm through Krige to recover from a certain Devenish a wagon or its value. Krige, on behalf of the firm, instructed the Cape Town agents of the firm, Moore and Son, to institute proceedings in the Supreme Court. Before anything, however, was done by Messrs. Moore and Son, a compromise was effected with Krige, acting on behalf of Weitz and Krige, to the effect that Devenish should pay £40 for the wagon and half of the costs. Krige wired this to Moore and Son, and in his wire mentioned that he thought their bill of costs need not be taxed. Moore and Son, according to the evidence of Mr. Moore, jun., did not acknowledge these letters or in any way give directions for the summons to be drawn. Krige, acting on behalf of the firm, brought up in the firm's account against Devenish the half of two guineas, as being payable to Moore and Son, viz., a guinea. In the first count, he was charged with having converted this guinea to his own use. He was convicted, and the following point was reserved for the consideration of the Supreme Court: "That whereas the indictment alleged that the accused had falsely pretended that he had paid to his Cape Town attorneys certain money, counsel prosecuting on behalf of the Crown had led evidence to the effect that the accused had falsely pretended that the firm of Weitz and Krige (of which he was a member) had paid such money to their Cape Town attorneys, the accused personally having none such and in general; whereas counsel prosecuting on behalf of the Crown had led evidence to show that the firm Weitz and Krige were concerned in matters as to which in the indictment it is alleged that the accused was concerned, the jury should have been instructed that there was no case against the accused."

Mr. M. de Villiers for the appellant; Mr. Joubert for the Crown.

Mr. De Villiers stated that his questions to the witnesses were to a great extent directed to this point, whether they dealt with Krige individually or Weitz and Krige, the firm. He presumed it was common cause that Krige was not engaged personally, but that it was the firm that was engaged through him. If there was any conversion of money, it was not a conversion by him, but by the firm of which he was a member. Throughout the transactions, Krige did not act personally, but on behalf of the firm.

Mr. Joubert said that their position was that the defendant was acting on behalf of the firm of which he was a member, but without the knowledge of the other partner.

[De Villiers, C.J.: But that is not alleged in the indictment?]

But there is evidence to that effect.

Mr. M. de Villiers: If Krige converted money it was not to his own use, but to that of his firm.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Of which firm he himself was a member.]

Mr. De Villiers: And this he did without the knowledge of the other partners. Moore and Son were not the agents of Krige, but of the firm. Our first point is that the firm, and not Krige personally, are concerned in this case. As to obtaining money by false pretences, see Stevens' Digest of Criminal Law (p. 221), Archbold's Practice (232, 21st edit); Rex v. Kopetzo (1, Camp., 494). The question of motive raises a very important point. It is most material whether a man converted money to his own use, or to that of the firm of which he was a member. Very possibly a man may run risks for the sake of, say, £50, which he would not run for ten shillings. In this case the money was received by Krige for the firm. As to the second count, if I secure an acquittal on the first count a fortiori, he must be acquitted on the second count. The second count alleged that Krige agreed with Devenish that the latter should pay the sum of £40, as value of the wagon, and that the said Krige received the said sum of £40. It was alleged that he was entitled to retain the sum of £2 9s. for services rendered, and that he was to have paid over to Kotze the remainder of the said sum, viz., £37 11s., and that he did wrongfully and unlawfully appropriate to his own use the sum of £5, and thus committed the crime of theft. The accused actually paid to his client Kotze the sum of £32 11s., and alleged that he was entitled to deduct the sum of £7 9s. from the amount paid to him by Devenish.

Mr. Joubert: The objection raised by appellant's counsel, I take to be that, not the appellant, but the partnership was guilty of this fraud; but then neither the other parties of the firm nor the appellant's legal adviser, knew anything about it. The whole question is: can a man be convicted of fraud if he has not benefitted personally, but a firm of which he is a member has done so?

[De Villiers, C.J.: But he is charged with converting money to his own use. Does the evidence support that?]

We must assume the facts of the case, some of which do not appear on the record.

[De Villiers, C.J.: You cannot go into facts, you can argue only on the points of law reserved. What is your argument?]

W. E. Moore and Son were the attorneys, not only for the appellant, but also for the firm. He said he had paid money to the firm's attorneys, but then they were also his own attorneys. As to the second count, I confess I do not quite understand the point reserved. There is no allegation of false pretences in the second count.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Suppose a man is charged with stealing £5, can he be convicted under that charge of stealing £3.]

Yes; see Section 12 of Act 3 of 1882. I will add that there can be no partnership in crime. The appellant took the money and benefitted thereby; to what extent is quite immaterial.

Mr. M. de Villiers (in reply) submitted that the variance between the charge laid and the offence proved was fatal to the indictment.

De Villiers, C.J.: For the purpose of deciding the question reserved for the opinion of the Supreme Court, it is necessary that the Court should confine itself to the statement of counsel, which was accepted by the Court as raising the question actually reserved. Now, it is said on behalf of the Crown that the evidence did not show that the money had been paid to the attorneys of the firm, or that there had been a representation to that effect. But that objection was not raised when the questions were reserved in the following form: That, whereas the indictment alleged that the accused had falsely pretended that he had paid to his Cape Town attorneys certain money, counsel prosecuting on behalf of the Crown had led evidence to the effect that the accused had falsely pretended that the firm of Weits and Krige (of which he was a member), had paid such money to their Cape Town attorneys, the accused personally having none such and in general, whereas counsel prosecuting on behalf of the Crown had led evidence to show that the firm Weitz and Krige were concerned in matters as to which in the indictment it is alleged that the accused was concerned, the jury should have been instructed that there was no case against the accused. On this objection the Court has been referred to the case of the King against Preston, which was decided nearly a century ago, and I am not at all clear that at the present day the decision would have been the same. In that case, an indictment for obtaining money by false pretences stated that the defendant pretended he had paid a sum of money into the Bank of England. It appeared he said generally that the money had been paid into the Bank of England. It was held to be a fatal variance. I can quite understand that there might be a very material difference to the accused as to whether he had said he had paid the money, or that the money had been paid, The facts of the case are not clearly stated, but I can quite imagine that there may be cases in which that matter would be very material. In the present case, however, it is a question as to the meaning of these words: "That he had paid to his Cape Town attorneys." In one sense, undoubtedly, the Cape Town attorneys of the firm were his attorneys. He is a member of the firm, and as a member of the firm, at all events, the Cape Town attorneys are his attorneys. Then the case stated makes the point perfectly clear by saying that the accused personally had no Cape Town at- The Cape Town attorneys of the firm would be the attorneys of Krige himself, and in my opinion, a representation to the effect that his firm had paid certain moneys to their attorneys might fairly be held to embrace a representation that he, as a member of the firm, had made the payment to his attorneys. If the point were material it might have been advisable to reserve it for further consideration, but as there is no doubt whatever in regard to the second count, the matter may be disposed of at once. The second count charges the accused with theft. Now, if a person steals on behalf of a firm he must, in my opinion, be held to steal on his own behalf, for there can be no partnership in the crime. If a man commits theft and hands over the proceeds of the theft to a firm of which he is a member, it is not the handing over of the proceeds that constitutes the theft, but the original taking of the property without the consent of the owner. The offence consists in depriving the owner of the possession of his property, and that offence was committed in regard to the whole amount, and it was an offence committed by the accused himself, quite independently of the partnership, and, therefore, in my opinion, the second objection would not hold good in regard to the second count. In the opinion of the Court, therefore, the objections to the indictment raised cannot be sustained, and the judgment of the Court below must be confirmed.

Buchanan, J.: The question presents itself to my mind in this way. The essence of the fraud consists in the false representation that the costs payable by Devenish amounted to so much when, in fact, it was a smaller sum. The fact whether the amount paid to Moore and Son, the Cape Town attorneys, had been paid by prisoner to Moore and Son as prisoner's attorneys, or whether it had been paid by prisoner's firm to Moore and Son as the attorneys of the firm, was purely incidental to the issue. It was not a question upon which a fatal variance could arise. It could not cause any prejudice to the prisoner which statement was the correct one. I therefore concur in upholding the judgment of the Circuit Court.

Maasdorp, J., concurred.

[Appellant's Attorneys: Dempers and Van Ryneveld.]

PROVISIONAL ROLL.

YATES V. VAN BLOMMESTEIN. { 1903. Dec. 15th.

Mr. Benjamin, for the plaintiff, asked that this matter should be allowed to stand over until the 12th January, in order that answering affidavits might be obtained.

Mr. Alexander objected to the costs of the postponement being costs in the cause.

Ordered to stand over until the 12th February, the question of costs to stand over.

KEITH V. DELL.

Mr. Struben moved for the final adjudication of the respondent's estate.

The provisional order was granted on the 3rd November.

Order granted.

CELLIERS V. KETS.

Mr. Upington moved for provisional sentence upon a mortgage bond for the sum of £3,000, passed in favour of the estate of the late Edward Holloway. The bond had become due and payable by reason of the non-payment of interest, and counsel also asked that the property should be declared executable.

Order granted.

ESTATE EATES V. ERASMUS.

Mr. Upington moved for provisional sentence upon a certain bill of exchange, of the amount of £123 12s. 5d., dated 15th July, 1903, and accepted by the defendant, and also under Rule 329d, for the sum of £43 for goods sold and delivered, with interest and costs.

Order granted.

CARSTEN V. KENN.

Mr. Nightingale moved for provisional sentence for the sum of £567, upon a certain promissory note, with interest from the 20th September, 1903.

Order granted.

TETLEY AND FLEMING V. HILL.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved for provisional sentence on a certain cheque signed by the defendant for the sum of £862 19s.

Order granted.

JANISCH V. WEINBERG AND ANOTHER.

Mr. Sutton moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £450, and for the property to be declared executable, with interest at the rate of 6 per cent. The bond had become due and payable by reason of the non-payment of interest.

Order granted.

ILLIQUID ROLL.

ALVORD WILLS AND ABBOTT V. MILLEN. 1903. Dec. 15th.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £134 6s. 11d., goods sold and delivered, interest a tempore morae, and costs of suit.

Order granted.

LANCASTER V. ROUS.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £40, being balance of account due by defendant for money lent and advanced, interest at 6 per cent. from the 22nd May, 1902, and costs of suit.

Order granted.

DOMINICUS V. TAYLOR AND STERNER.

Mr. De Waal moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £2,100, purchase price of a certain piece of land near Elsie's River Halt, interest and costs of suit.

Order granted.

BROMEHEAD V. MORRIS.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved for judgment under Rule 329d, for £22, board and lodging, £3 for washing charges, interest a tempore morae, and costs.

Order granted.

IMMELMAN V. VISSER.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £50 sterling, being purchase price of certain one-half share of land in the township of Fraserburg, interest from the 26th October, 1896, and costs of suit. There was an application to sue by edictal citation, but the Court was not satisfied that the defendant had left the Colony, and directed that, in addition to service at the last known place of residence, the summons should be published in a Dutch paper, circulating in the Fraserburg district. Such publication has been made.

Order granted.

MORSER AND CO. V. LYTMAN.

Mr. Pyemont moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £8 15s., balance of account, £6 16s. 4d. attorney's fees, and disbursements, interest a tempore morae, and costs of suit, upon an agreement with regard to a certain order of sequestration that was withdrawn on condition that they would pay a certain sum and the costs. A certain sum had been paid, and there remained the balance of £8 15s. and the costs

Order granted.

CORTESE AND WEBSTER V. HEDDLE BROS.

Mr. Rowson moved for judgment, under Rule 319 for £111 5s., under a liquidated demand, and also for delivery of a certain promissory note for the said sum.

Order granted.

WAY V. EDGCOMBE.

Mr. Searle, K.C., moved for judgment in default of plea for £200 sterling, due in terms of clause 3 of a certain contract entered into between the parties, and for interest and costs. The parties entered into an agreement of service, whereunder the sum of £200 had to be deposited by plaintiff to be repaid by the defendant within a month of the termination of contract. Notice was given, and the contract had been terminated, but the defendant had not repaid the sum of £200.

Order granted.

CROTE V. PARROTT.

Mr. Searle, K.C., moved for judgment in default of plea, or an order compelling the defendant to transfer to the plaintiff a certain piece of land, with buildings thereon, sold by the defendant to the plaintiff in terms of agreement. The declaration stated that the sale took place of a certain erf in the village of Piquetberg, and that the money which was to be paid under the contract had been paid, and the plaintiff now tendered to pass bond required for the balance, on the defendant passing transfer, as he was bound to do under the agreement. Although the plaintiff was now in possession of the property, the defendant had failed and neglected to pass the transfer.

Order granted as prayed.

MCDONALD AND CO. V. STEPHAN.

Mr. Buchanan moved for judgment in default of plea for £140 6s. 7d., being the amount due by the defendant to the plaintiff for money lent and advanced, and for goods sold and delivered.

Order granted.

ROBERTSON AND CO. V. ROBERTSON AND TROW.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £40 12s. 4d., for goods sold and delivered, and interest and costs.

Order granted.

COLONIAL GOVERNMENT V. OCHSE.

Mr. Howel Jones moved for judgment under Rule 329d, in terms of summons for £22 8s., balance of purchase price of certain land, and £7 11s., fine and interest; £26 8s., purchase price of land, and £7 11s., fine and interest; also for £40, balance of purchase price, together with £7 11s. fine; and for an order declaring that if payment be not made within one month after judgment, the sale of the said lots of ground shall be null and void, and the land forfeited.

Order granted as prayed.

COLONIAL GOVERNMENT V. BAILEY.

Mr. Howel Jones moved for judgment for £606 14s. 5d., claims paid in respect to goods stolen by the defendant, also for the payment of £134 5s. 9d., expenses incurred in connection with the goods stolen by the said defendant.

The Chief Justice: That second item, I think, is a very unusual one?

Mr. Jones: It is an unusual one, but the defendant has had notice of the application.

Order granted.

PRINCE V. COPPIN.

Mr. De Waal moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £667 8s., balance due to the plaintiff for and by virtue of a certain contract entered into between the Rev. J. Spawn, acting for and on behalf of the African Methodist Episcopal Church, for the erection of certain buildings at Claremont, on the 27th August, 1903, with interest a tempore morae.

Mr. Alexander, for the defendant, Levi Jenkyns Coppin, put in an affidavit in which the latter said that he was the Bishop and head in South Africa of the said Church, but that he had nothing to do with the temporal affairs of the Church, that he was in no way consulted in connection with the said contract, and that building would not vest in him, but in the trustees for the time being of the Episcopal Mission at Claremont. He had been away in Basutoland, and he found the summons awaiting him on his return. He had taken steps with a view of entering an appearance against the application and defending the case. He believed that the persons who should have been sued were the trustees for the time being of the mission at Claremont.

Mr. De Waal put in a replying affidavit by Mr. De Villiers, of the firm of Michau and De Villiers, who stated that they had applied to the Rev. Mr. Spawn for the payment, but had received no reply. The summons was subsequently issued against the defendant as the head of the Church in South Africa. The Bishop had petitioned this Court for the transfer of the property in question, and had obtained a rule nisi, returnable on the 1st February.

Mr. Alexander said that that was not before the Court, and that, as a matter of fact, the defendant did not petition the Court to have the property transferred to himself, but to the trustees for the time being of the Claremont Mission.

De Villiers, C.J., said that the question was too important to be decided at the present stage, and the Bishop must have an opportunity of defending the case. Leave would be granted to the defendant to enter appearance and defend the action, costs to be costs in the cause.

BURSLEM V. BURSLEM.

Mr. Greer moved for judgment, under Rule 329e, for judicial separation, in terms of the consent paper signed by both parties and duly witnessed.

Order granted.

WIPNER V. HOLLAND.

Mr. Pyemont moved for judgment, under Rule 319, in default of plea, for the sum of £46 3s. 6d., for rent, money lent, and goods supplied between December, 1901, and December, 1902, with interest a tempore morae and costs of suit.

Order granted.

LAMPRECHT V. KIRSTEN.

Mr. Benjamin moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for the sum of £17, being the balance due on the purchase of a certain bicycle.

Order granted.

HARRIS V. HESSELL.

Mr. Close moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for the sum of £25 for rent due, with interest and costs of suit.

Order granted.

LAW V. ROBINSON.

Mr. Close moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for the sum of £31, for rent and taxes due, with interest.

Order granted.

TROTT BROS. V. DEKENAH.

Mr. Alexander moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £91, for goods sold and delivered, with interest a tempore morae and costs of suit.

Order granted.

JOHNSON AND CO. V. SWAEBE AND ANOTHER.

Mr. Sutton moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £90 5s., less £30 paid on account for work and labour done.

Order granted.

VIENNINGS AND ANOTHER V. EDWARDS.

Mr. Struben moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £3,000, being the balance of the purchase price of certain property.

Order granted.

HOFFMAN AND CO. V. JAFFE.

Mr. Greer moved, under Rule 329d, for £39 0s. 4d., for goods sold and delivered, with interest a tempore morae and costs of suit.

Order granted.

SHARP V. HADDOCK.

Mr. Smith moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £21, being rent for a certain shop, less £10 paid on account.

Order granted.

VAN DER BYL AND CO. V. EBRAHIM.

Mr. Smith moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £633 14s., less £73 paid on account, of the purchase price of goods sold and delivered, and also for the sum of £35 11s. 8d., being the balance of an account for goods sold and delivered, with interest on £669 5s. 8d. at 8 per cent., less a rebate of £2 3s. 6d. and the £73 paid on account.

Order granted.

WIENER AND CO. LTD. V. SCHOCHER.

Mr. Smith moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £121 4s. 4d., for goods sold and delivered, with interest a tempore morae, and costs of suit.

Order granted.

ALLIE AND ANOTHER V. O'DOWD.

Mr. Benjamin moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £13, for rent due.

Order granted.

WATERMEYER V. LOUW.

Mr. Buchanan moved for judgment in default of plea for £60 for rent on a certain farm let to the defendant.

Order granted.

CAPE TOWN TOWN COUNCIL V. VAN DYK

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £35 14s. 5d., being the balance of rates and taxes and costs of suit.

Order granted.

FAIRBRIDGE AND ANOTHER V. PETHEL.

Mr. Rainsford moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £31 15s., with interest a tempore morae and costs of suit.

Order granted.

LYONS V. THORNTON.

Mr. Rainsford moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for the sum of £30, being rent due, and costs of suit.

Order granted.

ZEEDERBERG AND DUNCAN V. LEWIS.

Mr. Buchanan moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £35, being the price of goods sold and delivered.

Order granted.

ESTATE HATTINGH V. OELOFSE AND ESTATE OPPERMAN V. OELOFSE.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C., moved in these matters for an order setting aside certain transfers, and placing them in the names of the trustees.

Judgment in terms of the consent paper.

TOWN COUNCIL V. SOEKER.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for the sum of £15 12s. 10d. for rates, and 4s. 10d. for water supply, with costs.

Order granted.

TOWN COUNCIL V. ADAMS.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £6 15s., for water supply, with costs.

Order granted.

CAPE TOWN TOWN COUNCIL V. ARON.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for costs since the issue of summons.

Order granted.

FARMERS' COMPANY V. HOWLETT AND ANOTHER.

Mr. Upington moved for an order in default of plea compelling the defendant to render a full and fair account of a certain transaction, in which the defendant undertook to sell a quantity of potatoes on commission, had sold the potatoes, and had rendered no account.

Order granted, account to be rendered this day month.

BOYCE V. PAUL AND OTHERS.

Mr. Rowson moved for judgment for the sum of £31 18s. 1d., which was made up of £22 2s. 1d., judgment and taxed costs obtained in the R.M.'s Court. There were also fees and disbursements in respect of a mortgage.

Order granted.

BANK OF AFRICA V. COHEN AND OTHERS.

Mr. Searle, K.C., moved for judgment in default of plea. The third defendant in the case signed a certain guarantee, on which the Bank sued for £298 4s. 1d., with interest at 8 per cent. The first two defendants were sued for 6 per cent., and now judgment was asked against the third defendant at the rate of 7 per cent. on all the guarantees. The third defendant had engaged to pay the amount by instalments of £75.

Order granted.

DE WAAL AND CO. V. DU TOIT.

Mr. De Waal moved, under Rule 329d, for judgment for £15 16s. 8d., balance due on goods sold and delivered, with interest a tempore morae.

Order granted.

REHABILITATIONS. { 1903. Dec. 15th.

Mr. De Waal moved for the rehabilitation of Frederick Albertus de Meillon, whose estate disclosed a deficiency of over £3,000. The trustee complained of the insolvent's abandonment of his farms and his mysterious absence for a while. Insolvent afterwards made his appearance at Victoria West, and, on being served with notice to attend a third meeting of creditors, he went away to Kimberley, and had not since been heard of. The sequestration was dated 1879.

Granted.

Mr. Sutton moved for the rehabilitation of Maria Elizabeth du Plessis, in whose estate no dividend was paid.

Granted.

Mr. Buchanan moved for the rehabilitation of J. G. A. Rawstone, of the firm of Rawstone and Leach. The trustee's report was only unfavourable with regard to Leach, though some complaint was made as to the books.

The Chief Justice said that no order would be granted at present, but leave would be given to apply again in three months.

Mr. C. W. de Villiers moved for the rehabilitation of Eduard Robinson, whose estate was sequestrated previous to July, 1899.

Granted.

Mr. C. W. de Villiers moved for the rehabilitation of Johan David Gerhardus Robinson, brother and partner of the previous applicant.

Granted.

Mr. Alexander moved for the rehabilitation of Johannes Francois Marais

Granted

Mr. M. Bisset moved for the rehabilitation of Johannes Christian Henning.

Granted.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

SWANEPOEL V. SWANEPOEL. { 1903. Dec. 15th

Mr. C. W. de Villiers moved for a decree of divorce with custody of the children and forfeiture of the benefits of the marriage, in default of defendant's compliance with an order to restore conjugal rights.

Decree granted as prayed.

DE KOCK V. DE KOCK.

Mr. Buchanan moved for a decree of divorce, in default of defendant's compliance with an order to restore conjugal rights.

Decree granted.

DE VILLE V. DE VILLE.

Mr. Russell moved for a decree of divorce, with right of access to the child of the marriage, in default of the wife's compliance with a rule calling upon her to return to or receive the plaintiff.

The Chief Justice said that the Court could only make the rule absolute, and they could make no order as to access without a further application.

Order accordingly.

Ex parte MEINTJES.

Mr. De Waal moved for a rule nisi under the Derelict Lands Act to be made absolute.

Order granted.

Ex parte SMUTS.

Mr. C. W. de Villiers moved for a rule nisi under the Derelict Lands Act to be made absolute.

Order granted.

Ex parte JOUBERT.

Mr. Russell moved for a rule nisi under the Derelict Lands Act to be made absolute.

Order granted, subject to production of the proper papers.

Ex parte ESTERHUIZEN.

Mr. Smith moved for a rule nisi under the Derelict Lands Act to be made absolute.

Order granted.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Chief Justice, the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.), and the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

GENERAL MOTIONS.

DALVI AND ANOTHER v. AHMED. { 1903. Dec. 16th.

Ejectment — Motion — Rights of partners.

This was an application for a writ of restitution made by Ibraim Baba Dalvi and Sheik Ahamed Jaffer against Shaik Ahmed, in respect of the shop No. 75, Rochester-road, Salt River.

An order had been granted in Chambers restraining the respondent from parting or in any way dealing, by selling or otherwise, with the goods in the said shop, and furthermore interdicting him from paying over to one Mahomed Agmoedim such balance as may still be due in respect of the sale of the goodwill, etc., to Ahmed.

The applicants, in their affidavits, stated that in September last they entered into partnership with Mohamed Agmoedim to carry on business as shopkeepers at Salt River. Two shops were opened—21 and 75, Rochester-road. Applicants had been forcibly ejected from the premises in favour of the respondent, who said that he had purchased the goodwill and stock of the shop from Mohamed Agmoedim for £98. The deed of partnership contained a clause to the effect that none of the partners could deal with the business without the consent of the others. Deponents believed that Agmoedim's object was to defraud them of the proceeds of the shop.

The affidavit of Mahomed Agmoedim said that he purchased the goodwill and stock in the shop from Ibraim Noradem, on the 24th August, 1903. He paid £93 for the goodwill and stock. The rent was paid by witness. He sold the goodwill and stock to Shaik Ahmed for £98 9s. 8½d. He denied that he ever entered into a partnership with the applicants. The signature to the agreement purporting to be his was not his.

The affidavit of Shaik Ahmed supported the preceding affidavit as to the sale from Agmoedim to himself.

The affidavit of Ibraim Noradem said that he sold the goodwill and stock to Mahomed Agmoedim, who represented that he was acting for himself and the two applicants. Counsel also read affidavits from two witnesses, who spoke to Agmoedim having been a signatory to the deed of partnership.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers for applicants; Mr. McGregor for respondent.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers submitted that on the affidavits he had clearly shown that there was a partnership between the applicants and Mahomed Agmoedim. Agmoedim had signed documents, which had been brought into the case first under one name, and then under another, and finally he seemed to have forgotten how to sign and he made a cross. Counsel contended that the applicants had been forcibly ejected, and they were entitled to restitution on the ground of spoliation.

Mr. McGregor: See Story, Section 94, as to sale of moveables by a partner. In Section 95 he cites Roman Law authorities, but our law does not quite coincide with Roman Law on this point. See also Section 101. As to the rights of Partners, see Kent (par. 102, p. 172). Here there was an extension of the partnership to sell goods from two shops. But that was not equivalent to an assignment of the entire business, but only of the goodwill of the one shop. If the entire control of a business is left to one man he must be held responsible, and the interests of the innocent purchaser must be protected. The licence in respect of No. 75, Rochester-road was taken out only in the name of Mahomed Agmoedin, and he was held out by the partnership as having full authority to dispose of this shop. Even the last month's bills paid for the shop show that Agmoedin was the responsible owner. I therefore submit that this is not a case to which the Mandament van Spolie applies.

[De Villiers, C.J.: If he gives security he might remain in possession of the shop.]

I think the partner would be able to give security.

Mr. De Villiers (in reply): English law as to holding over is very stringent. See Lindley on Partnership (p. 133, 6th edition). A partnership is not bound if a stranger deals with a partner not knowing him to be a partner. In this case one of the chief witnesses to the partnership and to the violent ejectment is a policeman, whom we cannot identify unless a muster of the entire force of the Cape District Police should be held, and it is practically impossible to obtain this.

De Villiers, C.J.: It is sought by motion to eject the respondent Shaik from the premises in question. The practice of the Court has been where a clear case has been made out to grant an order for ejectment, even on motion, but the case should be perfectly clear. In the present instance, the case is not so clear as to justify the Court in granting an order on motion. It is said that there has been conduct on the part of the respondent equivalent to spoliation. There is no evidence at all of spoliation on his part. He accompanied Agmoedim to the shop, and according to his statement, the person whom he found in the shop was quite willing to allow him to go into possession. On behalf of the applicant, it is stated that they were forcibly dispossessed, but the terms in which they state that are very vague. They say that the respondent was accompanied by a policeman, whom they would be able to identify. Well, why not identify him? I suppose the policeman is there still; the police force at Woodstock is not so large that they would not be able to find out who was the policeman who accompanied the respondent. There is a total absence of proof on their part that there was this spoliation, which is relied upon. In regard to the general question which has been argued, I certainly think that the weight of evidence is in favour of the existence of the partnership, and I am not at all prepared to accept the view urged by Mr. McGregor that one of three or four persons for the purpose of carrying on a business is justified in selling the whole of that business, including the goodwill and everything else, and it would, in my opinion, make no difference that there were two shops under the control of the partnership; there would be no right on the part of one partner to sell one of those shops. As it is put by Lindley in his work on Partnership: "Whatever is usual may be done by one of the partners, but certainly not what is unusual in the course of business." But the difficulty in this case is that, as far as one can judge from these affidavits, the applicants held out Agmoedim as the sole owner, and if the Shaik believed that the man was the sole owner, and dealt with him, then the question may arise now whether the applicants would be entitled to an order of ejectment. But the Court will not prejudge that matter; the question must be decided by action. There will be no order on the motion for ejectment, applicants to proceed by action, and pending such action, the Court grants an interdict restraining the respondent from dealing with any of the goods in the shop, or from paying out to Agmoedim any portion of the purchase price of the shop, unless he shall give security to the satisfaction of the Registrar for the sum of £100 and for the costs of any action to be brought by the applicants, applicants to go to trial during the February term, and costs of these motions to be costs in the cause.

Ex parte MABUYA. { 1903. Dec. 16th. „ 18th.

This was an application to have a rule nisi under the Derelict Lands Act made absolute. Mr. Close was for the petitioner, and Mr. Benjamin appeared for one Julius Hillner to oppose.

Mr. Close said that the first rule granted in connection with the matter was on 24th October, 1903, calling on all persons to show cause why a rule nisi should not be granted authorising transfer in favour of the petitioner of certain lots 19 and 34 in Stutterheim; and the second rule called upon his client to appear to show cause why transfer should not be restrained, pending a further order of Court in respect of lot 106. Upon the 15th April this year a rule was granted upon the petition of Mark Mabuya for title under the Derelict Lands Act, and was published in due form. That was in respect of a large number of lots. The applicant had been in possession in most cases for over thirty years, and in the others for seventeen years or more. On that date Mr. Buchanan appeared in respect of lots 33 and 106, to oppose transfer on behalf of the heir of one Moss, who was stated in the petition to be the registered owner of 33 and 106, and in that case the Court came to the conclusion that the petitioner was entitled to the order asked for, and made the rule absolute in respect of all the lots mentioned in that particular rule. On this order of the Court being proceeded with, the Registrar of Deeds at King William's Town discovered that certain lots were registered in the names of persons other than those described in the petition. There appeared to be some difficulty about the mode of discovering matters of this kind at King William's Town. Then the Registrar wrote a letter on the 3rd June, and on the strength of that letter, application was made to this Court. On the 24th October an amended petition was filed with the Court, and an application made and order granted. That order authorised the registration under the Act of lots 19 and 34, after the Court's attention had been drawn to the discrepancies that existed, so that those lots were for a second time confirmed in the name of the petitioner. He hoped the Court would permit him to make a correction of that statement. Republication was ordered in respect of lots 19 and 34, and it was lots 32, 33, and 106 that were confirmed. His learned friend (Mr. Benjamin) now appeared in respect to lot 106. There was an allegation made in the petition which he had filed, to the effect that his attention had been called to the rule granted on the 24th October, to the effect that lot 106 was his property, having been purchased by him from the original grantee, by whom it was transferred through the Registrar at King William's Town in 1865. He said that the land was still registered in his name. He had since been informed that this said piece of land was in 1881 again transferred by the original owner Hartz to one Moss. It appeared that in respect of this particular lot there had been double transfer registered in the Deeds Office at King William's Town. It appeared that the grantee sold the property in the first instance to Julius Hillner on the 10th August, 1863, and transfer was passed on the 2nd October, 1865.

[De Villiers C.J.: If once ownership has gone out of the original owner to Hillner, how can there be a second transfer?]

The mere fact of property being registered in the name of a person does not establish transfer, because it might have been registered under some agreement which might never have been carried out.

[De Villiers, C.J.: The transfer stands, and until it is set aside, it is good, and it holds good against all subsequent purchases.]

My client has been in possession of the property for seventeen years, and has paid rent and taxes, and he is still the person in possession.

[De Villiers, C.J.: But you have not had thirty years' possession.]

Mr. Close said he claimed transfer because the person who gave his client the right was the registered owner, and prima facie he contended that he was just as much entitled to the land as the other man.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Surely not; he is the later transferee from a person who has no property.]

Mr. Close said he quite appreciated the force of that answer. He was driven then to this point that the matter was one which was res judicata.

Mr. Benjamin submitted that an error of fact had been committed, and that it was competent for the Court to amend that error.

De Villiers, C.J., said that the Court would like an opportunity of looking into the papers, and seeing whether there was any way of settling the matter without putting these unfortunate people to further expense.

Postea (December 18):

De Villiers, C.J., asked if counsel had ascertained the value of the property that was in dispute, viz., lot 106.

Mr. Benjamin (who appeared for the respondent Hillner) said his learned friend, Mr. Close, appeared for the petitioner, and he (Mr. Benjamin) was unable to say what the value was.

De Villiers, C.J.: He suggested on the last occasion that the Court should order pleadings to be filed. There is no opposition in regard to the other two lots, I suppose?

Mr. Benjamin: Not on the part of this respondent. He only opposes in regard to lot 106.

De Villiers, C.J.: As to Lots 32 and 33, the rule nisi will be made absolute; as to Lot 106, the rule must be discharged. It would appear that there had been a previous rule applying to 106, and the Court had made that rule absolute, but subsequently, when the matter was again mentioned in the Court, with the consent of all parties, including the applicant, a fresh rule was issued, applying also to 106. I take it that this amounted to a consent that the previous order should not be treated as binding on the parties, on the ground that no notice had reached the respondent Hillner to enable him to oppose the rule being made absolute. There was no opposition at the time to a fresh rule being issued, and that practically amounted to an abandonment of any right under the previous rule. Notice has been given in terms of the order as to rule 106, and thereupon the respondent Hillner appeared to object to the rule as to 106 being made absolute. The statement made—and it is uncontradicted—was that the property stands registered in the name of Hillner, and that the transfer to his predecessor in title was made before its transfer to the persons in whose name the transfer is now made. It is clear, therefore, that Hillner has a prior claim to this property. It is suggested that it might perhaps be shown that Hillner is not entitled to retain the transfer, but there is no ground stated for this suggestion. So far as appears, Hillner is the registered proprietor, and there is nothing to show that the applicant has a prior right; but, on the contrary, there is everything to show that it is Hillner who has a prior right to the property. The rule, therefore, as to 106 will be discharged, with costs.

Mr. Benjamin applied for costs for the application for an interdict against Mabuya.

De Villiers, C.J.: I think that the costs would fairly include the costs of the interdict.

Ex parte BRISTER.

Mr. Buchanan applied to have a rule made absolute, calling upon all persons interested to show cause by the 12th December why a certified copy of a certain bond should not be issued as prayed.

Rule made absolute.

Ex parte SIPIKA.

Mr. Russell moved to make absolute a rule granted on October 23, calling on all persons interested to show cause why certain lots of ground should not be transferred in the name of the petitioner. The land in question was registered in the name of the petitioner's father.

Rule made absolute.

Ex parte DU PLESSIS. { 1903. Dec. 16th. „ 18th.

Will—Distribution of estate—Life-usufruct of surviving spouse.

Mr. Burton moved for leave to the executors testamentary to pay out at once certain money to the heirs of the estate. A certain farm was bequeathed in the will to the children, but they were not to have any claim on it until the death of the survivor. A bondholder had called up his bond, and the realisation of the farm left a large sum of money in the hands of the executors, and the survivor had executed a deed of renunciation of her rights. There was another piece of ground, and the executors now asked that they might be allowed to dispose of it, and distribute the proceeds. The Master's report pointed out the clause in the will, but he did not oppose the proposal.

De Villiers, C.J., said that the Court would like to take time to read over the papers in connection with the case.

Postea (December 18):

De Villiers, C.J., said there was a difficulty in ordering the money to be paid at once to the children, as desired. The money was not to be paid until the death of the survivor.

Mr. Burton (for the petitioner): Yes, so the will says.

De Villiers, C.J.: Well, then, how can the Court make any order contrary to the terms of the will?

Mr. Burton said that all he could urge upon the Court with regard to the vesting of the property was that it would appear that there was, in the first place, a clear pre-legacy or bequest to the children of the property. The position he put before them on behalf of the executors, who were the applicants, was that they came before the Court representing the estate, and the executrix —who was the person on whose behalf these clauses postponing enjoyment were made in the will—had herself executed a deed of renunciation of all her rights.

The will merely postpones the enjoyment of the bequest. The direct legatee was the surviving parent, and the children came in only by representation.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Should the mother die before the children, what would be the position of the children?]

Their rights depend upon the rights of the mother. In the case of Schoombie v. Olivier (8, C.T.R., 196), the Court refused to authorize the distribution of the estate before the time fixed by the will; that I grant. The sale of the piece of Government ground in this case stands upon quite a different footing from that of the rest of the property.

Mr. C. W. de Villiers (as representing the minor) stated that he did not oppose the application.

De Villiers, C.J.: The Court will order that the proceeds of the farm Zuurfontein be deposited with the Graaff-Reinet Board of Executors, to be administered by such company in terms of the will, subject to the life usufruct of the survivor. As to the Government ground, the Court will make an order in terms of the Master's report.

[Applicant's Attorney: S. Mostert.]

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.), and the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

GENERAL MOTIONS.

SEKELINI V. SEKELINI. { 1903. Dec. 17th.

This was a motion for an order declaring the applicant entitled to certain property. Mr. Schreiner, K.C., was for the applicant, Mr. Upington for the executors, and Mr. Buchanan for the curator ad litem of the minor.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Will this matter take long?]

Mr. Schreiner said he thought it would.

[De Villiers, C.J.: I think it had better stand over.]

Mr. Schreiner said that he did not think a postponement to the 1st February would interfere with the course of justice. He did not know of any urgent reason why the case should be heard now.

Mr. Upington agreed that there would be no injustice if the case stood over.

Mr. Buchanan had no objection to the case standing over.

The case was ordered to stand over until the February term.

Ex parte THE LIQUIDATORS OF THE SOUTH AFRICAN NATURAL MINERAL WATER CO.

Mr. Searle, K.C., moved for a rule nisi to be made absolute for the cancellation of a certain sale of property. Publication of notice had been given as directed.

Rule made final accordingly.

SWEETNAM V. QUIN.

Mr. Benjamin moved for an order for the removal of the respondent Joseph Quin from his appointment as one of the executors testamentary in the estate of the petitioner's father, and also for the payment of costs of this application. The petitioner stated that he was appointed co-executor with his mother and the respondent in the estate of his father, the late James Sweetnam, in the district of Fort Beaufort. His mother was left in possession of the estate. It was not to be administered until her death, which took place in August, 1902. Before her decease the said Quin had left this colony, and had taken up his residence in the Transvaal. The respondent had been requested to assist in the administration of the estate, but he had come in an intoxicated state, and he was unfit to transact business. He had rendered the applicant no assistance, and had manifested no interest in the estate. Petitioner was informed that he was now resident in Johannesburg. A second liquidation and distribution account had been called up, but the Master would not pass it without Quin's signature.

Order granted as prayed.

Ex parte VAN DER WALT.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved for leave to the petitioner to take transfer of certain property in the estate of one John Albert Sweegers, in the district of Hope Town, of which he was co-executor. Petitioner and another person bought for £1,000 a third share in certain farms belonging to the estate, and they subsequently purchased the remaining two-thirds at public auction for £2,925. The Registrar of Deeds in Cape Town declined to register the transfer, on the ground that the petitioner, in his capacity as executor, was seeking transfer to himself in his private capacity, unless the Court first granted an order.

Order granted as prayed.

ALLIE V. HADIE.

Mr. Benjamin moved to make final a rule nisi, granted on the 27th November, restraining Messrs. Arderne and Wolfe from parting with the balance of the purchase price of certain property transferred by them on behalf of the respondent, pending the result of an action about to be instituted by the applicant against the respondent, claiming £325 upon and by virtue of a promissory note and £188 15s. lent to the defendant, rule operating as an interdict in the meantime. Mr. Benjamin said that the only question between the parties at the present stage was the amount to be interdicted. Counsel suggested that the amount, in order to cover the claim and the costs, should be £650.

Mr. McGregor, for the respondent, urged that a sum of £600 would be sufficient.

Rule made absolute, the conveyancers to retain in their hands £650 to meet the demand and costs, costs to be costs in the cause.

STAUDE V. STAUDE.

Mr. Russell moved on behalf of the petitioner (the wife) for leave to sue her husband by edictal citation for restitution of conjugal rights, or failing compliance, for divorce on the ground of malicious desertion. The parties, it appeared were married in community of property at King William's Town, and in August, 1902, the defendant went away to East London, and was now believed to be in Pretoria. He said at the time he left that he was going to Beira. He had not since contributed to the petitioner's support.

Leave granted, citation to be returnable on the 1st February, personal service to be effected.

RETIEF V. RETIEF.

Mr. M. Bisset moved on behalf of the petitioner (the wife) for leave to sue her husband in forma pauperis. Her husband, petitioner said, had been convicted of the crime of bigamy in the district of Swellendam.

De Villiers, C.J. (to Mr. Bisset): Will you take the reference in this matter?

Mr. Bisset consented.

HALL V. HALL.

Mr. De Waal moved on behalf of the petitioner (the wife) for leave to sue her husband by edictal citation for restitution of conjugal rights, failing that, divorce on the ground of malicious desertion. The petitioner said that she was married to the respondent, Sidney Evan Hall, at Sea Point, in community of property. A month after their marriage, the petitioner discovered that her husband was wholly unable to support her, and she joined the nursing staff of the Somerset Hospital. He visited her on several occasions in a drunken state, and asked her for money, which she gave to him out of her earnings. Thereafter, she informed her husband that she did not intend to support him any longer. He then joined the Army Service Corps, and left Cape Town in June, 1902, since which date petitioner had not seen or heard from him. She had since received information that he was in Johannesburg, but she was not certain that he was still there.

Leave granted, citation to be returnable on the 1st February, personal service to be effected.

Ex parte WILSON.

Mr. Searle, K.C., said he had to ask that a certain undertaking signed by the defendant and his attorney with the indorsement of the applicant's attorney, be filed with the Registrar, in which he undertook to pay over a certain sum of money to the applicant's agent, without prejudice to the rights of either party in an arbitration now pending. It was desired that this undertaking should be made a rule of Court.

Mr. Upington (for the defendant) assented.

Order granted as prayed.

ESTATE MARSH V. SAVAGE.

Mr. Rainsford moved on behalf of the Rev. Thomas Edward Marsh, as executor of the late William Marsh, for leave to sue Kate Savage, widow, by edictal citation, in respect of a mortgage bond for £900, due by reason of the non-payment of interest. Petitioner was not acquainted with the whereabouts of the respondent.

Leave granted, citation to be returnable on the 1st February, one publication to be made in a Cape Town newspaper.

Ex parte ODENDAAL.

Mr. Pyemont moved for leave to the petitioner to sell the share of his two minor children in certain landed property, bequeathed to them. The Master, while approving the application, recommended that the proceeds of the sale should be paid into the Guardians' Fund.

Order granted in terms of the Master's report.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.), and the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

Ex parte EITNER. { 1903. Dec. 18th.

Mr. De Waal moved on behalf of the petitioner, as representing a minor, for leave to sell certain property, the proceeds to be paid into the Guardians' Fund.

Order granted as prayed.

Ex parte DE WET.

Gift to minor child—Revocation of gift.

W. had made a donation of £200 to a minor son and secured the money by lending it on mortgage. W. had to borrow the £200, which he subsequently repaid. The mortgage was in the son's name. W. now applied for an order, authorizing him as natural guardian of his son to cancel the said mortgage.

The Court refused the order.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved for the cancellation of a certain mortgage bond. The petitioner is the father and natural guardian of Nathaniel Jacobus de Wet, aged 12 years. He had had an intention of investing a sum of £200 for the benefit of his son, and had thereupon lent £200 to one Joseph Johannes le Roux upon mortgage upon certain land. After passing the bond, the petitioner found that he was not in a position to make the provision that he proposed, and he had to borrow £200 in order to complete the mortgage. The mortgage to Le Roux was made in favour of the petitioner's son. Petitioner had now repaid the money that he had borrowed, and he desired to cancel the mortgage bond that he issued to Le Roux, as he found that, through severe losses during the war, he was unable to carry out his original intention towards his son. He asked for an order of Court authorising him to cancel the said mortgage bond. The Master had seen the petition, but had made no report.

[De Villiers, C.J.: From whom did he borrow the money?]

I don't know.

[De Villiers, C.J.: No; we want a little more information.]

I submit that it is not very material from whom he borrowed the money.

[De Villiers, C.J.: It might not be very material if the whole thing were bona fide and above board. I should like to know from whom he did borrow. Did he borrow it from his son?]

He is a man without property altogether.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Then what business has he to make a gift of £200 to his son?]

He suffered great losses on account of the war.

[De Villiers, C.J.: But when he makes the gift, he has no property, and he has to borrow the money in order to make the gift to his son, and then this bond is made in favour of his son. It is a most extraordinary bit of business, and is quite unintelligible to me. There is apparently something behind it. Why do you come to Court now?]

We can cancel the bond as the natural guardian on behalf of the minor son, but we cannot be said to be cancelling it on behalf of the minor, seeing that we are cancelling it on our own behalf. The debtor who passed the bond has paid it back to the father, and the father has paid it to the man from whom he borrowed it, so that the gift of £200 was never in existence at all.

[De Villiers, C.J.: The petitioner has got himself into this fix, and he must try and get out as best he may.]

He can cancel the bond as natural guardian.

De Villiers, C.J.: Then let him do so. If he wished to make this arrangement, then he must try and get out of it as he can. There will be no order.

[Applicant's Attorneys: Dempers and Van Ryneveld.]

ESTATE BASSON V. UNION ASSURANCE CO.—ESTATE BASSON V. LAW ACCIDENT INSURANCE SOCIETY.

Mr. Searle, K.C. (with him Mr. Benjamin and Mr. M. Bisset) moved for leave to appeal to the Privy Council against the judgments of this Court in the recent actions arising out of the drowning of the plaintiff's son, Jasper Basson, at Gordon's Bay.

Mr. Burton (with him Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers), on behalf of the plaintiff in the actions, said he raised no objection, provided the usual conditions as to the execution and security were complied with.

Leave granted on the usual conditions.

HUTTON V. STRYDOM.

Mr. Buchanan moved for leave to sue the defendant on a mortgage bond for £400, passed on the 1st November, 1897, due and payable by reason of the non-payment of interest, and for the attachment of the property specially hypothecated ad fundandam jurisdictionem, the defendant, who was formerly a farmer in the district of Vryburg, being now resident at Klerksdorp, Transvaal.

Leave granted, citation to be returnable on the 1st February, personal service to be effected, and the property specially hypothecated to be attached as prayed.

Ex parte DON.

Mr. De Waal moved on behalf of the petitioner, Eliza Jane Don (born Mitchell), for leave to sell certain property without the assistance of her husband, Alexander Don, to whom she was married in community at Kimberley. There were born of the marriage four children. After the first few years the respondent gave way to intemperate habits, and ill-treated the petitioner, with the result that in June, 1898, they mutually decided to separate, and from thenceforth they had lived apart. Respondent had not contributed anything since June, 1898, towards the support of petitioner and the children. The latest information that she had as to his whereabouts was that he was at Port Elizabeth about twelve months ago. Under the will of her father, she had had certain property at Port Elizabeth bequeathed to her, and as she was living in the Cape Peninsula she desired to have power to sell the said property by public auction, and to invest the money in property in the Cape Peninsula.

Mr. Benjamin (for the respondent) read the latter's affidavit, in which he claimed one-half share of the proceeds of the sale of the property by virtue of the community of property. He had never been asked for leave to sell or transfer the said property, but he had no objection to the sale and transfer, provided he was duly secured as to one-half of the proceeds. It was not true that they had been living apart since June, 1898, as he lived with his wife until June, 1902.

Mr. De Waal read a replying affidavit by the petitioner, who said that it was true that she had not asked her husband's assistance to the documents, because she had been unacquainted with his whereabouts. It would be doubly hard upon the deponent if her husband were allowed one-half of the proceeds, as he had not contributed to the support of applicant and her children during the last five years. She had no intention of living again with the applicant.

De Villiers, C.J., asked if the petitioner had applied to the Court at any time for maintenance from her husband.

Mr. De Waal said he believed that she had not.

Counsel having been heard in argument on the facts,

De Villiers, C.J.: I think that the sale should proceed as proposed, and that half of the proceeds should be paid to the Registrar of the Supreme Court, to be held by him pending a further order of Court.

Ex parte EINTRACHT AND ANOTHER.

Mr. De Waal moved on behalf of the petitioner, who was the executor thorising the completion of an ante-nuptial contract. The petitioners, it appeared, were married at the Jewish Synagogue, Gardens, Cape Town, on the 22nd November, 1903, and had signed an antenuptial contract prior to the ceremony, but had neglected to obtain witnesses.

Order granted as prayed.

Ex parte ELLIOTT.

Mr. Benjamin moved on behalf of the petitioned, who was an executor under a will disposing of a certain estate, for the appointment of a curator ad litem to certain minors in the estate. The executor proposed to submit a special case with a view of interpreting the will.

Order granted as prayed, Mr. Advocate Buchanan being appointed curator ad litem.

Ex parte MEYER.

Mr. Russell moved for an order authorising the petitioner (the second son) to assist his father, Hendrik Jeremias Meyer, in the negotiations for the division of certain property in which he was interested. The petitioner's father, it was stated, was not of sufficiently strong intellect to enable him to transact business, and for that reason he had already been removed from the executorship of the estate.

De Villiers, C.J.: The Court will grant a rule calling upon Hendrik Jeremias Meyer to show cause on the 1st February why he shall not be declared incapable of managing his own affairs, and why the petitioner shall not be appointed curator bonis, rule to be served on the said Hendrik Jeremias Meyer and his eldest son, if the latter be in the Colony, the petitioner to be authorised in the meantime to act as curator bonis.

HARRISON V. HARRISON.

Mr. Benjamin moved for a fresh order as to the service of citation. The petitioner, it appeared, had obtained leave from the Court to sue her husband by edictal citation for restitution of conjugal rights, or in the alternative, for divorce; but the Court directed that the citation was to be served personally on the defendant, who was believed to be at Aldershot, England, and to be a member of the Royal Army Medical Corps. Inquiries by petitioner's legal representatives in England elicited the information that the defendant deserted from the R.A.M.C. on the 27th August, 1900, and had not since been heard of by the authorities.

An order was granted authorising substituted service, one publication to be given in the London "Daily Telegraph," citation to be returnable on the 1st day of the May term.

Ex parte NBULEKAZI.

Mr. Benjamin moved for an order for the seizure of certain cattle and sheep, in default of the respondents' compliance with a rule issued by the Court directing them to restore possession to the petitioner of the said stock, pending an action to be brought by her in the Court of the Resident Magistrate at Herschel. The petitioner alleged that the respondents, who were brothers of her late husband, took the cattle by spoliation, that they had disregarded the order of Court to reinvest her with possession, and she now asked that the Chief Constable or the Messenger of the Resident Magistrate's Court be directed to seize the said animals and hand them over to the applicant, pending the action.

Order granted as prayed, with costs, petitioner undertaking not to part with any of the cattle or sheep until her right to the same shall have been duly established by judgment of the Court below.

Ex parte SIMPSON AND ANOTHER.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for an order authorising the Registrar of Deeds to sanction the sale of certain property to the petitioner from an estate of which he was executor. The petitioner had bought the property by private treaty for £590.

Order granted as prayed.

KOENIG V. LANDESHUT.

Mr. M. Bisset moved for the appointment of a commission to take the evidence of the defendant on commission, as she was not likely to be fit to give evidence when the case came on for hearing in the February term.

Order granted as prayed, Mr. Advocate P. S. T. Jones to be commissioner, costs of the application to be costs in the cause.

Ex parte HURTER.

Mr. Benjamin moved for an order authorising the transfer of a certain piece of property at Somerset East, belonging to the estate of the late J. Hendrik Hurter, to the petitioner, who was executor. Petitioner and three others bought a farm for £2,030 at public auction, and petitioner proposed to take one-fourth share.

Order granted as prayed.

PASHA V. HADIEN.

Mr. Benjamin moved for the attachment of the defendant for contempt of Court, by reason of his failure to comply with the terms of an order of this Court, dated 12th October, 1903, by which he was required to give transfer to the plaintiff of certain property in Clifton-street, Cape Town, within one month.

Mr. Russell (who appeared for the Board of Executors) said that they had obtained provisional sentence against the defendant on a mortgage bond, and that certain property, including two pieces of land in Clifton-street, were attached by the Board. The land was now in the hands of the Master.

Defendant said that he had been ill for a period of four months, and that he was willing to pass transfer if given further time.

De Villiers, C.J., said that the Court would grant an extension of the time allowed for transfer until the 1st February.

STANDARD FLOUR MILLS V. COHEN.

Mr. Greer moved as a matter of urgency to make absolute a rule nisi restraining one Arendson from dealing with the goods of the defendant, G. Cohen, pending proceedings to be brought by the plaintiff for the compulsory sequestration of the defendant's estate.

Rule made absolute accordingly.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Chief Justice, the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.]

GENERAL MOTIONS.

LAW SOCIETY V. KRIGE. { 1903. Dec 19th.

Mr. Gardiner moved, on behalf of the Law Society, for the respondent, Evelyn William Krige, attorney and notary, of Ceres, to be removed from the rolls and to be ordered to place his certificate in the hands of the Registrar in consequence of his having recently been convicted of the crime of theft.

Mr. M. de Villiers, for the respondent, said he would ask his lordship to be as lenient as possible, and that he proposed to call his attention to certain previous cases. In one of these the attorney concerned was struck off the rolls for six months, with leave to apply for re-admission, and in another case the attorney concerned was suspended for a certain term. Counsel quoted the case of the Incorporated Law Society v. Lloyd (7 Cape Times Reports, p. 12). He went on to say that his lordship was, of course, aware of the facts, but there were certain uncontroverted points in connection with the case that he thought were of importance. The first was the youth of the attorney concerned in this case, Krige being a mere youth, who had been only admitted a few months when this occurrence took place. In the second place, he was in partnership with another attorney, in regard to whom his lordship said at the trial that the accused had had a very bad training indeed. The accused was, technically, found guilty of having misappropriated first a guinea, and, secondly, an amount of £5. He understood that his lordship took up the position that only half of these amounts had been misappropriated by the defendant, viz., 10s. 6d. and £2 10s. It was quite true that the defendant had conducted himself in a way that he ought not to have done, but, on the other hand, it was very difficult for such a young man, with these concomitant circumstances to withstand the influence brought to bear on him.

Mr. Gardiner said that this was a case of fraud practised on an ignorant man, a fraud which very possibly might not have been found out. It was the appropriation of client's money. The only palliation for the offence was the youth of the attorney in question. He submitted that although he might be a young man it was well that even young attorneys should be warned of the serious offence they had committed when they tampered with their clients' money.

De Villiers, C.J.: Under ordinary circumstances, the Court deals very severely with the attorneys who are guilty of anything in the way of embezzlement or defalcation. There are, however, certain circumstances in this case, which must induce the Court not to deal as severely with the respondent, as it otherwise would. He is only just of age, and the amount taken was very small indeed, and it was in consideration of these facts that the sentence passed was comparatively lenient. It is quite true also that I did state, when I passed sentence, that the accused had been in a very bad school, and being in that school at his age he was probably misled into doing a thing which he otherwise would not have done. I made that remark because of what was said by his partner in cross-examination. The admissions made by Krige's partner in cross-examination were such as to satisfy me that his partner was not a man who had any scruples in dealing with his clients. Under all the circumstances, therefore, I shall deal very leniently with the respondent, and order him to be suspended from practice for a period of six months, and to pay the costs of this application.

RUSSELL v. RUSSELL.

Mr. Rowson moved, on behalf of the petitioner, for leave to sue her husband, Charles Stewart Russell, by edictal citation for restitution of conjugal rights, failing which, divorce, by reason of his having deserted her in Cape Town in 1898. The parties, it appeared, were married in community at Johannesburg, and subsequently lived in Cape Town. In 1898 the defendant left petitioner to go to Beira, and his present whereabouts could not be ascertained.

Leave granted, citation to be returnable on the first day of the May term, personal service to be effected if possible, failing which one publication in a Beira newspaper and one in a Cape Town newspaper.

Ex parte BADENHORST.

Mr. C. W. de Villiers moved for the discharge of the petitioner from an order of Court appointing him to the office of curator bonis of his brother, Johannes Joseph Badenhorst, who had formerly been an inmate of the Valkenberg Asylum. The respondent had been discharged from the asylum, and had since been attending to his own affairs.

Order of release granted.

Ex parte HARDY AND INGGS.

Mr. Benjamin moved for an order appointing the petitioners liquidators of the Loyal Oak Lodge of Odd-Fellows at Uitenhage, an unregistered company, with unlimited liability, with full powers to wind up. The company had ceased to carry on business since 1885, and had for all practical purposes been non-existent. It now consisted of thirteen shareholders. It had been decided to sell the asset of the lodge, a piece of land at Uitenhage, for £700, to wind up the affairs of the company, and appoint the petitioners as liquidators. Counsel said the application was made under the Act 25 of 1892 (section 216).

The Chief Justice questioned whether the lodge could be called a company, and remarked that he supposed that next they would be asked to dissolve a lodge of Freemasons. He thought it would have been very well if counsel had considered the Cape Town Club case. No order would be made at present, but counsel might mention the matter again.

MAX V. MAX.

Mr. Alexander moved for the petitioner for leave to sue by edictal citation for divorce, on the ground of the defendant's adultery with one Mrs. Annie Simmonds, in the Transvaal and also at Bloemfontein, O.R.C., and for custody of the minor child of the marriage. It was stated that the parties were married in London, England, in 1894, and subsequently resided in Johannesburg and Cape Town. The respondent left the petitioner in December, 1902, and proceeded up-country in search of work, and had since lived at Bloemfontein with the said Simmonds.

Leave granted, citation to be returnable on the last day of February term, personal service to be effected.

ESTATE SCOTT V. SYDSERFF.

Mr. Gardiner moved for an order for the removal of the respondent from office as sole surviving executor testamentary in the estate of the late Alexander Scott, and for a meeting to be convened of the next of-kin to appoint someone to fill the office of executor dative. The respondent, it appeared, some time ago wrote to the Master stating that, owing to his advanced years, and the fact that he was living in the Orange River Colony, he wished to be released from the office. He took up the position that he had already, in consequence of that notice to the Master, ceased to be executor of the estate.

Order granted as prayed, costs to come out of the estate.

Ex parte WESSELS.

Mr. Gardiner moved for leave to sell certain property on behalf of a minor.

Order granted as prayed.

Ex parte MATTHEE.

Mr. Buchanan moved, on behalf of the petiitoner, who is executrix in her husband's estate, for leave to the Registrar of Deeds to pass transfer to her of certain property in the estate, which she had bought at public auction. The property consisted of two erven at Napier, left by the joint will of the parties to their two minor sons, and it appeared that the debts exceeded the amount of the value of the property.

Order granted as prayed.

Ex parte VAN WYK.

Mr. De Waal moved for leave to sell certain property in which minors were interested.

Order granted as prayed.

HYMAN V. HYMAN.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones applied for leave to extend the return day of a certain citation. He stated that they had now ascertained that the respondent was at Delagoa Bay, and they applied for leave to effect personal service, failing which, substituted service.

Return day extended to the first day of February term, personal service to be effected if possible, failing which, one publication in "O Futuro" and in a Cape Town newspaper.

Ex parte KNIGHT AND ANOTHER.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C., moved on behalf of petitioners, husband and wife, for leave to execute a post-nuptial contract. The petition stated that the parties were domiciled in this colony, and that they were married in England while on a visit to that country. They were informed at the time that it would not be necessary to execute an ante-nuptial contract to be married without community in England, but they had since found that they were misinformed, and they now applied for leave to execute a contract excluding community, and enabling the first-named petitioner to settle on the second-named petitioner £6,000.

Order granted as prayed, subject to an affidavit being filed showing that the settlement was agreed upon prior to marriage.

GRAHAM V. FIRTH.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C., moved for judgment on behalf of the defendant in default of proceeding with the action on the part of the plaintiff, and also asked for the discharge of a certain interdict granted on August 13.

De Villiers, C.J., said he was informed by the Registrar that notice had been given that the plaintiff had withdrawn the summons. There was a difficulty in signing judgment upon proceedings which had been withdrawn.

The interdict was discharged, with costs, including costs of the present application, and the summons issued by plaintiff

---

Ex parte MYBURGH.

Mr. Gardiner moved, on behalf of the minor, for leave to sell, as co-legatee, certain shares in a farm.

Order granted as prayed.

Ex parte SMUTS.

Mr. M. Bisset moved, on behalf of the minor, for leave to raise £300 mortgage on certain property, in order to meet certain obligations due on the minor's share.

The Master's report was favourable.

Order granted in terms of the Master's report.

Ex parte NEL.

Mr. M. Bisset moved for the appointment of a curator ad litem to a minor, in order that the said minor should participate in arbitration going on in connection with certain property at Oudtshoorn. The matter had previously been before the Court, and his lordship had directed that a certificate should be obtained from the R.M. as to the fitness of the curator suggested. Certificate was now handed in.

Order granted as prayed.

Ex parte GRESSE.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for leave to raise a sum of £800 on mortgage bond to pay off certain promissory notes. The Master, in his report, recommended that the amount to be allowed should be £613 od l.

Order granted in terms of Master's report.

Ex parte THE AFRICAN MERCANTILE CO., LTD.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C., moved, as a matter of urgency, for the appointment of Mr. John Edwin Hall Close as sole liquidator in the matter of the voluntary winding up of the African Mercantile Company, Ltd., upon the dissolution of partnership in the firm of Gibson, Close and Co. Counsel said that the application was made under sections 186 and 189 of the Companies Act.

Order granted.

Ex parte THE SECRETARY OF THE GRIQUALAND WEST BOARD OF EXECUTORS.

Mr. McGregor moved, as a matter of urgency, for an order authorising the cancellation of a certain mortgage bond, or the issue of a certificated copy of the same for the purpose of having consent to cancellation endorsed thereon. The bond had been passed by one Brand upon a farm in the division of Worcester for £1,000 in favour of one Archibald Cochran, of Glasgow, Scotland, and formerly of Kimberley, whose power of attorney was held by the petitioner. The mortgagor desired to pay off the bond, but the document seemed to have been lost or mislaid, and no trace of it could be obtained.

A rule was granted calling upon all concerned to show cause on the 12th January why an order should not be granted as prayed, rule to be published once in a Cape Town English newspaper and once in a Dutch newspaper,

Re THE WORCESTER BUTCHERY CO.

Mr. Buchanan presented the second report of the liquidator, from which it appeared that the receipts up to the present were £1,600 5s., and the payments £804 5s. 11d., leaving a sum of £845 odd available for distribution. Counsel moved for an order authorising the payment of a dividend of 5s. 6d. in the £, and fixing the remuneration payable to the liquidator.

Order granted as prayed, liquidator to receive the usual remuneration.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon Sir J H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.), and the Hon. Mr. Justice KOTZE.]

ADMISSION. { 1903. Dec. 21st.

Mr. Buchanan moved for the admission of William Knox Baxter as an attorney-at-law and notary public.

Application granted and oaths administered.

APPEAL.

REX V. NEWMAN.

Liquor licence—Selling to native —Increase of penalty by Proclamation after issue of licence.

The applicant obtained a licence for the sale of liquor in a native territory subject to the Proclamation then in force, which prohibited the sale of liquor to natives, and the licence contained an indorsement to the effect that the sale of liquor to natives would subject him to a penalty of £50. After the date of the licence the Governor, by Proclamation, increased the penalty to £100.

Held, that the appellant, on conviction, was liable to the increased penalty.

This was an appeal against a conviction by the Resident Magistrate of Matatiele, for contravening section 30 of the Proclamation 104 of 1903. The accused, Arthur Charles Newman, was charged with wrongfully and unlawfully selling, giving, supplying, or delivering or causing to be sold, given, supplied, or delivered by Thomas Nolan, a barman in his employ, to a prohiibted person one bottle of brandy, to wit, one Jack, alias Katiba, a native, who was a prohibited person, as defined by section 37 of the Proclamation.

From the evidence for the prosecution in the Court below, it appeared that the accused was manager of the Royal Hotel, at Matatiele, during the absence of Mr. Payn. The native Jack, a detective in the employ of Charles Henry Forrester, acting inspector of licences, was sent by his master to purchase a bottle of brandy. The native was supplied with liquor by the barman, and he afterwards put the liquor into a bottle and took it to his master. The accused, who pleaded not guilty, was found guilty, and sentenced to a fine of £100, or in default, three months' imprisonment. In his evidence, Newman said that if Nolan had supplied liquor to natives, it was distinctly against his instructions.

The Magistrate made the following remarks at the end of the record: "Attention is invited to Proclamation No. 294 of 1902, and to the second paragraph of the preamble to Proclamation 104 of 1903. The Court considered the evidence of the witnesses for the prosecution sufficiently reliable to convict, the discrepancies in their evidence being of a trivial nature."

Mr. Benjamin for appellant; Mr. Joubert for the Crown.

Mr. Benjamin said that the prosecution was instituted under the provisions of Proclamation 104 of 1903. He thought the reason why the Magistrate called particular attention to the second paragraph of that Proclamation was that all licences previously issued were made subject to the provisions of this Proclamation.

De Villiers, C.J., remarked that it seemed odd that a man should pay for his licence under certain conditions and then the Governor should issue a Proclamation to make the conditions more onerous.

Mr. Joubert said that the licence was issued under the Proclamation 238 of 1902, but the penalty for supplying prohibited persons was the same in both Proclamations.

Mr. Benjamin said that the penalty provided in the licence was £50, or six months' imprisonment. There was also, however, the endorsement on the licence. The system under which the accused was prosecuted was the trapping system, and he wished to ask their lordships to very carefully consider the evidence that was given.

De Villiers, C.J., pointed out that one of the witnesses called for the defence was a Mr. Frank Payn, who seemed to have been getting his dinner at the hotel when the alleged offence was committed. If this Mr. Payn were the holder of the licence, and if the liquor had been supplied by Nolan, why should Newman have been prosecuted?

Mr. Benjamin said he was informed that Mr. Frank Payn was not the Mr. A F. Payn in whose name the licence had been issued. The manager was responsible for the acts of the barman. Counsel went on to urge that the trapping system was of a most objectionable character, and that if there were any discrepancies in the evidence the defendant should have the benefit of the doubt. The record, he added, did not seem to have been kept so well as it might have been [De Villiers, C.J.: You must take it that the evidence has been correctly taken down. You can only argue upon the record.]

Mr. Benjamin read the section defining prohibited persons, amongst those embraced being Basutos, Fingos, Natives of South and Central Africa, and Asiatics

[De Villiers, C.J.: And Chinese.]

Mr. Benjamin said he was not sure whether the Celestial was embraced, but he noticed that the provision was very sweeping—"and other Asiatics."

[De Villiers, C.J.: Very well, that would include Chinamen.]

Mr. Benjamin contended that the licence should not have been subject to more onerous conditions under a Proclamation issued subsequently to the licence being taken out. He submitted that it was not within the power of the Governor, in issuing this Proclamation to interfere with existing licences, and that such Proclamation should only apply to new licences issued subsequent to the Proclamation.

De Villiers, C.J., asked Mr. Joubert under what section the manager was held to be liable for the acts of the barman.

Mr. Joubert replied section 16 of the Proclamation 104 of 1903. Counsel went on to say that the point had not been raised now, which was raised in the Court below that Newman had specifically instructed Nolan not to sell to natives. If the Magistrate had found that Newman had given such instructions he (Mr. Joubert) thought that the accused would not have been convicted. If he had found that the sale had taken place in the teeth of the opposition of Newman, the Magistrate would probably have dismissed the case. That point, however, was not now raised. Counsel also addressed the Court in regard to the endorsement on the licence.

Mr. Benjamin, in reply, urged that if the Court were against him on the main question there were grounds for reducing the sentence.

De Villiers, C.J.: The main ground of appeal in the present case is that the evidence was not sufficient to justify a verdict of guilty. But, before considering the main defence, I may say a few words in regard to the preliminary objections which have been taken in this case. The first preliminary objection is as to the person by whom this offence is alleged to have been committed. Newman was the person who, under the Proclamation, which was in force at the time when the offence was committed, was authorised by the Magistrate, in the absence of the holder of the licence, to carry on the business, and he, therefore, under the 16th section of the Proclamation of 1903, became liable to all the duties, obligations, and penalties of the original holder of the licence. Payn was the original holder, but the accused now became liable to the same penalties to which the holder would have been liable. The sale, however, was not effected by the accused, but, apparently, by the barman employed by him, and if it had been proved that there was an express prohibition by the accused against the barman selling the liquor, then an important question would have arisen as to whether the accused could be held liable for the act of his servant committed against this express instruction. That question does now arise, because we must take it that the Magistrate disbelieved the statements made by the accused and by his barman as to such express prohibition. The Magistrate, apparently, did not believe the rest of their evidence as to the sale of the liquor to the native and I take it that the Magistrate must be taken to have disbelieved the statement made by them in regard to the prohibition. If there was no such prohibition no clear proof of such prohibition, then it is clear that the accused is the person who is now subject to the same penalties as the original holder. The sale took place by the hands of the barman, but we must take it that the accused was a party to that sale, and was aware of that sale. Then the next preliminary question raised is as to the amount of the penalty. It is said that under the licence, as originally issued, the penalty was to have been not exceeding £50, or six months' imprisonment. But upon the licence there is this endorsement: "This licence is issued subject to the provisions of Proclamation No. 238 of 1902, if such Proclamation shall have the force of law in this territory." By that Proclamation, the penalty is increased to £100, but it is said that it never became law in this territory, and therefore the case may be decided quite independently of that Proclamation of 1902. But, in point of fact, in 1903 a Proclamation was issued which seems to have taken the place of the Proclamation 238 of 1902, and the 30th section of this Proclamation of 1903 enacts that any person contravening this regulation, i.e., selling intoxicating liquors to natives without a proper permit, shall be liable, on conviction, for the first offence, to a penalty not exceeding £500. Now, in my opinion, it was in the power of the Governor by Proclamation to increase the penalties for contravening any condition of the licence. It is simply adding to the punishment, not adding a further condition to the licence, but adding to the punishment which might be inflicted for a contravention of any of the recognised conditions of the licence. The accused must be taken to have been aware of the existence of this Proclamation, and in spite of the knowledge which the law presumes, he chose to sell to a native. I think he must bear the consequences. The penalty, therefore, of £100 for the offence that was committed was a legal penalty. Coming then to the main question raised by counsel as to the evidence in this case, the Magistrate is the best judge as to the credibility of the witnesses. A native had been employed by the Inspector of Licences to go to the bar and purchase liquor. He was examined before going, and money was given to him. He was watched—closely watched—by the inspector; he was seen to go into the canteen, and he was seen to come out again, and the inspector lost sight of him for only half a minute, and when he came back he had in his possession a little bottle, in which he had put brandy which he had taken into his mouth, and he had no money. The money which he had been given was gone, and there was this brandy in the small bottle. The trap distinctly states that it was the barman who sold this liquor to him, and his evidence is corroborated by the fact that when he came to the inspector shortly afterwards, he had this little bottle with the brandy. There is no possibility suggested as to the man having been able to obtain this brandy elsewhere. He must have obtained it at that bar, and he could only have obtained it by purchasing. There is no trace of the money he had received, and therefore I think that the Magistrate properly disbelieved the barman and the accused himself as to the impossibility of this sale having taken place. Upon the merits, therefore, also I am of opinion that the accused should fail, and that the appeal must be dismissed.

Kotzé, J.: I am of the same opinion.

[Appellant's Attorneys: Findlay and Tait.]

REX V. TATE.

This was an appeal against a conviction by the Resident Magistrate of Knysna, under which the appellant, Peter Tate, had been sentenced to one month's imprisonment, with hard labour.

on a charge of having stolen a 9-carat gold buckle ring. The ground of appeal was that the conviction was not supported by the evidence given before the Court of the Resident Magistrate, and was contrary to law.

The evidence for the prosecution was to the effect that Solomon Saba, a hawker residing at Cape Town, went to Bracken Hill, with a box of jewellery, that the accused took out the ring and refused to return it, and wanted to fight the hawker. Accused went into the box, and emphatically denied that he stole the ring. He declared that he bought the ring (produced) at Sterkstroom. He admitted that he threatened to fight the hawker, but said it was because he had been falsely accused of stealing the ring.

Mr. Gardiner for the appellant; Mr. Joubert for the Crown.

Mr. Gardiner said that the case for the Crown depended entirely on the evidence of the hawker, and he submitted that it was unsafe to convict solely on the hawker's testimony. There was no evidence that the hawker had a buckle ring before going to this place. He contended that the Court, on the uncorroborated evidence of the hawker, ought not to have convicted the accused. There was some proof, at any rate, that a similar ring was bought by accused up-country.

Without calling upon Mr. Joubert,

De Villiers, C.J.: The case depends entirely upon the credibility of the hawker, Solomon Saba. He gives a detailed account of the circun stances under which he lost the ring. He said: "I had a box of jewellery with me when the accused came up and took a 9 carat gold buckle ring out of my box. He looked at it, but did not return it. I asked him to return the ring, when he took a Mizpah ring, and said that was the ring. I asked him several times for my ring, but he wanted to fight me." Here is an express statement that a gold buckle ring was taken out of the box by the accused, and not returned. There can be no mistake about this. It is suggested that the hawker should not be believed, but the Magistrate, who saw this witness, and heard him give his evidence, is the best judge as to his credibility. Then when we come to the evidence for the accused, we find that he attempted to prove that the ring which he had been seen wearing was a ring which he had previously bought at Sterkstroom, and the brother was called, who stated that the ring that had been bought at Sterkstroom had been worn by himself. "I have often been wearing it for a period of six months, and I wore it on my middle finger." There can be no mistake about the finger on which he wore it. Then he is asked to fit the ring on, and it does not fit the middle finger, and yet the accused afterwards, when he gives his evidence, says that the ring which he had bought at Sterkstroom was the ring which his brother had worn. His brother must have worn a different ring from the one that he bought at Sterkstroom, so that the brother does not support the defence. But, quite independently of that evidence, the evidence of the hawker is conclusive if true, and, as the Magistrate believed it, I do not see that the Court can disturb the finding. The appeal must be dismissed.

DIGEST OF CASES.

VOLUME XIII.—1903.

PAGE

Abandonment, see Prospective lease 806

Aboriginal Native, see Proclamation 652, 646

Acceptance, see Offer to sell ... 670

Accomplice, evidence of, see Criminal appeal 642

Accommodation, see Provisional sentence 94

Accustomed flow, see Water ... 321

Acquiescence, see Mutual Will ... 307

Act 20 of 1856, see Lashes ... 707

„ 3 of 1861, § 29, see Remit to new Magistrate ... 638, 1163

„ 5 of 1864, see Succession Duty 852

„ 22 of 1876. see Will 455

„ 3 of 1879—Prescription.

In 1863 M. purchased from one W. a certain piece of land. About a year after this purchase had been completed, W.'s estate was sequestrated (as it appeared). The heiress of W. now opposed a rule nisi in favour of M. being made absolute.

Held, that as M. had been in quiet and undisturbed possession of the land for forty years, and more especially as it was not quite clear that the estate of W. had been sequestrated, the rule nisi must be made absolute.

PAGE

Ex parte McGrath 870

Act 9 of 1879, see Railway ... 770

„ 23 of 1879, see Vagrancy Act 834

„ 27 of 1882, see Implements of housebreaking 459

„ 27 of 1882, see Negligence ... 576

„ 27 of 1882, Sec. 5, see Obstructing public thoroughfare 42

„ 48 of 1882—I.D.B.—Appeal. Ex parte Espinosa 899

„ 9 of 1883, see Election Petition 459

„ 28 of 1883, sec. 78, see Expulsion from licensed premises... 22

„ 28 of 1883, see Liquor license 868

„ 38 of 1884, §§ 6 and 84, see Contemplation of Insolvency 751

„ 38 of 1884, see Insolvency ... 356

„ 30 of 1890, see Admission of Attorney 728

„ 25 of 1891, § 13, see New Liquor licence 628

„ 34 of 1891, see Medical Practitioner 489

„ 15 of 1892, see Trespass ... 594

„ 30 of 1892, see Attorney ... 337

„ 25 of 1893, § 86, see False representation 621

„ 26 of 1893, sec. 93, see Valuation 197

PAGE

Act 26 of 1893, sec. 133, see Trespass 51

„ 20 of 1894, see Scab Act ... 474

„ 43 of 1895, see Debentures ... 994

„ 20 of 1896, see Building Regulations 497

„ 29 of 1898, see Arbitration 924

„ 36 of 1902, sec. 22—Liability of landlord—Guilty knowledge.
Rex v. Dempers 860

„ 40 of 1902, sec. 16.
Rex. v. German 225

Action, see Trade mark 634

Action against messenger of the Magistrate's Court — Interpleader suit.
Where property seized in execution is claimed by a third party, and no steps are taken to have the claim determined by way of interpleader suit, the claimant may sue the messenger for the recovery of the property.
Ndube v. Holmes 813

Action for Account, see Practice 1053

Actual Cost, see Condition precedent 103

Actus, see Servitudes 465

Administering liquidator—Trust funds—Investment.
The directors of a certain Company having decided to liquidate the Company, appointed one H. as administering liquidator. In 1883, H. deposited the funds in his hands with defendants, who agreed to pay interest half-yearly at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum on such moneys. In 1888, the defendants gave notice that they would reduce the rate to 4 per cent., which they accordingly did. In 1895, they gave notice that in future they would pay no interest on these moneys. They again agreed to pay interest from 1899 at 4 per cent., to be reckoned yearly. The plaintiffs now sued the defendants for an amended account.

PAGE

Held, that as the directors of the plaintiff Company had consented to the course pursued by the defendants, the account rendered by the latter must be held to be true and correct.
Liquidator of the Life Branch of the South African Fire and Life Assurance Company v. Board of Executors 1019

Adiation, see Joint Will 554

„ see Mutual Will ... 307

Admission, see Attorney ... 254, 337

Admission of Attorney—Act 30 of 1892.
An official intimation having been made to the Court that the Governor does not intend to specify any examination in statute law for Transvaal attorneys, inasmuch as no examination is required in the Transvaal for attorneys of this Court.
Held, that the applicant, who had been admitted in the Transvaal and had complied with all the provisions of the 2nd section of Act 30 of 1892, except those contained in subsection d, was entitled to be admitted as an attorney of the Supreme Court.
Ex parte Hofmeyr 728

Admission of Notary — Examiners.

PAGE

The applicant passed the notary's examination before two advocates of the Supreme Court and a notary duly admitted by the Supreme Court, but the examination took place in Rhodesia. The applicant having been duly admitted as notary by the High Court applied to the Supreme Court for admission to practice in this Colony.

Held, that as the Act required two notaries and one advocate to be the examiners, the applicant was not entitled to admission.

Ex parte Blayney 1089

Adultery—Damages.

In an action for damages against the co-defendant who had committed adultery with the defendant, the wife of the plaintiff, it was proved that the plaintiff had frequently used foul language towards his wife. No damages were awarded, but the co-defendant was ordered to pay the costs of the action.

Clifford v. Clifford and Another 180

Adultery — Non-access — Non-cohabitation.

The plaintiff did not cohabit with or even have access to the defendant, his wife, for two years, at the end of which time she gave birth to a child.

Held, that this constituted sufficient proof of adultery.

Hickman v. Hickman ... 659

Affidavit—Application to compel Attorney-General to produce an affidavit made by a witness in a criminal case refused.

A Judge may, in the interests of justice, call a witness not summoned by either the Crown or the prisoner. Such witness may, with leave of the Judge, be cross-examined by counsel for the party against whom the witness has testified, but only in so far as the evidence of the witness is adverse and no further.

Rex v. Conrad Cohen and four Others 1171

Affidavits, see Interdict 207

Affidavits, see Practice 97

Age of Child-bearing, see Minors 213

Agency, see Contemplation of insolvency 751

Agency—Attachment of registration of trade mark ad fundandam jurisdictionem.

Bartram and Son v. Atkins and Lovet, Christmas and Co.
Bartram and Son v. Campbell, Shearman and Co. ...1055

Agency—Estoppel.

One D., a servant of the Colonial Government, had ordered certain goods from the plaintiffs for public purposes. The orders were made out on Town Council forms, and plaintiffs having sued the Council in the Magistrate's Court for the price of these goods, the Magistrate granted "absolution from the instance," with costs.

Held on appeal, that as the goods had not been ordered by any official of the Town Council, the Council could not be held responsible, and that as no Town Council official had held out the Council as liable, the Council were not estopped from denying liability, and that the Magistrate's judgment must, therefore, be affirmed and the appeal dismissed, with costs.

PAGE

Smith and Son v. Cape Town Town Council 947

Agent, see Counsel 843

Agent, see Liquor laws 214

Agent's signature, see Election petition 459

Agreement to give lease and occupation — Time — Essence of contract.

The defendant agreed to give a five years' lease of certain premises to the plaintiff, who paid a quarter's rent in advance. At the time of the agreement the premises were not completed, and the defendant agreed to give occupation at a certain date. On the arrival of the date the premises were not completed, and the time was further extended to a fixed date which the Court found to be an essential part of the agreement. At the expiration of such extended time the defendant gave the plaintiff the keys, but after the plaintiff had taken possession an objection was raised by the municipal inspector to occupation without an occupation licence, and the defendant told the plaintiff to leave until such certificate could be obtained. The plaintiff vacated the premises, and refused to take occupation ten days afterwards when an occupation licence was forthcoming.

Held, that the defendant's failure to give possession at the time agreed upon released the plaintiff from the obligation of taking a five years' lease, and that the plaintiff was entitled to recover back the rent which he had paid in advance.

PAGE

Levy v. Rose 290

Agreement to give time, see Provisional sentence 296

Agreement as to Water, see Municipality 949

Alteration of surname—Rectification of transfer.

The applicant having changed his name after land had been transferred to him, applied for a rectification of the transfer in the Deeds Office.

Held, that he was not entitled to the assistance of the Court.

Ex parte Van Rooyen ... 668

Animus furandi, see Theft ... 650

Anticipation of return day, see Arrest 191

Appeal, see Redhibitory Action ... 216

Appeal, see Act 48 of 1882 ... 899

Appeal, see Costs 940

Appeal in criminal case—Leave to prosecute appeal.

The defendant, in a criminal case having allowed a full term of the Court to elapse after conviction, applied for leave to proceed with the appeal.

Held, that in the absence of any statement of the grounds on which the special leave was asked for, the application should be refused.

Rex v. Ratowsky 1165

Appeal — Question reserved — Theft by means of false pretences — Variance—Theft by member of firm.

On the trial of an attorney for theft by means of false pretences the false representation alleged in the indictment was that the accused had stated to the prosecutor that he had paid certain money received by him on behalf of the prosecutor to his Cape Town attorneys, whereas the evidence shewed that he, without the knowledge of the other members of the firm, had stated that the firm had paid such money to its Cape Town Attorneys.

PAGE

Held, on question reserved, that such variance was no ground for setting aside the conviction.

Held, further, that the fact of the accused having committed the theft on behalf of the firm was no ground for disturbing the verdict to the effect that he was himself guilty of the theft.

Rex v. Krige 1195

Appeal, see Resident Magistrate's Court 857

Appeal—Weight of evidence.

Rex v. McCully 886

Appeal — Privy Council — 37th Rule of Court.

The plaintiff, in a civil suit, lodged a petition for leave to appeal to the Privy Council within fourteen days after final judgment, but failed to give notice to the defendant of the lodging of the appeal in manner required by the 37th Rule of Court. On application for leave to appeal, the defendant objected on the ground, inter alia, that the terms of the Rule had not been complied with.

Held, that although it might be competent for the Court with strict compliance with rules relating to appeals to the Supreme Court itself, it should not grant leave to appeal to another tribunal unless the requirements of the Rule have been complied with.

PAGE

Hills v. Colonial Government 1122

Appeal to Privy Council—Final judgment—Decision on exceptions.

In an action brought by the cessionary of a mining lease against the lessor to have it declared that the rights under the lease were vested in the lessor, the defendant excepted to the declaration on the ground that it disclosed no cause of action. The Court having disallowed the exception, the defendant applied for leave to appeal to the Privy Council.

Held, that the decision overruling the exception was not a final judgment in terms of the 50th section of the Charter of Justice until the plaintiff obtained the benefit of the decision by a judgment in his favour on the declaration.

Henderson and Another v. Hanekom 894

Arbitration—Act 29 of 1898—Construction of deed of submission.

The F. Co. had agreed to take over the business of the B. Co. on certain terms. Disputes having subsequently arisen between the parties as to whether the B. Co. had not misrepresented its profits to the F. Co., it was agreed to refer the matter to arbitration. On the matter being brought before the arbitrator, the B. Co. alleged that the F. Co. had abandoned all claim to compensation in respect of any misrepresentation made by the B. Co., in consideration of the latter abandoning certain claims against the former. This abandonment was alluded to in the Deed of Submission, but was therein excluded from the scope of the arbitration. The arbitrators now asked for the ruling of the Court as to whether it was competent for them to receive evidence regarding the abandonment by the B. Co. of the said claims.

PAGE

Held, that this evidence was admissible.

Buffalo Supply Co. v. Federal Supply Co.... 924

Arbitration—Award—Expropriation for railway purposes.

In deciding upon the amount of compensation to be paid to the owner of a farm for the expropriation for railway purposes of a portion of the homestead arbitrators are justified in estimating such portion at a much greater value than the rest of the farm.

Redelinghuys v. Colonial Government 248

Arbitration — Award — Enlargement of time fixed for award —Waiver—Remuneration.

A deed of submission provided that the award should be given within a period of three months, but owing to the evidence taking up more time than was anticipated, it was agreed by the parties verbally and in the presence of the arbitrators to extend the time without however fixing any period. After that several months passed without any award being given and one of the arbitrators had to go to Europe for four months for the benefit of his health. On his return one of the parties to the submission applied for an order directing fresh proceedings and appointment of arbitrators.

Held, that the applicant had waived his right to take advantage of the fact that the award had not been given within the time agreed upon and the application was accordingly refused.

Town Council of Cape Town v. Cape Government Railways 11

Arbitrator — Award — Evidence—Irregularity — Mistake of arbitrator.

It is no valid objection to the award of an arbitrator that the arbitrator heard the evidence of a witness of one party to the submission in the absence of the other party if the evidence was so heard with the previous consent of both parties. Nor is it a valid objection to the award that the arbitrator has made a mistake in his award unless the mistake is so gross and manifest that it could not have been made without some degree of misconduct or partiality on the part of the arbitrator.

Landeshut v. Koenig ... 23

Architect—Delay in completion of contract—Final certificate.

Where delay was caused by the architect in not supplying necessary and proper details when asked by the contractors to do so, and where the building-owner caused further delay by not delivering certain ironwork, which he had undertaken to do.

Held, that the building-owner could not claim liquidated damages provided for by the contract from the contractors by reason of the noncomple- tion of the building by the stipulated time.

PAGE

Held further, that, by the terms of the contract between the building owner and the contractors, the former was not precluded by the architect's final certificate from instituting a claim for liquidated damages against the contractors.

Hendricks and Soeker v. Atkins 517

Arrest—8th Rule of Court—Confirmation—Provisional Order of Sequestration — Anticipation of return day—Release from imprisonment—Ord. 6 of 1843, sec. 23—Security.

R., who was indebted to the bank in a sum of over £4,000 was arrested at the instance of the bank manager under the 8th Rule of Court while attempting to quit the Colony under an assumed name. The bank now applied for a confirmation of the writ of arrest. This was opposed on behalf of R. on the ground that he had obtained a provisional order of sequestration and he now claimed his discharge from prison, but consented to the return day of the provisional order being anticipated and the order at once made final

Held, that the Court had discretion under Section 23 of the Insolvent Ordinance either to grant or to refuse the confirmation of the order for civil imprisonment. In the circumstances the Court in this case ordered the prisoner's discharge on his finding security to attend the meetings of his creditors in £500 and granted a final order of sequestration.

Ross v. National Bank ... 191

PAGE

Assault, see Injury to property ... 708

Assignment of lease — Mineral lease—Agricultural lease.

The defendant, being the owner of a farm, entered into a contract with L., giving him the sole and exclusive right to prospect for and win minerals and precious stones for a period of five years, with a right of renewing the contract for eighteen further periods of five years. L. assigned all his right, title and interest in the contract to the plaintiffs, who gave notice of such assignment to the defendant.

Held, on appeal from the High Court of Griqualand, that L. could legally transfer his rights to the plaintiffs, so as to give them a right of action against the defendant.

De Vries v. Alexander (Foord's Rep. 43) distinguished.

Henderson and another v. Hanekom 834

Attachment of Trade Mark, see Agency 1055

Attorney—Admission—Act 30 of 1892.

An attorney who had been enrolled in the late South African Republic applied to be admitted as an attorney of the Supreme Court. He, however, had not passed the examination prescribed by Sec. 1 (b) of Act 30 of 1892.

Held, that as the Governor had not and did not intend to exercise the power vested in him by the aforesaid Act the applicant was entitled to admission.

Ex parte Hofmeyr 337

PAGE

Attorney—Admission—Rhodesian examiner.

On the application of an attorney, who, after examination in Rhodesia, had been admitted to practice there; the Court admitted him to practice as an attorney of the Supreme Court.

Ex parte Holderness... ... 254

Attorney—Re-instatement.

Ex parte Badenhorst ... 255

Attorney—Re-instatement.

Ex parte Vermooten ... 306

Attorney—Re-instatement—Costs.

Ex parte Scholtz 255

Attorney—Examiners outside the jurisdiction of the Court.

Examiners residing outside the jurisdiction of the Court who possess the qualifications required by Rule 293, appointed to examine an applicant residing outside the jurisdiction of the Court, with a view to his admission, as an attorney of the Court.

Ex parte Duff 877

Attorney—Service of articles—Military service—Holiday.

M., an articled clerk, had been absent from the service of his principal for three months on active military service. Application was now made to have this period of three months reckoned as a reasonable holiday, and deducted from applicant's period of service.

Held, that the application must be refused and the applicant ordered to complete an extra three months' service.

Ex parte Maasdorp 765

Auctioneer—Principal and agent Breach of trust — Culpable insolvency — Insolvent Ordinance.

An auctioneer who does not within a reasonable time pay over to his principal money realised by him on behalf of his principal commits a breach of trust and if he becomes insolvent without having paid the money he is guilty of culpable insolvency in having incurred a debt by reason of a breach of trust.

Rex v. Simmons and Williams 1159

Autrefois acquit, see Criminal appeal 642

Autrefois acquit, see Scab Act ... 474

Award, see Arbitration ... 11, 248

„ see Arbitrator 23

Award of arbitrators—Costs.

Hills v. Colonial Government 661

Back entrance, right to, see Lease 600

Bailee of goods—Landing agent—Proof of loss—Invoice.

In an action against a landing agent for the alleged loss of certain articles from a case landed by the defendant, the plaintiff failed to produce the person who packed the case nor did he produce the invoice relating to the goods, but he produced a pencil memorandum made by his own clerk at the time when the case was opened in the presence of the defendants' claim's clerk, such memorandum not being signed or initialled by the latter. The claims clerk stated that he never saw the memorandum, and that, as the invoice was not produced at the opening, he could not make a note of the articles alleged to be missing.

PAGE

Held, that there was not sufficient proof of the loss of the articles.

McKenzie v. Harbour Board 547

Bailment, see Deposit 683

Barman, see Liquor Laws ... 214

Bechuanaland Proclamations Nos. 64 and 113—Bastards.

Bastards are included in the term Native under Proclamation No. 64. It is not essential to prove that Bastards are descended from aboriginal natives or are living as members of a native community or kraal. Consequently the Court upheld a conviction for the sale of liquor to Bastards in the district of Gordonia.

Rex v. Stern 917

Belligerents, see Conspiracy ... 596

Bequest to a class, see Joint Will 62

Bill of Exchange, see Provisional Sentence 1091

Bill of Lading, see Charter Party 713

Bona derelicta, see Evidence ... 67

Bona fides, see Unlawful possession 66

Booty, see Rebel 931

Breach of Contract—Damages.

Isaacson v. Walsh and Walsh 794

Breach of trust, see Auctioneer ...1159

Brick-making, see Expropriation for Railway purposes ... 468

Brokerage.

A broker instructed to sell property who introduces a client to his principal is entitled to brokerage, even though the principal may afterwards deal with the client and sell the property to him through another broker.

Watson v. Von During ... 475

Brokerage.

Wolters v. Goodman ... 558

Broker's note, see Sale and purchase 378

Builder's lien—Retention money—Security.

Ex parte Rose 226

Builder's right of retention—Spoliation.

Applicant having been clandestively deprived of possession of a house in which he, as builder, has performed certain work, and which he claimed the right to retain until he was paid his costs and charges. The Court ordered the owner to restore possession, pending proceedings by him to recover possession.

Sterner v. Morom 802

Building contract.

Van der Westhuysen v. Lochner 1046

Building contract — Extras — Novation—Contemplation of parties.

The plaintiff in the Court below had entered into a contract with the defendants to erect certain buildings for £60. It was admitted that a certain wall was badly constructed, but the defendants alleged that in consideration of their not being called upon to re-build this wall the plaintiff agreed to do any extra work which the defendants might order "gratis." This agreement the plaintiff denied: he, however, did the extra work at a cost amounting to nearly a third of the original contract price. Plaintiff then sued the defendants for £20 for extra work, they tendered £1 15s., and the Magistrate gave judgment for the amount tendered.

PAGE

Held on appeal, that even if plaintiff had entered into the said agreement he would not thereby be bound to do an indefinite quantity of extra work "gratis," but only such work as was in the contemplation of the parties when the original contract was thus novated. That the appeal must, therefore, be allowed and judgment entered for the appellant for £13 6s., with costs.

Aspeling v. Shear and Ryan 1016

Building regulations — Building line — Municipality — Ultra vires—Interdict—Sec. 4 (h) of Act 20 of 1896.

In contravention of certain building regulations of the Municipality of G. and S., and notwithstanding warning received from the municipal authorities, the respondent had proceeded with the erection of certain buildings without having previously had his plans approved of by the Municipality. The Municipality now sought to have him interdicted (1) from proceeding with the said buildings until the plans thereof should have been duly approved; (2) from building within 7 feet of the centre of the road.

Held that, as under Sec. 4 (h) of Act 20 of 1896, the Municipal regulation as to approval of plans was intra vires, the respondent must be interdicted from proceeding with his buildings

Held further, that in the absence of fuller information as to the general line of buildings, the Court should not grant the second part of the interdict for which application was made.

Green and Sea Point Municipality v. Sebba and others 497

Building regulations, see Municipal regulations 823

Building regulations, see Interdict 1119

Burthen of proof, see Negligence 1034

Cancellation, see Lease 526

Cash found on prisoner, see Fraud 1129

Cession of rights by Lessee, see Prospective lease 806

Charter party—Bill of lading—Demurrage.

A charter party was entered into between the plaintiff and B., who consigned part of the cargo to the defendants under bills of lading, which made no reference to the charter party. There was no evidence that B. acted as the agent of the defendant.

Held, that in so far as the bills of lading differed from the charter party the defendants were liable under the bills of lading and not under the charter party.

The bills of lading provided that the consignees should take delivery as quickly as the goods could be delivered in the ship's slings from the ship. Owing to the crowded state of the port, there was considerable delay in the discharge, and the evidence showed that it was impossible for the defendants, owing to lighters being unobtainable, to hasten the discharge.

PAGE

Held, that the defendants were not liable for demurrage.

The "Marga" v. Searle and others 713

Charter Party, see Demurrage ... 690

Children, see Legitimacy 620

„ see Joint Will 62

Coal—Discharge—Custom of the port—Negligence.

The plaintiffs sued the defendant in respect of damage by breakage done to a certain cargo of house coal occasioned by its having been negligently delivered into lighters by means of shoots and not in bags according to the alleged custom of the port.

Held, that as neither the custom of the port nor injury to the coal done by the mode of discharge had been sufficiently proved, and as discharge of coal by shoots was no evidence of negligence; judgment must be given for the defendant with costs.

McKenzie & Co. v. The "Hydaspes" 562

Codicil, see Will 455

Collision—Negligence—Motor car.

A cart and horse belonging to the defendant were standing in a public road on the proper side when the plaintiff's motor car came from behind and frightened the horse, which began to swerve from side to side. The coachman was a skilful driver and did everything he could to pacify the horse, but the motor continued on its course and endeavoured to pass just as the horse was nearly across the road. In so doing the motor struck the shoulder of the horse, causing damage to the motor as well as to the horse.

Held, that the plaintiff was guilty of negligence, that the defendant was not guilty of negligence or contributory negligence, and that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover damages for injury to the motor, but that the defendant was entitled to damages for injury to the horse.

Held further, that if the driver of a motor car sees or ought to see that an animal is frightened by the motion or noise of the motor, and that a collision is likely to result unless he slackens speed or stops altogether, he is guilty of negligence if he does not regulate his speed accordingly.

Adams v. Clarke 407

Collision on road—Negligence.

South African Breweries v. Table Bay Harbour Board 733

Common employment, see Master and Servant 729

Common or party wall—Urban servitude—Interdict.

The respondents, with the view to erect a higher building, pulled down a building belonging to them, with the exception of a party wall, which was common to the applicant and respondents' premises, and the consequence was that the common wall became less safe than it had been before, although it was sufficiently safe for the purpose of the applicant's building. The respondents having been directed by the Town Council either to render the common wall safe or to pull it down, proceeded to take it down.

PAGE

Held, that the applicant was entitled to an order restraining the further demolition of the common wall.

Franck v. Sachs, Ginsberg and others 1166

Commission de bene esse — Res judicata—Play rights.

The applicant having applied for a commission to take certain evidence which he alleged to be material in an action to be brought; the respondent objected on the ground that the question to be decided in the said action was res judicata.

Held, that as the question as to whether the said evidence was material or not could not be decided without going into the merits of the case, the application should be granted, but that the question of costs must stand over for further argument.

Koenig v. Landeshut ... 592

Company — Dividend — Profit — Income tax.

The defendants being directors of a joint stock company registered and carrying on its diamond mining operations in this Colony, declared a dividend and informed the shareholders resident in this Colony, including the plaintiff, of such declaration, but, before payment, received notice from the Imperial revenue authorities that income tax was claimed upon the whole of the company's profits. The directors informed the plaintiff that they would resist the claim in the English Courts, and that in the mean time they would deduct the amount of the income tax from the dividend, but would refund the amount if the decision should be against the Crown. The company carried on its business of disposing of the diamonds in England, but the diamonds were delivered and paid for in this Colony. The question was not raised in the special case whether the Supreme Court could prevent the enforcement by the English Courts of the payment of income tax out of the dividend coming to shareholders resident in the Colony.

Held, that pending a final judicial decision as to whether income tax is or is not legally claimable from the company it was justified in withholding from the plaintiff a proportionate share of the dividend.

Estate McGregor v. De Beers Consolidated Mines 501

Company—Winding up—Liquidator—General bond—Preferent claim.

In the winding up of a mining company the defendant claimed to be ranked as a preferent creditor in respect of a general bond against the company passed in his favour by two life governors, of whom he was one, to secure advances alleged to have been made or to be made by him to the company.

Held, that the liquidator was justified in refusing to admit the preferent claim in competition with other creditors of the company without clear proof of the money claimed having been actually advanced.

PAGE

The Liquidator of Contat's Collieries v. Contat ... 382

Company—Voluntary winding up—Compulsory winding up—Liquidator — Staying proceedings in winding up.

A special resolution having been passed for the voluntary winding up of the B. Company, three liquidators were duly appointed. Subsequently a majority of the shareholders, including the applicant, who was one of the liquidators, desired to stay proceedings in the winding up for the purpose of resuscitating the Company, and they passed a resolution to the effect that the applicant alone should control the liquidation without the intervention of the two other liquidators, and should apply to the Court for an order staying proceedings in the voluntary winding up. On such application being made, the two other liquidators, supported by a substantial minority of the shareholders and by the bulk of the creditors, opposed the application, and moved for the compulsory winding up of the Company.

Held, that although it might be competent for the Court, under the 143rd and 186th sections of the Companies' Act, 1892, to stay proceedings in a voluntary winding up, such a course was not advisable under the circumstances.

Held further, that in view of the facts that the Company had, by resolution of shareholders, been ordered to be wound up voluntarily, that the liquidators had arrived at a deadlock in the winding up, and that a substantial minority of the shareholders and the great majority of the creditors were opposed to a resuscitation of the Company and in favour of a compulsory winding up, it was just and equitable that the Company, although perfectly solvent, should now be wound up compulsorily.

PAGE

Ex parte Creditors of the Colonial Building Corporation 1125

Company prospectus, see False representation 621

Compensation, see Magistrate's jurisdiction 219

Compensation, see Trespass ... 51

Competition in Trade, see Master and servant 1131

Compulsory sequestration—Deed of assignment.

At a meeting of creditors of G. the creditors present agreed to sign a deed of assignment of G.'s assets for the payment of his debts. Subsequently a large creditor refused to sign the deed of assignment, whereupon the plaintiff on proof of G.'s insolvency obtained a provisional order for the sequestration of G.'s estate.

Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to an order of final sequestration.

Gourlay, Cavanagh and Co. v. Gromer 1090

Condition precedent—Obligation Fulfilment — Meaning of words "actual cost."

The condition of an obligation is taken to be accomplished when the debtor, who is obliged under such condition, has prevented its accomplishment.

PAGE

The plaintiff entered into a contract with the Government for the construction of a line of railway by which it was provided that in case of certain defaults on the part of the contractor, the Government should be at liberty to take over the incomplete work and pay to the contractor the "actual cost" thereof, which was to be ascertained by the certificate of the Government engineer, who was to be at liberty to inspect the contractor's books.

Held, that such "actual cost" was the cost actually incurred by the contractor in constructing the work; and did not include (1) interest on payments, or (2) expenditure wasted in consequence of any part of the work having been condemned by the engineer, or (3) any work or material of which the Government had not received the benefit.

The Government having taken over the work, a correspondence ensued between the Government and the contractors, from which it appeared that the Government placed a different construction upon the words "actual cost," and was prepared to pay only for the value of the work as appearing from certain scheduled prices. The engineer accordingly tendered to the contractor a certificate which did not purport to be a certificate of actual cost but was based upon the scheduled prices as contended for by Government. Held, that, although the production of an engineer's certificate was a condition precedent to the plaintiff's right to recover the actual cost, the refusal of the Government to pay the amount of actual cost dispensed with the necessity of providing such certificate and entitled the plaintiff to recover upon independent proof of actual cost.

Hills v. Colonial Government 103

Condition in a perpetual quitrent grant—Magistrate's decision on facts reversed.

Where the finding of a Magistrate is against the weight of evidence, the Court will depart from the rule not to disturb the finding of a Magistrate on questions of fact.

Where a perpetual quitrent grant contained a condition "that all roads and thoroughfares running over the land shall remain free and uninterrupted."

Held, (1) that, upon the facts, the road claimed by appellant was a road or thoroughfare at the time and within the meaning of the grant; (2) that appellant, although the diagram attached to the grant did not shew a certain road or thoroughfare claimed by him, could prove by evidence aliunde the existence of such a road or thoroughfare at the time of the grant.

Niekerk v. Wakefield ... 490

Conflict of evidence—Magistrate's finding as to credibility of witnesses.

Rex v. Ospowat 769

Conflict of evidence—Magistrate's finding on facts.

Van Noordwyk V. Rothman 777

PAGE

Consideration—Promise to extend time of payment—Defence.

The defendant, being indebted to the plaintiff in the sum of £225, offered to pay £100 in cash and to give a promissory note for the balance, which offer the plaintiff accepted. Thereafter the defendant tendered £100 in cash and a promissory note made by himself, but the plaintiff refused the tender and sued the defendant for provisional sentence. The plaintiff held no security for the original debt.

Held, that as the tender was in terms of a definite agreement between the parties, the plaintiff was not entitled to provisional sentence.

Luyt v. Hough 681

Consideration, see Offer to sell ... 670

Consideration—Nudum pactum—Father of minor child—Lying in expenses.

The father of a minor daughter incurred expenses for her lying in and thereafter entered into an agreement with her seducer for the payment of a certain sum as damages.

Held, that there was a valid consideration for the agreement

Duma v. Pumene 77

Consideration, see Contract ... 446

„ see Transfer of Land 397

Conspiracy — Unlawful assembly —Belligerents.

The defendant, a British subject joined a commando of the Boer forces after they had invaded the Colony and after they had been recognised as belligerents. The commando, acting under the instructions of their superior officer, took away the plaintiff's horse for use in the campaign, but the defendant derived no personal benefit from the taking beyond riding it for a few hours while it was brought to the superior officer.

Held, that the defendant was not civilly liable in damages for the taking of the horse.

The case of Steenkamp v. Kyd (15 S.C. R. 221) distinguished.

Watson v. Bradley 596

Constitution Ordinance—Election petition—Office of profit—Acting appointment.

The office of messenger of a Resident Magistrate's Court is an office of profit under the King in terms of the 47th section of the Constitution Ordinance.

A person holding such office, although only acting, is not eligible to be elected a member of the House of Assembly.

The office of Deputy-sheriff is not an office of profit under the Crown.

Headley v. Cilliers 482

Construction, see Will 586

Contemplation of insolvency—Act 38 of 1884, Secs. 6 and 84 — Undue preference — Pledge—Agency.

The trustees of O.'s insolvent estate sued H. for £10, paid to H. when (as it was alleged) O. contemplated insolvency. The payment was made within six months of the date of sequestration. The trustee further demanded the restoration of certain goods which had been pledged to H. by O. and delivered.

PAGE

Held that as at the time O. made payment to H. of the said £10, he expected to be able to satisfy his liabilities, such payment was not an undue preference.

Held further, that as on the evidence it appeared that the goods aforesaid had been handed to the defendant that he might raise money by selling them and not as a pledge, the agency of defendant terminated on O.'s insolvency, and that consequently the said goods formed part of the insolvent estate.

Estate Otgaar v. Haupt ... 751

Contempt, see Order of Court ... 377

Contempt of Court—Costs.

On application for attachment of a trustee of an insolvent estate for contempt of Court in not filing an account as ordered by the Court, it appeared that he had filed an account with the Resident Magistrate which, however, was very incomplete. No order was made for attachment, as the trustee was held to have acted in good faith, but he was ordered to pay the costs.

The Master v. Dickson ...1118

Contract — Consideration — Animus contrahendi — Request— Vagueness of contract.

The defendant, a merchant in Cape Town, being on a visit to Chicago, U.S.A., was consulted by the plaintiff, a nephew of his residing there, as to the prospects for a young man at the Cape, and after the defendant had left Chicago the plaintiff wrote to him, making further inquiries. In answer, the plaintiff wrote: "If you care to come to Africa, I am prepared to find you employment as a traveller in town or any such work as you may be suited for." About seven months afterwards the plaintiff came to the Cape, and finding, as he said, that the defendant did nothing for him, he found employment for himself at £10 a month. Subsequently he lost this employment and brought an action against the defendant for damages for breach of contract. The evidence shewed that it was the plaintiff's own desire to come to the Cape to improve his position, and that beyond the terms of the letter the defendant conveyed no request to the plaintiff to come.

PAGE

Held, that the alleged promise was too vague to be enforced, but that even if it had been more definite, it was not supported by sufficient consideration.

Spiegel v. Eilenberg ... 446

Contract — Motion — Action — Forfeiture.

The respondent as concessionary of certain lines of railway agreed with the applicant that he would complete the railway in two years. It was further provided that if the line was not completed within that time, unless the delay was proved to the satisfaction of the applicant to have been occasioned by certain specified causes, the agreement should cease and the applicant might enter upon the uncompleted line and the respondent should forfeit any security lodged by him with the applicant. The respondent having failed to complete the line, the applicant after three years applied to the Court, by motion, for an order, declaring that the agreement was at an end, and authorizing him to enter on the incompleted line.

PAGE

Held, that as there were no facts in dispute, the Court might, on motion, make such an order.

Colonial Government v. Hills 504

Contract, see Fiduciary relation ... 31

Convenient time, see Pounds and Trespasses Act 884

Copyright Act 18 of 1895.

The English Act 5, 6 Vict. protects the holders of an English copyright throughout the entire British Dominions.

Boosey and Co. v. Simmonds 1138

Corroboration, see Sale of Liquor 644

Costs, see Award of Arbitrators 661

" see Resident Magistrate's Court 857

Costs—Appeal.

The plaintiff having suffered much inconvenience from the public trespassing on his land, gave public notice that a certain road over his land was not a public road, and he placed an obstruction of stones across the road. The defendant's son, however, drove the defendant's wagon and oxen over the road, and the plaintiff brought an action in a Magistrate's Court for trespass against the defendant, who pleaded several exceptions and the general issue. The Magistrate gave judgment for the plaintiff for one shilling damages, but ordered each party to pay his own costs.

PAGE

Held on appeal, that as the plaintiff had properly brought his action to assert a substantial right and had succeeded, the Court below ought to have awarded him his costs.

Labuschange v. Mulligan ... 940

Costs, see Obstructing public thoroughfare 42

Counsel—Agent—Reasonable disbursement.

The defendant, being charged with a criminal offence, employed a law agent to instruct Counsel for his defence. The trial lasted three days, and the defendant was acquitted. Counsel's fee for the first day was paid by the defendant. On the second day Counsel demanded a refresher fee, which was also paid by the defendant. On the third day no demand for a refresher fee was made, but the defendant admitted, that if it had been made on that day, he would have paid it. Subsequently Counsel demanded the fee for the third day from the plaintiff, who paid it.

Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to recover the amount from the defendant in the absence of any proof that the fee was unusual or exorbitant.

Shaw v. Fock 843

Counter-claim, see Magistrate's jurisdiction 219

Court of appeal in criminal cases—Special entry—Question reserved—Misdirection of Judge—Verdict of Jury.

Although it is a salutary practice on the part of judges presiding at criminal trials, where witnesses give evidence adverse to the accused and differing from their evidence given at the preparatory examination, to point out the danger of convicting on such adverse evidence, the omission to do so does not constitute a misdirection or illegality, if the discrepancy was brought to the notice of the jury.

PAGE

After two witnesses had given such adverse evidence differing from their previous evidence the counsel for the accused asked the judge whether he would be allowed to call a Mrs. B. to contradict the statement of the two witnesses that she had intimidated them before they gave their evidence at the preparatory examination, to which the Judge assented. Thereupon counsel for the prosecution asked whether, in such case, he would be allowed to call rebutting evidence, to which the Judge also assented. The counsel for the accused accordingly did not call Mrs. B., but after a verdict of guilty he raised the question for the consideration of the Court of Appeal whether judgment should not be arrested on the ground that the judge's ruling was wrong.

Held, that as Mrs. B. was not produced as a witness the judge's alleged ruling as to what he would do in case she should be examined could not be called in question.

Rex v. Du Plessis 1183

Court of Chief Magistrate of Griqualand East, see Edictal citation 214

Credibility of witnesses, see Sale of liquor 644

PAGE

Criminal appeal—Plea of autrefois acquit—Evidence of accomplice.

The conviction of a prisoner, found guilty under Act 35 of 1893, of the theft of horses, the property of some persons unknown, by the Resident Magistrate, was set aside on review on the ground that at the trial the owners of the horses appeared to give evidence and no amendment of the charge had taken place. The prisoner was subsequently tried again for stealing the same horses, the property of certain persons set out in the charge. He pleaded autrefois acquit. This plea was disallowed by the Resident Magistrate, and the prisoner was convicted and sentenced to imprisonment with hard labour.

Held, on appeal, that the plea of autrefois acquit was bad.

The Court is averse to accepting and acting on the uncorroborated evidence of an accomplice.

Rex v. Twalatinga 642

Culpable Insolvency, see Auctioneer 1159

Curator of lunatic—Transfer of quit-rent title.

R. had obtained a licence on behalf of his son H. R. for the grant of certain Crown land on quit-rent tenure, and effected certain improvements thereon. Thereafter H. R. was declared a lunatic, and the curator to his property took out a quit-rent title to the land in question. R. now applied for an order of Court, ordering H. R.'s curator to transfer this land to him (R.)

PAGE

Held, that the order must be refused.

Semble : that if R. had made a reasonable offer as consideration for the value of the land, the Court would, in view of the improvements which had been effected by R., have ordered transfer if they considered that it would be in H. R.'s interest that R.'s offer should be accepted.

Rohland v. Rohland's Curator 900

Curator, see Lunatic 194

Custom of the Port, see Coal ... 562

Damages—Negligence.

The plaintiff, being a passenger in a tram-car, signalled to the driver to stop, and as the car was just going round a curve, the driver slackened speed, with the view of stopping at the further end of the curve. The plaintiff went to the platform of the car and, while standing there, fell, owing, as he said, to a jerk of the car, but he was unable to say whether or not he was holding on to the rail at the time.

Held, that the mere fact that there was a jerk as the car rounded the curve was not sufficient proof of negligence on the part of the Tramway Company's servants, so as to render the Company liable for damages for injuries sustained by the plaintiff.

Kilgour v. Cape Town Tramway Co. 1149

Damages, see Breach of contract 794

„ see Deposit 683

„ see Injury to Property 708

„ see Lessor and Lessee ... 686

„ see Sale 421

PAGE

Damage to house—Negligence of owner of adjoining property.

Through the defendant's negligent construction of a house on his land the house fell and part of the debris struck the roof of the plaintiff's house, which adjoined the new building. The roof was so much damaged that it became necessary to place a practically new roof on the plaintiff's house, and there was no evidence to show that the value of the house was increased by reason of the new roof.

Held, that the measure of damages was the cost of placing the roof as nearly as practicable in the condition in which it was before the accident, and that the plaintiff was entitled to recover the amount which he had paid to the contractor for the repair of the roof.

Abrahams, v. Kaiser Bros. ... 184

Damages, see Adultery 180

Damages, see Injuria 154

Dead Bond, see Liquidation account 257

Death in consequence of illegal acts, see Life policy 847

Debentures—Act 43 of 1895—Preference.

In an action to have it declared that the plaintiff, as the holder of debentures of a certain company, has a preference against the assets of a certain partnership, which, after the date of the issue of the debentures, had taken over the assets and liabilities of the company, it appeared that the assets were not mentioned and described in the debentures as required by Act 43 of 1895, and that the creditors of the partnership were in no way represented in the action.

PAGE

Held, that it would be premature to declare such a preference, even if it could legally be claimed, until the estate of the partnership had been sequestrated or execution had issued at the suit of the debenture holder.

African Banking Corporation v. Hills and Another ... 994

Debtor and creditor—Onus of proof — Receipt — Proof of debt from books of creditor's agent.

The defendant, who owed a certain sum of money to plaintiff, alleged that he had paid in full to one L., plaintiff's agent. Though he had told various persons he had proofs of this payment in his possession, he was unable to produce either a receipt or any other documentary evidence at the trial. L., whose account of what took place on occasion of the alleged payment and whose evidence on certain collateral points was confirmed by that of defendant, produced a pocket book containing entries made on the said occasion, showing that there was still an outstanding balance due from defendant to plaintiff.

Held, that as the onus of proving payment of an admitted debt was upon the defendant, which onus he had failed to discharge, judgment must be given for plaintiff for the amount claimed with costs.

Moolman v. De Wet ... 790

De communi dividundo.

Ex parte Du Plessis and Others 971

PAGE

Deed of assignment, see Compulsory sequestration ...1090

Deed of Sale, see Principal and Agent 725

Defamation—Injury—Dishonourable conduct.

To a declaration claiming damages for defamation the defendant excepted on the ground that the words complained of were not defamatory the words being as follows: "I do not like his mean tricks. I told him he could go elsewhere with his dirty mean tricks."

Held, that as the words were capable of the meaning that the plaintiff had been guilty of dishonourable conduct, the exception should be overruled.

Ries v. Willetts 855

Defamation—Report of trial—Newspaper comments—Functions of judge and jury.

A preliminary examination having taken place against the plaintiff for a criminal assault on a young girl the defendants published in their newspaper a report of the trial with some comments thereon. These comments were capable of the construction that in the opinion of the writer the plaintiff was guilty of the offence. The plaintiff was acquitted at the subsequent trial and thereupon brought an action against the defendants for defamation. The defendants excepted to the declaration on the ground that it disclosed no ground of action.

Held, that as the comments were capable of the construction, placed on them by the declaration, the Court should not, on exception, decide the question as to whether the article was defamatory or not but leave the question to be decided at the trial, whether the trial should take place before the judges or be held before a jury.

PAGE

Walpole v. Palmer and Others 70

Defamatory words, see Slander ... 811

Defective premises, see Lessor and Lessee 686

Delivery, see Sale 1029

Demurrage—Charter party—Reasonable diligence — Custom and facilities of port of discharge.

A charter party provided that the discharge of the ship at C. dock should be according to the custom and facilities of the port and that for each day's detention threepence per ton register should be paid. By the custom of the port the landing of goods was done exclusively by the Harbour Board. The Board provided no sheds at the docks for the storage of goods other than general cargoes, and did not employ a sufficient number of vehicles for removing goods as fast as the ships in port could discharge them, but the defendants, the charterers, owing to the large number of cargoes of wheat which were being landed for them, and to their failing to provide sufficient appliances for coping with their increased business, could not receive the cargo from the plaintiff's ship as fast as the vehicles could deliver it.

Held, in an action for demurrage that the defendants having contributed to the delay by their want of diligence were liable for the detention beyond the time when, with the exercise of reasonable diligence, they might have taken delivery of the whole cargo.

Crown of Denmark v. S. A. Milling Company 690

Demurrage, see Charter party ... 713

Deposit—Bailment—Sale by depositary — Negligence — Damages.

It is no valid defence to an action by a depositor for the return of the goods deposited or for damages that the depositary has sold them unless it is clear that the sale was under the circumstances necessary and for the benefit of the depositor in which cases the depositary would only be liable for the price realised.

Medallie and Schiff v. Rous 683

Derelict Lands Act—Opposition to rule.

A Municipality, within the jurisdiction of which derelict erven are situated, has a locus standi to bring to the notice of the Court any valid objection to a rule issued under the 7th section of Act 28 of 1881, for the registration of title to such erven being made absolute.

Ex parte Winterbach ...1054

Devolution of property, see Succession duty 852

Dipping, see Scab Act 474

Discovery, see Rule 333D ... 911

Disorderly conduct, see Expulsion from licensed premises ... 22

Dissolution, see Partnership 428, 431

PAGE

Distribution of Estate. see Minors 213

Dividend, see Company 501

Division of Goods in Community, see Judicial separation ... 300

Divisional Council, see Expropriation of land 168

Divorce—Domicile—Jurisdiction.

Jurisdiction in the matter of divorce is founded on the domicile of the husband.

Wright v. Wright 881

Documentary evidence, see Lease 757

Domicile, see Lunatic 194

Domicile, see Restitution of conjugal rights 101

Dominium, Change of, see Martial Law 139

Dowry cattle, see Native custom 224

Edictal citation—Court of Chief Magistrate of Griqualand East.

The Court of the Chief Magistrate has no power or authority to direct service of process on a defendant by edictal citation.

Stork v. Stork 214

Ejectment — Motion — Rights of Partners.

Dalvi and another v. Ahmed 1203

Ejectment, see Landlord and Tenant 198, 510

Ejectment, see Lease for life ... 75

Election petition—Signature of agent—Act 9 of 1883,

The language of Section 4, Sub-section 1 of Act 9 of 1883, is peremptory. Where, therefore, an election petition was signed by the agents of the petitioner and not by the petitioner personally.

PAGE

Held, that the petition was invalid.

Orpen v. Cilliers 459

Election petition, see Constitution Ordinance 482

Enlargement of time, see Arbitration 11

Essence of Contract, see Agreement 290

Estoppel, see Agency 947

Evidence — Surrounding circumstances — Interpretation of written agreements.

The defendant purchased a certain farm from the plaintiff, and by two written agreements it was agreed that a portion of the price should be paid in cash, and that, as to the balance, it should be paid within six months in case tranquillity should be restored, but that in any case a bond for the amount should be passed. After tranquillity had been admittedly restored a third agreement in writing was entered into, providing that the provisions of the two previous agreements should be considered as therein inserted word for word, and that a bond for three years certain should be passed.

Held, that the three agreements should be construed as a whole, and that those provisions of the two earlier documents which were in conflict with the latest document were intended to be superseded.

Held further, that even if the matter were in doubt, the fact that tranquillity had been restored at the date of the latest document was one of those surrounding circumstances which might be taken into consideration for the purpose of ascertaining the intention of the parties.

PAGE

Van der Post v. Tywfelhoek Diamond Prospecting Syndicate 318

Evidence, see Manager 775

Evidence, see Remit to New Magistrate 638

Evidence from spoor.

Rex v. Botes 1005

Evidence — Stock theft — Bona Derelicta.

The accused had been convicted by a certain Assistant Resident Magistrate of the theft of a horse from the military authorities. It appeared from the evidence that the horse had been left in charge of a certain farmer by one of the Border Scouts. Eventually the horse got into the pound, being then in very bad condition. The accused released it, fed it up and at the request of one A. sold it to him for £6, at the same time saying it was not his own horse and therefore he could not well sell it. The evidence showed that one of the military officers had given permission to the accused to take the horse and use it if it "picked up."

Held, on appeal, that as the horse was practically derelict, and as the accused had acted quite openly in the matter, the conviction must be quashed.

Rex v. Clarke 67

Evidence, see Arbitrator 23

„ see Interdict 207

„ see Partnership ... 87

„ see Will ... 95, 164

Examiners, see Attorney ... 877

PAGE

Excussion, see Surety ... 945, 1154

Exception to summons—R. M. Court practice—Specific performance.

The same precision is not necessary in drawing a R. M. Court summons which would be required by the Supreme Court. A magistrate does not exceed his jurisdiction by ordering a litigant specifically to deliver up certain articles if he orders him in the alternative to pay their value.

Tien, Son v. Assignee estate Farrow 975

Executor's commission, see Fiduciary relation 31

Executor — Native custom — Interdict.

A native, who had been married in Griqualand East in 1874 according to Christian rites, died in 1902, and the applicant was appointed as executor. The respondent, who was the eldest son of the deceased, retained possession of the property, claiming to be entitled to such possession under native law and custom.

Held, that as long as the appointment of the applicant was not revoked he was entitled to administer the property, and the respondent was accordingly interdicted from parting with the property unless and until the appointment should be set aside, and leave was given to the respondent to proceed by motion for that purpose.

Sekelini v. Sekelini 302

Executor—Specific bequest—Sale of land bequeathed—Minor—Sureties.

An executor is not justified in selling any property specifically bequeathed unless the sale is necessary for the payment of the debts of the estate.

PAGE

A sale is not necessary where there are sufficient assets not specifically bequeathed or where the legatee is ready and willing to pay the executor a sufficient sum for the payment of the debts and costs of administration.

Where it has become necessary to sell property specifically bequeathed the legatee is entitled to the surplus of the proceeds after payment of the debts.

Where a debtor obtains restitution on the ground of a real defect in the obligation itself, such as fraud or mistake, the rescission of the obligation discharges the sureties, but if the rescission is founded upon reasons personal to the principal debtor, as for instance his minority, the obligation of the sureties remains in force.

Where, however, an executor held a sale by auction of land specifically bequeathed to a minor who bought the land after protesting against the sale and offering to pay all the debts of the estate,

Held, that as there were no creditors interested in enforcing the conditions of sale as against the sureties for the minor, the executor, who failed in his action for enforcing conditions of sale against the minor, as principal debtor, was not entitled to enforce them against the sureties for the minor.

Held further, that if the executor had been guilty of any mala fides he would not have been entitled to any fees, but that as he had acted in good faith he should receive such fees as he would have been entitled to if he had acted on the offer of the minor.

Estate van der Lith v. Conradie and Estate Koortz... 399

Expropriation for railway purposes—Brick-making.

The applicant had obtained a judgment of the Supreme Court, declaring that the respondents were not entitled to use certain land save for necessary railway purposes. Against this judgment the respondents had appealed to the Privy Council. Applicant now asked for an interdict to restrain them from making bricks on the said land.

Held, that the respondents might burn the bricks already made, but that pending the judgment of the Privy Council they must be interdicted from making any further bricks.

Logan v. Colonial Government 468

Expropriation for railway purposes, see Arbitration ... 248

Expropriation, see Railway ... 770

Expropriation of land—Railway acts—Siding—Main Road—Divisional Council—Interdict.

The Government on purchasing the Wellington line of railway under Act 15 of 1872 from the company which constructed it under Act 20 of 1857 acquired no greater rights than it could itself have conferred on the company. Such company acquired no right under the Act of 1857 to expropriate land for the purpose of making a siding near Cape Town for the conveyance of stores required for workshops erected for the manufacture and repair of carriages, engines and trucks for use on the railway system beyond Wellington.

PAGE

The Divisional Council held entitled to an interdict restraining the Commissioner of Public Works from constructing such siding across a main road.

The Cape Divisional Council v. The Colonial Government 168

Expulsion from licensed premises — Disorderly conduct — Act 28 of 1883, Sec. 78.

Under the term "disorderly conduct" employed in Sec. 78 of Act 28 of 1883, is included the use of language which would tend to create a breach of the peace in the bar of a hotel. The hotel proprietor is justified in ejecting any person using such language, even if he is sober.

Rex v. Stanley 22

Extension of lease, see Landlord and tenant 198

Extradition — Supercession of Colonial Order of Sequestration and of civil imprisonment—Transmission of insolvent's Colonial assets to foreign trustee.

R.'s estate had been finally sequestrated by the Supreme Court as insolvent, and on failure to find security that he would attend the meetings of his creditors he had been committed to civil imprisonment. Thereafter proceedings had been instituted against him in the Transvaal, where his estate had also been sequestrated for fraudulent insolvency, and an order had been granted for his extradition thither. His only creditor in this Colony was the National Bank and his assets were in the Orange River Colony and in Basutoland. On the application of the chief local agent of the bank, and with the consent of the curator bonis to the insolvent estate, the Court granted an order discharging the Colonial order for sequestration and the order for the civil imprisonment of the insolvent, and directing the curator bonis to hand over any assets in his hands to the trustee appointed in the Transvaal.

PAGE

National Bank v. Ross ... 225

Extras, see Building contract ...1016

False imprisonment, see malicious prosecution 674

False representation—Prospectus of company—Taking shares of company—Companies Act, 1893, § 86—Rectifying register of shareholders.

The applicant, on the faith of a statement in the prospectus by a company to the effect that 20,000 out of 30,000 shares had been subscribed for, informed the secretary that he would take 1,000 shares, but, upon afterwards discovering the fact that only about 18,000 had been subscribed for, he refused to become a shareholder without having derived any benefit from the shares.

Held, on an application for the rectification of the register that the applicant was entitled to have his name deleted.

Burnard v. African Mercantile Company 621

PAGE

Fees, see Medical practitioner ... 489

Fiduciary relation — Contract—Independent advice—Executor's commission.

On the death of his brother, the plaintiff, who was an Attorney-at-law, agreed with the defendant, who was his brother's widow and executrix, that he would administer the estate and that, in consideration of such administration, she should allow him the executor's commission of 5 per cent. on the gross assets of the estate.

Held, that the contract was not voidable by reason of the plaintiff not having seen that the defendant had independent legal advice before entering into the contract.

Yates, v. Estate Yates ... 31

Final Certificate, see Architect ... 517

Final judgment, see Appeal to Privy Council 894

Foreign judgment — Provisional sentence—Fraud.

The Court will not enforce a foreign judgment where such enforcement would constitute a fraud upon the person against whom it is sought to be enforced.

Goodman v. Goodman ... 612

Forfeiture of Lease — Relief against, see Lease 526

Forgery, see Fraud 87

Fraud — Defence of prisoner — Cash found on prisoner.

The applicant being in gaol, awaiting trial for fraud, applied to the Court for an order on the police, who had taken possession of all the money found on his person at the time of his arrest, to hand over to the applicant's attorney a part of the money for the purpose of enabling him to provide for his defence. The Court ordered the sum of £20 to be so paid over to the applicant's attorney.

Ex parte Palmer 1129

Fraud—Relief—Prescription.

A person who has been defrauded is not deprived of his right to relief by reason of thirty years having expired since the fraud was committed, provided that this action is brought within a reasonable time after discovery of the fraud.

Bydien v. Estate Samao ... 667

Fraud—Forgery.

B. had been convicted of having obtained a bottle of brandy from a licensed dealer by means of a forged order purporting to be signed by Mrs. W. B. had handed this order to a third person, by whom the brandy was obtained and delivered to Mrs. W.

Held, on review, that as there was no satisfactory evidence that the order had not been signed by Mrs. W., and as no person had been defrauded, the Magistrate's conviction must be quashed.

Rex v. Bostander (alias Philips) 87

Fraud, see Obtaining goods by false pretences 144

Funds, to prosecute action for judicial separation, see Marriage 16

Future rights, see Magistrate's jurisdiction 1151

PAGE

Gaol-breaking—Theft of prison clothes.
Rex v. Meinz and another ... 146

General Bond, see Company ... 382

Gift to minor child—Revocation of gift.
W. had made a donation of £200 to a minor son and secured the money by lending it on mortgage. W. had to borrow the £200, which he subsequently repaid. The mortgage was in the son's name. W. now applied for an order, authorizing him as natural guardian of his son to cancel the said mortgage.
The Court refused the order.
Ex parte De Wet 1209

Hand-dressing, see Scab Act ... 474

Handwriting, see Will 95

Hire of premises—Use of sign-board.
Hartman v. Dart 206

Hire purchase, see Sale 1029

Holder of Licence, see Liquor Laws 214

Holiday, see Attorney 765

Ignorantia juris, see Rule 329D ... 904

Illegal proclamation, see Liquor licence 1162

Imitation, see Trade Mark ... 825

Implements of housebreaking—Section 8, Sub-section 1, Part I, Police Offences Act, 1882.
An accused found walking at night in a public street in company with another person in whose pocket two skeleton keys were found, and overheard to say to such person, "if we had a jemmy with us we might have lifted the sash,"

PAGE

Held, not to be in possession of implements of housebreaking.
Rex v. Savage and another ... 459

Impounding (illegal), see Trespass 594

Income Tax, see Company ... 501

Independent contractor, see Negligence 1069

Injury, see Defamation 855

Injury to property — Assault—Damages.
Revelas v. Power 708

Injury to person—Negligence—Damages.
Reynolds v. New Cape Central Railways, Ltd. ... 966

Injuria—Attempt on the chastity of a woman—Damages.
In an action for damages against the defendant for having entered the bedroom of a young unmarried woman, with criminal intent; it was found as a fact that the defendant had entered the room without knowledge of the circumstance that it was occupied by the plaintiff.
Held, that the defendant was not liable.
Littlejohn v. Kingswell ... 154

Insolvency—Undue preference—Act 38 of 1884, Sec. 8.
Insolvent Estate Musters v. Van der Spuy 356

Insolvent estate — Trustee — Accounts—Delay in filing liquidation and distribution account.
Where there is an undue delay on the part of the trustee of an insolvent estate in filing his final account of distribution, the insolvent is entitled to call upon him to file such account.

PAGE

The fact that the trustee alleges that he has a claim against the wife of the insolvent is no justification for undue delay if the trustee has had ample time for enforcing such claim.

Cragg v. Bolton 241

Insulting language—Public place.

Rex v. Classen; Rex v. Potgieter 223

Interdict– Evidence—Affidavits.

In an application for an interdict to restrain the lessee of a farm from keeping an excessive number of animals on such farm, there should be clear evidence that the number of animals is excessive, and for that purpose the area and capacity of the farm should be stated, and, if possible, the purposes for which it had been leased.

Executors of Estate Rhodes v. Gamble 207

Interdict, see Expropriation of land 168

Interdict, see Trespass 51

„ see Building regulations 497

„ see Executor 302

„ see Lights 552

Interdict.

The Court granted an interdict restraining the Colonial Government from paying over to the respondents any portion of a sum of money which the Court had found to be due to the manager of the Grand Junction Railways, pending an action to be brought by the applicants to recover certain moneys alleged by them to be owing to them by the respondent.

African Banking Corporation v. Cape Junction Railways 664

PAGE

Interdict—Discharge.

A. had instituted an action against B. for the recovery of certain bricks, and at A.'s instance a Judge in Chambers had interdicted B. from selling them pending the result of the action. B. now applied to have this interdict set aside.

Held, that as A. now consented to the sale of the bricks without prejudice to his right in them, the interdict should be discharged, the bricks sold and the proceeds paid into the hands of B.'s trustee pending the action. Costs to follow the result of the action.

Graham v. Firth 726

Interdict—Natural flow of water —Embankment.

The respondent removed an embankment on his own land which had been constructed about twelve years before by his predecessor in title, the effect of the removal being to allow more rainwater to flow in its natural course on to the applicant's land than had flowed while the embankment stood.

Held on motion, that the applicant was not entitled to an interdict restraining such removal.

Enslin v. Zuidmeer ... 749

Interdict, see Title to land ... 727

„ see Trade Mark ... 634

Interdict – Costs—Raising of road —Public utility.

The Government, in the course of constructing an overhead bridge over one of its railways, found it necessary to raise a divisional road leading to the bridge, and this was done with the consent of the Divisional Council. In consequence of the raising of the road the applicant's property, which bordered on the road, was deprived, in part, of convenient access to the road.

PAGE

Held, that although the applicant might be entitled to compensation for depreciation in the value of her property, she was not entitled to an interdict restraining the raising of the road.

Syme v. Colonial Government 1004

Interdict — Municipality — Building regulations.

Certain building regulations framed under the Municipal Amendment Act of 1896, described the materials which should be used in the construction of new buildings within the Municipality to ensure the stability of such buildings. The respondents, in laying the foundations of certain buildings, used materials prohibited by the regulations, and likely, in the opinion of the Court, to endanger the stability of the erection and the safety of future inmates and probably of the general public, and they refused to comply with the request of the municipal engineer that they would use proper materials.

Held on motion, that the Municipality was entitled to an interdict, restraining respondents from erecting walls on such foundations unless and until the structure of the same should be such as not to endanger the safety of any buildings erected thereon, but leave was reserved to the respondents to institute an action to have such interdict set aside.

Green and Sea Point Municipality v. Morris 1119

Interest — Usury — Provisional sentence.

Provisional sentence granted for the amount of a promissory note with interest at 25 per cent. as stipulated for in the note, the defendant raising no objection and the amount of interest claimed not exceeding the capital.

Cloete v. Roberts 655

Interpleader suit, see Action against Messenger 813

Interpleader—Pledge—Delivery.

A., being indebted to the claimant in the sum of £30, gave him as security two mules, which, however, A. retained in his possession. Subsequently B. having obtained judgment against A. the mules were attached by the messenger.

Held, in an interpleader suit that the claimant was not entitled as against B. to claim the benefit of the pledge.

De Klerk v. Holtman ... 354

Investment of Trust Funds, see Liquidator 977

Irregularity, see Review ... 234, 236

Irregularity, see Arbitrator ... 23

Iter, see Servitudes 465

Joint Will — Children—Bequest to a class—Vesting.

W. and his wife, by a certain joint will, bequeathed a certain portion of their landed property to the children of their son G. C. W. At the time of the testator's death, G. C. W. had five children, now represented by the plaintiffs: since that time six other children had been born to him. The plaintiffs contended that only such children of G. C. W. as were in esse at the time of the testator's death were entitled to share in the inheritance. The defendant contended that the children of G. C. W. born after the death of the testator were also entitled to share; and that, inasmuch as G. C. W. was still alive, and might have further issue, that no distribution of the estate could be made until his death.

PAGE

Held, that as by the terms of the will the property immediately vested in the then children of G. C. W. and that as these terms were inconsistent with the postponement of the distribution of the estate; judgment must be entered for the plaintiffs in terms of their contention.

Van der Westhuizen v. Estate Van der Westhuizen ... 62

Joint will—Construction—Adiation.

By their joint will N. and his wife, married in community, before proceeding to the appointment of heirs, directed that on the death of the survivor the landed property should be put up to public auction between their three sons, and that the proceeds should belong to the estate of the survivor. Proceeding to the election of heirs, they nominated the children as heirs of the first dying subject to a usufruct in favour of the survivor of the entire joint estate, "and directed that upon the death of the survivor the joint estate shall be equally divided among the children."

PAGE

N. died first, and his wife remained in possession of the joint estate in terms of the will. By agreement between her and the three sons the landed property was sold during her life time.

Held, that on her death the proceeds formed part of the joint estate and should be divided equally among the children.

Nel v. Estate Nel 554

Judicial separation—Division of goods held in community—Suspension of community—Marital power—Husband and wife.

On a decree of judicial separation and division of goods owned in community it is competent for the Court to interdict the husband from dealing with his wife's share or with property acquired by her, but not to dissolve the community altogether.

Neale v. Neale 300

Jurisdiction, see Divorce 881

Kaffir beer, see Proclamation ... 646

Kinderberwys, see Mutual Will ... 367

Land agent—Remuneration.

The plaintiff, a land agent, who had been requested by the defendant to find a purchaser for a certain property, informed the defendant that B. was willing to buy for £3,500, but the defendant said he wanted £4,500. The plaintiff informed B. of this price, and some days afterwards the defendant asked B. whether he would buy the property, to which B. consented on obtaining a reduction of the price to £3,900. The Court, finding that the defendant had entered into communication with B. in consequence of the introduction of A.

PAGE

Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to his commission.

Fisher v. Atkins 778

Landing Agent, see Bailee of Goods 547

Landlord and Tenant—Lease—Ejectment—Damages.

Wood v. Lovegrove 510

Landlord and tenant—Extension of lease—Ejectment.

Preswich v. Koenig & Co. ... 198

Lashes — Previous conviction — Act 20 of 1856.

Under Sec. 42 of Act 20 of 1856, a magistrate may not punish a prisoner who has been previously convicted with lashes unless the previous conviction took place within two years of the subsequent one.

Rex v. Swart... 707

Latent defect, see Redhibitory Action... 216

Lease for life—Monthly tenancy —Ejectment.

The plaintiff, being the owner of a farm, allowed the defendant to build a house on it on condition that the defendant should pay one shilling a month as rent for his occupation and should not be entitled to compensation on leaving the premises. After the defendant had been in occupation for some years he received a month's notice to quit. The defendant refused to quit maintaining that he was entitled to remain in occupation for the term of his life,

PAGE

Held, affirming the Magistrate's decision that the defendant was only a monthly tenant and that, in the absence of any fraudulent conduct on the part of the plaintiff, he was entitled to eject the defendant from the premises.

Van Raht v. Van Breda ... 75

Lease—Documentary evidence.

Jeffery v. Kotze 757

Lease, Agricultural, } see assignment
Lease, Mineral, } of Lease ... 834

Lease—Evidence—Credibility of witnesses.

Middlewick and Another v. Brodie 1006

Lease — Cancellation — Nonpayment of rent for two years—Equitable relief against forfeiture.

The lessee of certain mining rights for a period of twenty years having failed to pay rent for three consecutive years, the lessor gave him notice that if the rent was not paid within twenty-one days an action would be brought against him for cancellation of the lease. The lessee had, long before such notice, sublet his rights, as he could do under the agreement of lease, but had not given notice of the sublease to the lessor. After the notice he neglected to pay the rent, believing, as he did, that the sublessees were liable and would pay, whereupon the action was instituted against him, of which he forthwith informed the sublessees, who immediately tendered payment to the lessor of the arrears of rent and costs. The tender not being accepted, the sublessees were allowed to intervene as co-defendants, and repeated their tender in the plea.

PAGE

Held, that the Court was not bound by any positive rule of law to decree a cancellation of the lease on failure by the lessee to comply with the notice, and that, as there was nothing in the conduct of the lessee to indicate an intention to abandon or repudiate the lease or to defy the rights of the lessor, it was competent for the Court, under all the circumstances disclosed in the case, to relieve the lessee against the consequences of his neglect.

Estate Thomas v. Kerr and Another 526

Lease—Tenant's right of back entrance to premises leased—Damages.

A lease of premises includes everything necessary for the due and proper enjoyment and occupation thereof.

Where, therefore, a house with yard and stable was let to the plaintiff.

Held, that she was entitled, in the absence of anything to the contrary, to a right of way through the yard of the defendant, such being the only exit from her yard and stable to a public thoroughfare.

The defendant, as lessor, who had obstructed the plaintiff in the due and reasonable enjoyment of this right of way, held liable in damages for the loss and inconvenience caused thereby.

McNeill v. Eaton 600

Leave to prosecute appeal, see Appeal in Criminal cases ...1165

PAGE

Legacy — Condition — Uncertain day — Vesting — Will — Construction—Gift to children on attaining twenty-one — Intermediate income for maintenance — Discretionary power.

A testator bequeathed to his daughter E. the sum of £20,000 "on attaining the age of twenty-one years," and directed that during her minority the interest or income of the legacy, "or so much thereof as may be necessary," shall be paid to his wife, "such interest or income to be paid or expended for or towards the maintenance or education of the minor." The daughter survived the testator, but died at seventeen, unmarried and intestate.

Held, that the legacy had vested before her death and was transmitted to her heirs ab intestato.

Executors of Moodie v. Curator of Moodie ... 742

Legitimacy—Presumption—Children.

The presumption that children born in wedlock are the children of the husband is not rebutted by the wife's admission that they are not his children, or by the fact that she has been found guilty of adultery, or by the fact that at the time of their birth he was over eighty years of age, or by all these facts combined in the absence of any evidence of incompetency on his part or of non-cohabitation with his wife.

Ex parte Venter 620

Lessor and lessee—Obligations of lessor—Defective premises—Damages.

A lessor is liable in damages

PAGE

to the lessee in respect of any injury caused to the property of the lessee by the defective condition of the premises leased: provided that the lessor had knowledge of such defect, or by reason of his trade or calling ought to have had such knowledge.

Atkins v. Delpont 686

Lex Commissoria, see Sale ... 451

Liabilities of Joint-estate, see Mortgage bond 203

Liability of Landlord, see Act 36, 1902 860

Life insurance—Proof of death.

Estate of late Basson v. Law Accident Insurance Co.

Estate of late Basson v. Union Insurance Co. ...1094

Life policy — Public policy — Death in consequence of illegal acts.

B. insured his life with the defendant society, the policy providing that in case "it shall not have become void by the death of the assured by suicide, whether sane or insane, within one year of the date hereof, the said society will pay to the executors, administrators, or assigns of the assured, the sum of £200. After paying the premiums for ten years, B. went into rebellion and was killed in an engagement with the British troops.

Held, that B's executors were entitled to recover the amount of the policy.

Burger v. South African Life Insurance Society ... 847

PAGE

Lights—Servitude—Party-Wall—Interdict.

Heynes, Mathew & Co. v. Black & Co. 552

Liquidated demand, see Magistrate's jurisdiction 219

Liquidation account—Amendment—High Sheriff—Dead bond.

Judgment for the sum of £500 due on certain two mortgage bonds had been granted to the G. A. Company as against one B. The property specially hypothecated having been also declared executable, had been sold in execution, and the High Sheriff had framed a distribution account. It appeared that there was a third uncancelled bond in the office of the Registrar of Deeds on the same property in favour of one L. for £500. The estate of L. had been finally sequestrated, but the trustees had not brought up this bond for £500 as an asset in his estate. The High Sheriff had, however, awarded a balance of the money which the property realized after the other two bonds had been paid off, together with interest for a year and a current year, as an asset in L.'s estate in respect of the £500 bond. On the application of the G. A. Company the Court granted an order directing the High Sheriff to amend his account and to award to the Company the entire balance of the moneys realized by the sale in execution of the said property.

The case of Brink v. The High Sheriff (12 S. C. R. 414) distinguished.

Guardian Assurance Co. v. Insolvent Estate Lippert... 257

PAGE

lessees were allowed to intervene as co-defendants, and repeated their tender in the plea.

Held, that the Court was not bound by any positive rule of law to decree a cancellation of the lease on failure by the lessee to comply with the notice, and that, as there was nothing in the conduct of the lessee to indicate an intention to abandon or repudiate the lease or to defy the rights of the lessor, it was competent for the Court, under all the circumstances disclosed in the case, to relieve the lessee against the consequences of his neglect.

Estate Thomas v. Kerr and Another 526

Lease—Tenant's right of back entrance to premises leased—Damages.

A lease of premises includes everything necessary for the due and proper enjoyment and occupation thereof.

Where, therefore, a house with yard and stable was let to the plaintiff.

Held, that she was entitled, in the absence of anything to the contrary, to a right of way through the yard of the defendant, such being the only exit from her yard and stable to a public thoroughfare.

The defendant, as lessor, who had obstructed the plaintiff in the due and reasonable enjoyment of this right of way, held liable in damages for the loss and inconvenience caused thereby.

McNeill v. Eaton 600

Leave to prosecute appeal, see Appeal in Criminal cases ...1165

PAGE

Legacy — Condition — Uncertain day — Vesting — Will — Construction—Gift to children on attaining twenty-one — Intermediate income for maintenance — Discretionary power.

A testator bequeathed to his daughter E. the sum of £20,000 "on attaining the age of twenty-one years," and directed that during her minority the interest or income of the legacy, "or so much thereof as may be necessary," shall be paid to his wife, "such interest or income to be paid or expended for or towards the maintenance or education of the minor." The daughter survived the testator, but died at seventeen, unmarried and intestate.

Held, that the legacy had vested before her death and was transmitted to her heirs ab intestato.

Executors of Moodie v. Curator of Moodie ... 742

Legitimacy—Presumption—Children.

The presumption that children born in wedlock are the children of the husband is not rebutted by the wife's admission that they are not his children, or by the fact that she has been found guilty of adultery, or by the fact that at the time of their birth he was over eighty years of age, or by all these facts combined in the absence of any evidence of incompetency on his part or of non-cohabitation with his wife.

Ex parte Venter 620

Lessor and lessee—Obligations of lessor—Defective premises—Damages.

A lessor is liable in damages

PAGE

tion whether the appellant could legally sell liquor to natives.

Rex v. Billinkin 1162

Liquor licence—Selling to native —Increase of penalty by Proclamation after issue of licence.

The applicant obtained a licence for the sale of liquor in a native territory subject to the Proclamation then in force, which prohibited the sale of liquor to natives, and the licence contained an indorsement to the effect that the sale of liquor to natives would subject him to a penalty of £50. After the date of the licence the Governor, by Proclamation, increased the penalty to £100.

Held, that the appellant, on conviction, was liable to the increased penalty.

Rex v. Newman 1216

Liquor Licence new—Memorial—Voters' list—Act 25 of 1891. Van Rensburg v. George Licensing Court and Fotheringham 922

Liquor Licensing Act (28) of 1883—Native locations and areas.

On the trial of the appellant in the Resident Magistrate's Court of Komgha for selling liquor to an aboriginal native in contravention of the 22nd section of Act 28 of 1883, the defence was raised that the Proclamation was illegal, but the evidence shewed that there were aboriginal natives resident in the village of Komgha when the liquor had been sold, and that the appellant had consented to take his licence subject to the Proclamation.

Held, that although such consent might not estop the appellant from setting up the illegality of the Proclamation, it afforded further evidence to prove that aboriginal natives were located or resident in the village, so as to justify the issuing of the Proclamation.

Rex v. Brown 868

Litis Contestatio, see Rei vindicatio 81

Locus standi, see New liquor licence 628

Lunatic—Curator—Domicile.

S. had been appointed curator to the person and property of his wife, who was of unsound mind. Thereafter a rule nisi was obtained calling upon S. to show cause why his appointment should not be cancelled. On an application to have this rule made absolute.

Held, that as it had not been brought to the notice of the Court that all the said property was situated in the Transvaal and that S. was there domiciled the application must be granted.

Ex parte Berman 194

Lying-in expenses, see Consideration 77

Magistrate's decision on facts reversed, see Condition in Quitrent grant 490

Magistrate's finding as to credibility of evidence, see Conflict of evidence 769

Magistrate's finding on facts, see Conflict of evidence ... 777

Magistrate—Mandamus.

An application for a mandamus, compelling the Magistrate

PAGE

Liquidator, see Company ... 382

Liquidator—Investment of Trust Funds— Ultra vires—Pleading—Exceptions.

On a certain Life Assurance Co. going into liquidation, one H. was appointed as administering liquidator, and in that capacity arranged with a certain Trust Co. to deposit with them such funds of the Assurance Co. as should come into his hands; the said funds to bear interest at 5 per cent., to be reckoned half-yearly. This interest was afterwards reduced to 4 per cent. The Trust Company, on being called upon, rendered an account of these funds, but brought up no interest for 1897 to 1899, and thereafter brought up interest yearly The plaintiff now claimed that this account should be amended and the Company directed to bring up interest half-yearly from 1897, and also to account for certain unclaimed dividends remaining in their hands which had been merged in their funds. The defendant Company pleaded that H. had agreed that no interest should be allowed on moneys deposited by him with the said Company after 1896. That at his request they agreed to allow yearly interest on the said moneys after 1899. They denied that they were bound to open an account for unclaimed dividends or were responsible for the same, but they tendered to pay them whensoever they might be claimed. To this plea the plaintiff excepted as bad and insufficient in law.

Held, that as a liquidator may require certain funds, which come into his hands, at any moment he is not acting ultra vires by not investing these at interest, and further, that as the allegations in the plea, in respect of unclaimed dividends, would (if proved) constitute a good defence, the exception must be disallowed with costs.

Liquidator of the Life Branch of the S.A. Fire and Life Assurance Co. v. the Board of Executors 977 Liquor laws—Holder of licence—Agent—Barman.

The appellant, the holder of a liquor licence, was charged with a contravention of the liquor licence, and the evidence was to the effect that his barman had effected an illicit sale to a native, that the appellant knew natives were trying to get liquor, and that he did nothing to prevent the sale.

Held, that, although the appellant was not present at the sale, he was rightly convicted.

Rex v. Parsons 214

Liquor licence — Condition — Natives — Illegal proclamation.

The Licensing Court of K. granted a licence to the appellant subject to the provisions of a Proclamation issued by the Governor, prohibiting the sale of liquor to natives.

Held, that the condition imposed by the licence amounted to a prohibition to sell to natives, and that as such prohibition could legally have been imposed independently of the Proclamation, the illegality or otherwise of such Proclamation could not affect the ques- plaintiff took the accordion after he was told it belonged to the defendant.

PAGE

Held, in an action for malicious prosecution and false imprisonment that the defendant, in charging the plaintiff with theft of the accordion, had set the law in motion, and was responsible for the prosecution. That under the circumstances he had not acted with malice or without reasonable and probable cause. That he was not liable for false imprisonment, because the police, upon receiving the charge of theft, arrested and imprisoned the plaintiff instead of taking out a summons for his appearance.

Kroomer v. Lobascher ... 674

Malicious prosecution — Reasonable and probable cause.

In an action for malicious prosecution it was proved that the affidavit made by the defendant in support of the prosecution, although substantially correct, erred in some unimportant details.

Held, that the plaintiff was not entitled to succeed.

Price v. Steyn 175

Malicious prosecution — Reasonable and probable cause.

The plaintiff had given to the defendant a certain cheque, and had by so doing obtained money from him. It was admitted that the plaintiff had no funds at the Bank to meet this cheque, and the Court found, as a fact, that the plaintiff had not informed the defendant of this. The defendant, finding the cheque dishonoured, had the plaintiff arrested, as he was about to leave Table Bay.

PAGE

The plaintiff was charged before the Magistrate with fraud and was acquitted. Plaintiff now sued the defendant for malicious prosecution and false imprisonment.

Held, that as the defendant had not acted without reasonable and probable cause, judgment must be given against the plaintiff with costs.

Solomons v. Rosenberg ... 935

Manager—Sales on credit—Adoption of manager's acts by principal—Evidence.

The appellant had been sued in the Magistrate's Court by the respondents for the price of certain shop goods sold by him while acting as manager of one of the respondents' stores, on credit: (as the respondents maintained), contrary to their instructions. A portion of these book debts had been (with appellant's assistance) recovered by the respondents who, however, had in the Court below obtained judgment against the appellant for the balance of the debts not recovered.

Held, that as no evidence had been given to show that appellant had been instructed not to give credit, and that even had he been so instructed, the respondents had adopted his acts by themselves recovering, with his aid, a portion of the outstanding debts, he was not liable for the balance, and that the appeal must be allowed with costs in both Courts.

Taylor v. Lowry Bros. ... 775

Mandamus, see Magistrate ... 898

Marital power, see Judicial Separation 300

PAGE

Marriage — Funds to prosecute action for judicial separation.

A woman who alleged that she had contracted a valid marriage in Russia now applied for an order to compel her alleged husband to furnish her with money to enable her to prosecute an action for a judicial separation from him. The respondent denied the legality of the alleged marriage, but (1) as he produced a document by which he and the applicant had agreed "to come together and marry and be husband and wife" (2) and as after the parties separated the respondent demanded that the applicant should return to him and also that he should have the custody of their children and (3) as the respondent had tendered £20 to the applicant.

Held, that he should forthwith pay to her £25 towards enabling her to prosecute her action. The Court declined to express an opinion as to the legality of the marriage.

Finkelstein v. Finkelstein ... 16

Martial Law—Seizure of stock by military—Change of dominium.

Plaintiff's farm had been denuded of certain mixed live stock by the military authorities during the subsistence of Martial Law. Plaintiff having been absent from his farm on lawful business at the time of these operations subsequently followed up the military column and was told by the officer in command thereof that he was at liberty to take back his stock, or, should he not be able to find the full number of his own stock, to take any other in charge of the military in order to make up the full number. Thereafter the plaintiff found certain of his own stock in the possession of the defendant; these having been similarly handed over to defendant by the military. Defendant admitted to plaintiff that he had more stock than had originally belonged to him; and plaintiff now sued defendant for the return of such of plaintiff's stock as were in defendant's possession, or their value.

Held, that by the said seizure under martial law no change of dominium was effected and that the plaintiff was therefore entitled to judgment as claimed.

Du Toit v. Marais 139

Master and servant—Competition in trade—Interdict.

Respondent had contracted to serve the applicants under an agreement, by which, inter alia, he engaged not to enter into trade competition with them anywhere within a radius of twenty miles for the space of five years. After a few months respondent left the service of applicants, and there was some evidence to show that the said agreement was cancelled by mutual consent. Respondent thereafter commenced business on his own account in the same town in which he had served the applicants. Applicants now applied, on motion, for an interdict to restrain him from carrying on his said business.

Held, that in face of the evidence produced by the respondent, the interdict must be refused with costs and the applicants left to their ordinary remedy by action.

PAGE

Armstrong and Co. v. Davidson 1131

Master and servant—Negligence — Common employment — Labour agent.

The defendants entered into a contract with the Military authorities "for the supply of native labour" at certain specified rates of wages. The defendants employed a timekeeper to engage the men, to observe the time during which the men worked and to pay them at the end of every week the wages, which were less by six pence a day per man than the amount agreed on with the Military authorities. The men were employed by the Military authorities to stack bales of forage under the control and supervision of a Military superintendent, and the defendants had no power to give any command as to the manner in which the work should be performed. The plaintiff, who was one of the men engaged by the defendants, sustained an injury through the fall of a bale caused by the negligence of one of his fellow servants.

Held, that the defendant was not a master of the men and was not liable in damages for the injury.

Eyssen v. Calder and Co. ... 729

Master and servant—Negligence of servant.

In an action brought by the owner of a horse for an injury done to it by the negligence of the defendant's servant in the course of his employment, it appeared that the servant was paid weekly by E., but that E. did so as a matter of convenience and as agent for the defendant.

Held, that the defendant was liable.

South African Mineral Water Co. v. Camp's Bay Tramway Co. 345

Measure of damages, see Shipping agent 1061

Medical practitioner — Fees — Proof of status—Sec. 56, Act 34 of 1891.

A medical practitioner who sues for his fees must prove that he is duly licensed to practise as such in this Colony, either by the production of his licence or by a certificate given under the hand of the Colonial Secretary. Louw v. Fryer (15 S. C. R. 214) followed.

Noumbela v. Culligan ... 489

Member of club — Judgment against members collectively —Execution against one of them.

A judgment has been obtained against the members of a certain club collectively for the balance of an unpaid account. By one of the rules of the Club each member was liable in solidum for all debts contracted by the Committee: and application was now made for leave to issue execution against one individual member.

Held, that as the respondent had not been a party to the suit in which judgment was obtained the application must be refused with costs.

White, Ryan & Co. v. Hilliard 589

PAGE

Minors—Age of childbearing—Distribution of Estate.

A testatrix had bequeathed certain immovable property "to the male children of her son G. begotten and to be begotten from his present marriage." The testatrix had died and G. had had 8 children born to him as issue of the said marriage. He was now 56 and his wife 52 years of age. No children had been born to them during the previous eleven years and a medical certificate showed that there was no probability of further issue. G. as executor of his late mother's estate now asked for an order authorizing the Registrar of Deeds to pass transfer to each of his male children of his portion of the bequest. The Court granted an order as prayed.

Ex parte Kok... 213

Minor, see Executor 399

Misconduct of Partners, see Partnership 428

Misdirection of Judge, see Court of appeal 1183

Monthly tenancy, see Lease for life 75

Mortgage Bond — Registrar of Deeds—Liabilities of joint estate.

C. (married in community of property) had during the lifetime of his deceased spouse raised £600 on mortgage in order to enable him to carry through certain transactions in landed property. C. and his wife had executed a joint will whereby the issue of their marriage were instituted heirs to the entire joint estate subject to a life usufruct to the survivor. After the death of his wife C. endeavoured to pass the said mortgage bond. This the Registrar refused to do without an order of Court. The Court granted the order as prayed.

PAGE

Ex parte Claassen 203

Mortgage bond—Notice of payment—Provisional sentence.

The plaintiff sued the defendant for provisional sentence on a bond which was payable upon three months' notice given on either side. The summons alleged that such notice had been given to the plaintiff by the defendant, but the evidence showed that the plaintiff at once wrote refusing to accept such notice.

Held, that after such refusal the plaintiff could not rely upon the notice given by the defendant, and provisional sentence was accordingly refused.

Blake v. Cortis 231

Mortgage bond—Three months' notice—Provisional sentence.

To a claim for provisional sentence for the capital of a bond the defence was raised that the three months' notice had been given before the expiration of a year from the time when the interest began to run. The interest was payable half-yearly, and three months' notice was given so as to require payment of the capital after the first six months had expired. Provisional sentence granted.

Katzen v. Moore Bros. ... 657

Mortgage of entailed property—Native custom.

The applicant, a Tembu, was heir-at-law to his father of a certain farm, which in accordance with the Tembu law of inheritance, would on his death similarly pass to his heir-at-law. He now sought the leave of the Court to mortgage this property, in order to enable him to meet the demands of certain creditors.

PAGE

Held, that as it was not shown that these debts to the said creditors had been incurred in connexion with the preservation of the said property, the application must be refused. No order was made in respect of costs.

Ex parte Tabata 587

Motion, see Contract 504

Motor car, see Collision 407

Municipal regulations—Municipal engineer — Building regulations.

On motion for an order compelling the engineer of M. Municipality to issue a certificate of completion of the applicant's building, it appeared that his architect had submitted certain plans to the Municipality, shewing the floor line to be 12 inches above the level of L. road, and that the plans had been approved of, but that the floor line of the house, as built, was on a level with L. road.

Held, in the absence of any proof of approval of the divergence, the applicant was not entitled to succeed.

Herbert v. Claremont Municipality 823

Municipal regulations—Sanitation.

Applicants called upon the Municipal Council of R. to show cause why they should not be ordered to pass and approve of plans for certain 22 cottages which the applicants wished to build on a certain piece of land measuring 180 by 200 feet which was their property. The Municipal Council objected to the erection of so many cottages on a small piece of land on the ground that they would be necessarily insanitary, unless one access was given for necessary sanitary purposes to the back of these cottages. The applicants were willing to provide a 6 foot passage but nothing more.

Held, that the Council had not acted unreasonably in refusing to approve of the plans, and that the Court therefore would not interfere with the exercise of the powers vested in them by the legislature.

Saacks Bros. v. Rondebosch Municipality 52

Municipality — Powers — Ordinance 9 of 1836—Agreement as to water.

In 1874, the Commissioners of the Municipality of W., which was constituted under Ordinance 9 of 1836, agreed with the Government that water from a stream, to which the inhabitants had a common right, should be allowed, free of charge, for temporary and permanent railway service. The requirements of the Government were for about 9,000 gallons a day, but in consequence of the extension of the Railway system, the requirements increased in 1904 to over 60,000 gallons a day. No regulation existed authorizing the Municipality to supply water to others than inhabitants.

PAGE

Held, in an action brought by the Municipality against the Government for a declaration of rights, that the Municipality had no power under the Ordinance to enter into the agreement.

Worcester Municipality and others v. Colonial Government 949

Municipality, see Building regulations 497

Mutual mistake of seller and purchaser, see Sale 378

Mutual will—Adiation—Acquiescence—Kinderbewys.

By the mutual will of the testator and his wife, who were married in community, they appointed the survivor and their eight children as heirs of the first dying, and directed that the survivor should have the usufruct of the joint estate, and that on the death of the survivor the joint estate should be divided between the children. The wife died in 1875 and the testator remained in possession of the joint-estate, and about a year after her death, when he was about to re-marry, he framed an account and passed a deed of kinderbewys for the amount of his children's maternal inheritance after deducting his own child's portion under the will. Some of the childrens' maternal portions, including that of the plaintiff, who was one of the children, remained unpaid until the death of the testator, which took place in 1902.

Held, that there was sufficient proof of adiation on the part of the testator, and that the plaintiff, who had never seen the account or the deed of kinderbewys, was entitled to claim his one-eighth share of the joint-estate on the death of the testator, and that his delay in making his claim could not be construed into acquiescence, seeing that he was justified under the will in not making his claim to any part of the joint-estate until after the testator's death.

Budge and Another v. Estate Budge 307

Natives, see Liquor Licence ...1162

Native custom - Dowry cattle—Seizure in execution.

One S. (a Pondo) had received certain cattle as a dowry for his sister. These he handed over for custody to M., his chief and half brother. P., acting as messenger of the Resident Magistrate's Court, had seized certain of these cattle (as was alleged) in execution of a judgment obtained against S. M. brought an action in the Magistrate's Court for the recovery of these cattle. The Magistrate gave judgment for the defendant on the ground that by Pondo custom the son of the chief wife is responsible for his younger brothers. On appeal the Court referred the matter to the Magistrate for a full report as to whether he found as a fact that the cattle had been paid to M. or to S. On its appearing from the Magistrate's report that M. gave up the cattle to the messenger voluntarily, the appeal was dismissed.

Masangwana v. Pratt ... 224

PAGE

Native custom, see Executor ... 302

Native custom, see Mortgage of entailed property 587

Native custom—Tribal tenure.

Certain land within one of the Native Territories had been purchased for the use of a certain Native tribe with funds raised from the contributions of the members of that tribe. Transfer had been passed to the chief and eleven councillors, as trustees for the tribe. These conditions had not been inserted in the Deed of Transfer. Two of these councillors had obtained an order of Court, enabling them to pass transfer of a portion of this land to a certain purchaser. On the application of certain other members of the tribe, who were not represented when the former order was granted, the Court now granted an order, restraining transfer from being passed, pending an action to be forthwith brought by them for the rectification of the original transfer to the chief and his councillors.

Nzobo v. Ndaba and another 1121

Native Location, see Vagrancy Act 834

Native Locations and Areas, see Liquor Act 868

Native Marriage — Polygamy — Prohibited degrees.

Where native polygamous marriages are recognized as legal, a man may lawfully marry the widow of his maternal uncle and (semble) may contract any marriage recognized by Native Custom, provided such custom be not contrary to the natural law.

Rex v. Mawabe 1157

PAGE

Natural flow of water, see Interdict 749

Negligence—Burthen of proof—Due precautions to prevent accidents—Municipality.

The Municipal Council of W., in the course of excavating a street, left a heap of clay lying in the street, over which the plaintiff stumbled during the night time.

Held, in an action brought by the plaintiff against the Council for damages for bodily injury occasioned by the fall, that the burthen of proving that due precautions had been taken to prevent the obstruction from being a source of danger to persons lawfully using the street during night time lay upon the Council.

Farrell v. Woodstock Municipality 1034

Negligence—Collision on road.

Mitchell v. Tramway Co. ... 541

Negligence, see Coal 562

„ see Collision 407

„ see Master and servant 345, 729

Negligence—Rule of the road—Collision — Ordinance 4 of 1846, Sec. 3—Act 27 of 1882, Sec. 7.

The plaintiff's waggon which was being driven along the proper side of the road, as provided by Ordinance 4 of 1846, Sec. 3, and Act 27 of 1882, Sec. 7, Sub-sec. (1), collided with the defendant's waggon, which was coming down the wrong side of the street.

Held, that by not keeping to the proper side of the street

PAGE

water to others than inhabitants.

Held, in an action brought by the Municipality against the Government for a declaration of rights, that the Municipality had no power under the Ordinance to enter into the agreement.

Worcester Municipality and others v. Colonial Government 949

Municipality, see Building regulations 497

Mutual mistake of seller and purchaser, see Sale 378

Mutual will—Adiation—Acquiescence—Kinderbewys.

By the mutual will of the testator and his wife, who were married in community, they appointed the survivor and their eight children as heirs of the first dying, and directed that the survivor should have the usufruct of the joint estate, and that on the death of the survivor the joint estate should be divided between the children. The wife died in 1875 and the testator remained in possession of the joint-estate, and about a year after her death, when he was about to re-marry, he framed an account and passed a deed of kinderbewys for the amount of his children's maternal inheritance after deducting his own child's portion under the will. Some of the childrens' maternal portions, including that of the plaintiff, who was one of the children, remained unpaid until the death of the testator, which took place in 1902.

Held, that there was sufficient proof of adiation on the part of the testator, and that the plaintiff, who had never seen the account or the deed of kinderbewys, was entitled to claim his one-eighth share of the joint-estate on the death of the testator, and that his delay in making his claim could not be construed into acquiescence, seeing that he was justified under the will in not making his claim to any part of the joint-estate until after the testator's death.

Budge and Another v. Estate Budge 307

Natives, see Liquor Licence ...1162

Native custom - Dowry cattle—Seizure in execution.

One S. (a Pondo) had received certain cattle as a dowry for his sister. These he handed over for custody to M., his chief and half brother. P., acting as messenger of the Resident Magistrate's Court, had seized certain of these cattle (as was alleged) in execution of a judgment obtained against S. M. brought an action in the Magistrate's Court for the recovery of these cattle. The Magistrate gave judgment for the defendant on the ground that by Pondo custom the son of the chief wife is responsible for his younger brothers. On appeal the Court referred the matter to the Magistrate for a full report as to whether he found as a fact that the cattle had been paid to M. or to S. On its appearing from the Magistrate's report that M. gave up the cattle to the messenger voluntarily, the appeal was dismissed.

Masangwana v. Pratt ... 224

PAGE

In ascertaining whether a majority of registered voters of the district have signed a memorial or memorials in favour of granting a new liquor licence, the names of persons who are admitted or clearly proved to be dead, or to have never existed, or to have been registered twice, should be omitted from the voters' list, but not also the names of persons who have removed from the district.

Gibson and Morgan v. Manley (11 Juta 191), and Potgieter v. The Barkly West Licensing Court (7 H.C. 147) followed.

Strydom v. the Uniondale Licensing Court and Dassenville and van Rooyen ... 628

Newspaper comments, see Defamation 70

Non-delivery—Clerk.

In an action for non-delivery of a case of merchandise or its value; an endorsement was made by defendant's clerk as follows, "less seven cases short; see baggage room."

Held, not to amount to an admission by defendant that the seven cases were in the baggage room.

Lazar v. Table Bay Harbour Board 410

Novation, see Provisional sentence 296

Novation, see Building contract...1016

Nudum pactum, see Consideration 77

Obligation, see Condition precedent 103

Obstructing public thoroughfare —Sec. 5 of Act 27 of 1882—Prescription—Costs.

The appellant had been convicted by an Acting Resident Magistrate of having obstructed a public footpath in front of his shop by placing sundry goods thereon. Defendant pleaded that though the public had free access to this footpath he had acquired a prescriptive right to so use the said footpath and that he had so used it during some 22 years, the whole tenancy of the said shop.

Held, that the said user for 22 years gave the appellant no such prescriptive right and that, while the Court would give no opinion as to the proprietary rights of the owners of the said premises, over the said footpath, the appellant had been rightly convicted and that the appeal must be dismissed. As, however, the Court held the appeal not to be of a frivilous character they refused to make any order as to costs.

Rex v. Hilliard 42

Obtaining goods by means of false pretences—Fraud.

The prisoner, a coloured person, not being a registered voter, informed a licensed liquor dealer that he was a registered voter, and thus induced the dealer to sell him two bottles of brandy.

Held, that as the dealer was not prejudiced by the false statement the prisoner could not be convicted of fraud.

Rex v. Jacobs & Parsons ... 144

Occupation, see Registration of voters 373

Offer to sell—Acceptance—Option to buy Consideration.

A promise to keep open an offer to sell for a certain time is not binding in law if no consideradefendant's servant had been guilty of negligence, and that judgment must be given for plaintiff, with costs.

PAGE

Table Bay Harbour Board v. Miller 576

Negligence, see Collision on road 733

„ see Deposit 683

„ see Damage to house 184

„ see Damages... ...1149

„ see Shipping agent ...1061

Negligence of servant — Railway regulations—Dangerous goods.

H. and his wife were passengers by rail from S.W. to Worcester. On the way a case of dynamite was negligently delivered by one P., who had been permitted by an official of the Railway Department to carry it with him in the train. Owing to negligent delivery by P., the dynamite exploded, thereby inflicting serious injuries to H. and his wife.

Held, that the said official had been guilty of negligence by not strictly enforcing the regulations of the department and that the department was liable for his tort.

Van der Horst v. Colonial Government 1038

Negligence — Servant — Scope of employment — Independent contractor.

The defendant had contracted with one I. to do certain work, and he gave his foreman D. general instructions to do "any little job" on the premises which I. might require. Pursuant to these instructions D. cut down a certain tree and left a portion of it lying across a public footpath. The plaintiff fell over this in the dark and sustained serious injuries.

Held, that D. had been guilty of negligence, and that as he was a servant of defendant (an independent contractor and not a servant of I.), and had in cutting down the tree acted within the scope of his employment, the defendant was liable for his negligence.

Semble: If an employer instructs his servant to do any service for another and the servant is guilty of negligence in the performance of that service, his ordinary employer must be held liable, unless he can show that at the time the work was done his servant was under the direction and control of such third person.

Wells v. Delbridge 1069

New liquor licence—Locus standi —Local option clause, Act 25 of 1891, § 13—Memorial not signed by majority of registered voters—Voters' list.

A registered voter for Divisional Council purposes has, under the local option clause of Act 25 of 1891, a sufficient interest in the matter to entitle him to move the Supreme Court to set aside the granting of a new liquor licence granted by the Licensing Court for his district.

A new liquor licence can not be granted by a Licensing Court, unless a memorial in favour of the granting of such licence, signed by a majority of registered voters, has been duly lodged with the Resident Magistrate, as required by section 13, sub-section 1 of Act 25 of 1891.

PAGE

with the assistance of the defendant, who became surety for the repayment of the loan. The money thus borrowed was paid to the defendant, and thereupon a bank account was opened in the name of the partners, notice of the partnership was published in the newspapers and sent to the customers, and the plaintiff took an active part for three months in the business of the firm. He failed, however, to repay the loan, and the defendant was obliged, as surety, to pay it. The defendant thereupon repudiated the existence of any partnership, and the plaintiff brought an action for the dissolution of the partnership and the appointment of a receiver to liquidate the concern.

Held, that as a partnership had in fact been created, the circumstance that the defendant had to pay the £1,000 as surety did not entitle him to repudiate the existence of co-partnership, and that the plaintiff was entitled to his share of the assets, including the goodwill, after deducting from such share the sum of £1,000, but that as the business belonged to the defendant at the time of the plaintiff's admission, the defendant should retain the business with the goodwill on payment to the plaintiff of his share.

No written agreement of the partnership had been signed, but a document was produced at the trial which had been prepared by the solicitor of the parties on their instructions for their signature. By this document the defendant purported to cede the whole business to the plaintiff, who admitted, however, that it was understood that the defendant should retain a half interest in the business.

Held, that as a partnership can be constituted without any writing, the existence of a colourable document such as that agreed upon did not prevent the creation of the partnership if the facts showed what the real nature of the transaction was.

Robertson v. Moss 431

Partnership—Terms—Evidence.
De Kock v. Weintrob ... 87

Party wall, see Lights 552

Place of payment, see Promissory note 866

Pleading — Replication — New cause of action.

The plaintiff by his declaration claimed damages from the Cape Railway department for non-delivery of certain luggage at Johannesburg. The plea alleged that the luggage had been duly conveyed to Johannesburg and there according to custom left in the custody of the Transvaal Railway department, and that by plaintiff's direction the Transvaal department was requested to return the luggage to Cape Town. The plaintiff then by his replication alleged that the defendant had contracted for hire to deliver the luggage at Cape Town.

Held, that such new matter raised a fresh cause of action, and that, as the declaration relied upon a contract to deliver at Johannesburg, the plaintiff could not by his replication tion is given for the promise, but it has the effect of an offer to sell, which can be withdrawn at any time before acceptance, and the acceptance of which before withdrawal within a reasonable time concludes a contract of sale.

PAGE

The acceptance must be upon the same terms as the offer.

On the 24th April the defendants gave the plaintiffs the option of buying their shop until Monday, the 29th of April, at 12 o'clock. No consideration was given by the plaintiffs. The offer was accepted by the plaintiffs before noon on Monday.

Held, that although the defendants were not bound to keep open the offer till Monday, the contract of sale was concluded upon the acceptance of the offer before its withdrawal upon the conditions upon which the offer had been made.

Garvie and Co. v. Wright and Donald 670

Office of Profit, see Constitution Ordinance 482

Onus of proof. see Debtor and Creditor 790

Option of purchase, see Transfer of land 397

Order of Court—Contempt.

Van Onselen v. Landman and Another 377

Order of Superior Officer, see Soldier 56

Ordinance 9 of 1836, see Municipality 949

Ordinance 6 of 1843, sec. 23, see Arrest 191

Ordinance 4 of 1846, see Negligence 576

PAGE

Ownership, see Vindication 220, 284

Partnership — Dissolution — Misconduct of partners—Direction by will to carry on business.

A testator by his will directed his shop business to be carried on after his death, and bequeathed it to the two applicants and the respondent on certain conditions, which indicated a desire on the testator's part that the business should not be discontinued without the consent of all the partners. The legatees accepted the bequest and carried on the business in partnership, but after about eighteen months the applicants became dissatisfied with the respondent's conduct in occasionally absenting himself during business hours, and they offered to purchase his share if he would retire from the firm. On his refusal they applied, by motion, for a decree of dissolution and the appointment of a receiver.

Held, that in the absence of any evidence of such misconduct as would render the continuance of the partnership practically impossible, the Court should not interfere with the directions contained in the will by decreeing a dissolution against the wish of one of the partners.

McKay and Another v. McKay 428

Partnership — Dissolution—Referee.

The defendant being the owner of a licensed victualler's business agreed with the plaintiff to admit him as a partner on payment of £1,000. The plaintiff borrowed the money as his arbitrator, found that his neighbour was ill; M. then drove into Stellenbosch to secure another arbitrator. On arriving on the land trespassed upon with his arbitrator, M. found the Field-cornet and the other arbitrator moving off the land, and they informed him he was too late and that the damage had already been assessed. The Magistrate held that under the circumstances a sufficiently convenient time had not been allowed. On appeal, the Court refused to reverse the Magistrate's decision.

PAGE

Rutherford and Mason v. Myburgh 884

Power of attorney—Revocation of agency.

The plaintiff ceded her boarding-house business to M., and gave him a power of attorney, authorizing him to dispose of the business and pay her debts. M. employed the defendant to sell the business and pay his creditors out of the proceeds. The defendant, who knew that the plaintiff was the real principal, sold the business and proceeded to pay the plaintiff's creditors, and was about to pay a debt claimed by one R. from the plaintiff, when the plaintiff informed him that she denied the debt and warned him not to pay it. In spite of the warning he paid the debt

Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to claim an account from the defendant of his dealings with the proceeds, and that the defendant was liable to pay the amount of the claim which he had paid to R.

Van Nierop v. Kidney ... 985

PAGE

Practice — Action for account— Reference to an accountant as referee.

The plaintiff obtained judgment for an account against the defendant who paid the costs of the action. The defendant rendered an account verified by affidavit in which he also stated that he claimed the balance shewn in such account to be in his favour. The Court referred the account to an accountant as referee who found that there was a large balance in the defendant's favour.

Held, an application to confirm the finding of the referee that the defendant was entitled to judgment for the amount of such balance with costs of the reference without any fresh proceedings.

Estate Weidner v. Brand ...1053

Practice — Affidavits — Size of paper.

Austen & Hodges v. Hodges 94

Preference, see Debentures ... 994

Prescription, see Obstructing public thoroughfare 42

Prescription, see Redhibitory action 216

Prescription, see Act 3 of 1879 ... 870

„ see Fraud 667

„ see Servitudes ... 465

„ see Water 321

Presumption as to possibility of issue, see Will 147

Presumption, see Legitimacy ... 620

Presumption of innocence.

Conviction of an accused by a Resident Magistrate set aside, there being on the evidence a raise a claim based upon a contract to return the goods to Cape Town.

PAGE

Faisht v. Colonial Government 313

Pleading—Tender—Payment into Court.

P. having been sued by A. for a certain sum of money, tendered, a less sum "in full satisfaction" in his plea. This tender A. refused to accept, but asked for an order to have all mention of the tender struck out of the plea, as irrelevant matter; or in the alternative, an order to defendant to pay the amount tendered into Court.

Held, that as the granting of the first prayer would involve the trial of part of the principal case, on motion, and moreover as there was no rule to compel a defendant to pay the amount of his tender into Court, both the prayer and alternative prayer must be refused, and the plaintiff left to deal with the question of tender in his replication.

Semble: In certain special cases the Court might order the amount of a tender to be paid into Court.

Allie Bros. v. Porter and Bousdorf 1135

Pleading, see Redhibitory action 216

„ see Will 205

Pledge—Sale—Condition.

A. borrowed from M. the sum of £20 and, in order to secure the loan, he let to M. a small erf for a period of two years at a rent equivalent to the interest on the loan, and further agreed that should he fail to repay the amount within that period the land should become the property of M., and the amount of the debt should be considered to be the purchase price thereof. A. failed to pay the debt within the two years, and M. remained in possession of the land for several years, paid the rates and taxes, and was treated by A. as the owner in every respect except that transfer was not passed. After the death of A. a rule was obtained by M., under the Land Titles Act of 1881, for the registration of the land in M.'s name. The rule was opposed by A.'s heir, who tendered the amount of the debt, but did not allege that the price agreed upon was in any way unjust or unreasonable at the time when the sale was to take effect. The Court, finding under the circumstances that the price must be considered to be fair and reasonable, made the rule absolute.

PAGE

Ex parte Mabunya 239

Pledge, see Contemplation of Insolvency 751

Pledge, see Interpleader 354

Polygamy, see Native marriage ...1157

Pounds and Trespasses Act, 1892, section 36, sub-section (5)—Convenient time.

A Field-cornet at 4 p.m. appointed 9 a.m. the following day for the purpose of inspecting the land trespassed upon, and sent a message to M., the owner of the cattle which had trespassed, to that effect. This message did not reach M. until 8 p.m. The next morning M., on proceeding to a neighbour, for the purpose of getting him to act does not affect the validity of the proclamation in regard to other localities which were properly included.

PAGE

The giving of Kafir beer to an aboriginal native in a proclaimed area constitutes a contravention of the 22nd section of the Act.

Rex v. Mathebus 646

Prohibited degrees, see Native marriage 1157

Promise to extend time of payment, see Consideration ... 681

Proof of death, see Life Insurance 1094

Proof of debt—Contingent claim—Partnership.

A partner, having a claim against his co-partner, cannot prove in respect thereof against the separate estate of the co-partner while any of the joint creditors are unpaid.

Dell v. Estate Ricci 906

Proof of status, see Medical practitioner 489

Promissory note—Place of payment.

A promissory note made by the defendant in favour of the plaintiff was payable at the office of S. The defendant did not pay the note when it fell due, but some weeks afterwards he paid the amount at the office of S., no intimation having in the meantime been made to the defendant that the amount was to be paid elsewhere. Application for provisional sentence was refused with costs.

Heydenrych v. Hoctor, Heydenrych v. Jeffery ... 866

PAGE

Promissory notes.

G. owed L. certain sums of money and gave to L. promissory notes to the amount of such sums owing. G. now contended that these were accommodation notes, but the Court held that they were given as security for moneys owing by G. to L., and granted provisional sentence against G. on the notes.

Lithman & Co. v. Goodman, 494

Prospective lease—Abandonment—Cession of rights by lessee.

On November 3rd, 1900, defendant entered into an agreement with one M., whereby he gave to M. the sole right of prospecting on certain land for certain minerals and precious stones for a term of three years, M. to have the power of ceding his rights on certain conditions. In April, 1901, M. ceded his rights to the plaintiff, but the stipulated conditions were not fulfilled till June, 1903, or thereafter. Defendant thereupon refused to recognize M.'s right of cession or to acknowledge plaintiff as the concessionary, alleging that M. had abandoned his rights previous to June, 1903. In the absence of evidence of abandonment by M. or of acceptance of such abandonment by defendant or of any neglect on M.'s part to perform all his duties under the contract, save as to the payment of rent. The Court held that by such neglect he had not abandoned his rights as a concessionary, that defendant was not justified in refusing to recognise the cession to plaintiff and to allow him to prospect, and that consereasonable doubt in favour of the accused.

PAGE

Rex v. Swarts 638

Previous conviction—Aggravation of sentence.

Where a person is charged with a criminal offence committed before the date of his conviction of a similar offence, such conviction cannot be used as evidence for the purpose of aggravating his sentence.

Rex v. Abrahamson 1140

Previous conviction, see Lashes ... 707

Principal and agent—Authority—Liability.

The defendant, purporting to act as the agent of M., bought certain goods from the plaintiff who debited M. with the price and afterwards claimed the amount from him. M., however, had in the meantime paid the price to the defendant and repudiated his liability. The plaintiff thereupon sued the defendant, who refused to pay, on the ground that he had not purchased the goods on his own behalf, but he failed to prove that he had been authorized by M. to pledge his credit.

Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to recover the amount from the defendant.

Wright v. Williams (8 Juta, 166, followed).

Du Plessis v. Dall 1147

Principal and agent, see Auctioneer 1159

Principal and agent.

Bryant v. Henderson ..1056

Principal and agent.

Smit v. Brinkman 1044

PAGE

Principal and agent—Deed of sale—Retention by agent.

Estate Berens v. van Wyk ... 725

Principal and agent — Agent's authority.

Hennessy v. Cortis 942

Privilege, see Rule 333D 911

Privy Council, see Appeal ...1122

Proclamation—Aboriginal natives—Proclaimed areas.

The Governor, by Proclamation, declared the districts of Victoria East and Stutterheim to be an area under the 21st section of Act 28 of 1883. At the date of the Proclamation the appellant was the holder of an unexpired licence for the sale of liquor in Alice without any condition as to the sale to aboriginal natives. The town of Alice, according to the record, is a seat of magistracy. The appellant having been convicted of illegally selling liquor to a native after the date of this Proclamation.

Held, that the Governor had no power to include a town with a European population and a seat of magistracy in such an area, and that the conviction should be set aside.

Rex v. Florinquy 652

Proclamation—Aboriginal natives—Proclaimed areas—Section 21 of Act 28 of 1883—Kafir beer.

The Governor has no power to include in any area proclaimed under the 21st section of Act 28 of 1883 any town or tract of country mainly occupied by Europeans, but the fact that an area so proclaimed improperly includes any locality does not affect the validity of the proclamation in regard to other localities which were properly included.

PAGE

The giving of Kafir beer to an aboriginal native in a proclaimed area constitutes a contravention of the 22nd section of the Act.

Rex v. Mathebus 646

Prohibited degrees, see Native marriage 1157

Promise to extend time of payment, see Consideration ... 681

Proof of death, see Life Insurance 1094

Proof of debt—Contingent claim—Partnership.

A partner, having a claim against his co-partner, cannot prove in respect thereof against the separate estate of the co-partner while any of the joint creditors are unpaid.

Dell v. Estate Ricci 906

Proof of status, see Medical practitioner 489

Promissory note—Place of payment.

A promissory note made by the defendant in favour of the plaintiff was payable at the office of S. The defendant did not pay the note when it fell due, but some weeks afterwards he paid the amount at the office of S., no intimation having in the meantime been made to the defendant that the amount was to be paid elsewhere. Application for provisional sentence was refused with costs.

Heydenrych v. Hoctor, Heydenrych v. Jeffery ... 866

PAGE

Promissory notes.

G. owed L. certain sums of money and gave to L. promissory notes to the amount of such sums owing. G. now contended that these were accommodation notes, but the Court held that they were given as security for moneys owing by G. to L., and granted provisional sentence against G. on the notes.

Lithman & Co. v. Goodman, 494

Prospective lease—Abandonment—Cession of rights by lessee.

On November 3rd, 1900, defendant entered into an agreement with one M., whereby he gave to M. the sole right of prospecting on certain land for certain minerals and precious stones for a term of three years, M. to have the power of ceding his rights on certain conditions. In April, 1901, M. ceded his rights to the plaintiff, but the stipulated conditions were not fulfilled till June, 1903, or thereafter. Defendant thereupon refused to recognize M.'s right of cession or to acknowledge plaintiff as the concessionary, alleging that M. had abandoned his rights previous to June, 1903. In the absence of evidence of abandonment by M. or of acceptance of such abandonment by defendant or of any neglect on M.'s part to perform all his duties under the contract, save as to the payment of rent. The Court held that by such neglect he had not abandoned his rights as a concessionary, that defendant was not justified in refusing to recognise the cession to plaintiff and to allow him to prospect, and that consequently plaintiff was entitled to a declaration of rights and to an extension of five months beyond the time allowed by the original contract.

PAGE

Coley v. De Villiers 806

Provisional order of sequestration --Return of nulla bona--Act of insolvency.

On the return day of a provisional order of sequestration a creditor of the defendant opposed the granting of a final order on the ground that the plaintiff was not a creditor. The plaintiff was a judgment creditor but the defence was that the judgment had been obtained by fraud and collusion.

Held, that until the judgment was set aside it must be held to be valid, and that as no proceedings had been taken to set it aside the plaintiff should be regarded as a lawful creditor.

Douglas and Douglas v. Glass 1173

Provisional Order of Sequestration, see Arrest 191

Provisional sentence — Bill of exchange—Novation—Agreement to give time.

The defendant, being sued for provisional sentence on certain overdue bills of exchange accepted by him, raised the defence that the plaintiff had agreed to accept payment in instalments, but the evidence showed that, although there had been negotiations for such a settlement, no definite agreement had been arrived at.

Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to provisional sentence.

Scholefield, Goodman & Son v. McDonald & Co. ... 296

PAGE

Provisional sentence, see Mortgage bond 231

Provisional sentence — Bill of exchange.

To a claim for provisional sentence against the acceptor of a bill of exchange, the defence was raised that the consideration for the bill was the delivery of 2,000 bags of oats, each bag containing 150 lbs., whereas the oats were actually tendered in bags containing a smaller quantity. It appeared, however, that the plaintiffs had rendered to the defendant, before he accepted the bill, an account shewing on the face of it that the bags contained less than 150 lbs.

Held, that as the price of the oats was at so much per 100 lbs. and not per bag, provisional sentence should be granted, leaving it to the defendant to raise his defence in the principal case.

Bergl v. Conrad 1091

Provisional sentence — Account stated.

Provisional sentence granted on account which plaintiff had objected to as incorrect and which defendant had thereupon withdrawn. Subsequently in an action defendant had pleaded that this account was true and correct and the Court had found that it was so.

S.A. Fire Co. (in liquidation) v. Board of Executors ...1179

Provisional sentence —Security.

On a claim for provisional sentence the defence of compensation was raised, but as the evidence of the existence of a valid counter claim was not satisfactory, provisional sentence was granted. The plaintiffs, residing outside the jurisdiction of the Court, were ordered to give sufficient security over and above the ordinary security de restituendo.

PAGE

Lewis and Sacks v. Goodman 864

Provisional sentence, see Foreign judgment 612

Provisional sentence, see Mortgage Bond 657

Provisional sentence—Promissory note—Accommodation.

Weintrob v. Weintrob and another 94

Public place, see Insulting language 223

Public utility, see Interdict ...1004

Purchase on behalf of a Company, see Transfer duty 1142

Quanti Minoris, see Sale 421

Question reserved, see Appeal ...1195

" " see Court of Appeal 1183

Railway Acts, see Expropriation of land 168

Railway—Servitude—Expropriation—Amended title under Act 9 of 1879.

In 1873 the Government expropriated certain land forming portion of a farm for railway purposes, and paid due compensation to the owners. The portion expropriated was cut off from the rest of the land by means of fences, but the Government did not use the whole of the land so expropriated and no transfer of the portion expropriated was made to the Government, although a diagram shewing the portion cut off was attached to the transfer in the Deeds Office. The plaintiffs bought the farm with knowledge of the fact that portion had been cut off for railway purposes. In 1902 the plaintiffs obtained an amended title under Act 9 of 1879, which included the land expropriated, but stated that the grant was subject to conditions contained in previous transfers and the diagram attached to the grant shewed the portion expropriated for the railway.

Held, that the plaintiffs were not entitled to eject the Government or to claim compensation for expropriation.

Hansen and Schrader v. Colonial Government ... 770

Railway regulations, see Negligence of servant 1038

Reasonable diligence, see Demurrage 690

Reasonable and probable cause, see Malicious prosecution 175, 985

Rebel—Booty—Spoliation—Onus probandi.

During the late war the Military had seized a certain horse, the property of J. No receipt was given to show that the horse had been duly "requisitioned." After passing through various hands the horse was sold by one of the military to W. J. had joined the enemy before the horse was seized, but there was no evidence to show that the military were aware of this fact at the time of seizure. After peace had been proclaimed, J. had taken his horse out of W.'s custody, whereupon W. sued him in the

PAGE

Magistrate's Court for redelivery of the horse (or its value) and damages. The Magistrate gave judgment for the plaintiff.

Held on appeal (1) that the private property of alien enemies, or even of rebels, is not "booty."

(2) That the onus lay on W. to show a good title to the horse, and that as he had failed to discharge that onus, and the horse was therefore (to all appearance) illegally seized, J. was spoliatus.

(3) That the appeal must, therefore, be allowed with costs.

Johnson v. Van der Walt ... 931

Receipt, see Debtor and Creditor 790

Rectification of Transfer, see Alteration of surname ... 668

Rectifying regist r of shareholders see False representation ... 621

Redhibitory action — Sale and purchase — Latent defect — Prescription—Pleading—Appeal—Final judgment.

Within seven days after the plaintiff had purchased two oxen from the defendant, they sickened of lungsickness and within three days afterwards they died. The expert evidence shewed that the disease, although latent, had been contracted before date of sale.

Held, that the Magistrate's Court properly decided that the plaintiff was entitled, by means of the redhibitory action to recover back the price he had paid.

The action was instituted more than six months after the date of sale, but no objection was taken on the ground of lapse of time. On appeal to the Chief Magistrate, however, the objection was taken and disallowed on the ground that it ought to have been taken in the lower Court.

Held, that the defence ought to have been raised before final judgment in the l wer Court and that, not having been so raised, it could not be raised on appeal.

Haviside v. Jor lan 216

Redhibitory Action, see Sale and purchase 364

Referee, see Partnership 431

Registration of Voters—Qualification—Occupation.

Actual occupation of the requisite premises during the whole of the qualifying period is sufficient to entitle the occupier to be registered as a voter even if he was only a tenant at will. Where the alleged occupier has been absent from the premises during a portion of the qualifying period and it is proved that during such absence he was lawfully excluded from the premises, he cannot be legally regarded as having been in actual occupation during the whole of the qualifying period.

Where, however, there has been no break in the right of occupation, the absence of the occupier during a portion of the qualifying period does not legally constitute a break in his actual occupation, provided that there has been personal occupation for such a portion of the qualifying period as would fairly entitle him to be regarded as one of the inhabitants of the division.

PAGE

Alhert's case ... ... }
Michau's case ... } 373
Bailey's case ... ... }

Registration, see Trade Mark ... 825

Re-instatement, see Attorney, 255, 306

Rei vindicatio—Litis contestatio—Loss or destruction of thing claimed.

A horse belonging to the plaintiff having been lost he found it in the possession of the defendant who had released it from the pound alleging and possibly believing that the horse belonged to him (the defendant). The defendant refused to restore the horse although the plaintiff afforded him proof which, in the opinion of the Court, ought to have satisfied the defendant that the horse belonged to the plaintiff. The plaintiff brought an action for the restoration of the horse or its value, and after the pleadings had been closed the horse died.

Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to succeed and that, as the defendant retained the horse after he had sufficient reason to know that it belonged to the plaintiff, he was liable for its full value notwithstanding its death.

Hadley v. Leonard 81

Rei vindicatio—Value—Procedure in Magistrate's Court.

The plaintiff sued the defendant in a Magistrate's Court for delivery of a mule belonging to the plaintiff or its value. The plaintiff proved his ownership, but omitted to prove the value. After his case had been closed, the plaintiff applied for leave to prove the value, but the Magistrate refused leave and granted absolution from the instance. On appeal, the case was remitted to the Magistrate, to be tried on its merits, with leave to the plaintiff to prove the value of the mule.

Theron v. van der Merwe ... 846

Release from civil imprisonment, see Arrest 191

Relief, see Fraud 667

Remission, see Servitude 783

Remit to new Magistrate—Act 3 of 1861, § 29—Plea of guilty—Evidence.

A Magistrate to whom a criminal case has been remitted for trial must, if not the same Magistrate who took the evidence against the accused at the preparatory examination, take evidence de novo against the accused as required by Section 29, Act 3, 1861, even where the accused pleads guilty.

The Queen v. Strydom (1 Juta 60) followed.

Rex v. Mpala and others ... 638

Remittal of cases by Attorney-General—Section 29 of Act 3 of 1861—Reading of evidence taken at preparatory examination.

The reading at the trial of a case remitted to a Resident Magistrate of depositions taken at a preparatory examination, is left to the discretion of such Magistrate by the 29th section of Act 3 of 1861, but such discretion must be judicially exercised.

If at the trial the accused pleaded guilty and the evidence taken at the preparatory examination establishes such guilt, it would be a judicial exercise of the Magistrate's discretion not to read the evidence aloud in the presence of the accused.

PAGE

Rex v. Clarence 1163

Removal of bar — Specific accounts—Costs.

Where a defendant applied for a removal of bar on the ground that he had been unable to plead owing to certain detailed accounts not having been furnished by the plaintiff, which accounts the plaintiff alleged had been furnished from time to time; the Court removed the bar and ordered the plaintiff to again furnish specific accounts. Costs of the application to be costs in the cause.

Table Bay Harbour Board v. Bergl 588

Remuneration, see Award ... 11

Remuneration, see Land Agent ... 778

Replication, see Pleading 313

Report of trial, see Defamation ... 70

Res judicata, see Scab Act ... 474

Resident Magistrate's Court — Dismissal of claim—Appeal Costs—Remitting case to Court below—Res judicata

In an action in a Magistrate's Court for goods sold and delivered, the Court dismissed the claim although there was evidence in support of it. On appeal, the case was remitted to the Magistrate's Court, to be tried on its merits but, as the case had been dismissed by the Magistrate without being thereto requested by the defendant, the costs of appeal were ordered to abide the result in the Court below.

Kaeding v. M'Bunja ... 857

R.M. Court practice, see Exception to summons 975

Restitution of conjugal rights—Domicile.

A wife who does not reside within the jurisdiction is entitled to a decree of restitution of conjugal rights against a husband whose domicile is in this Colony and who has maliciously deserted her.

Jacks v. Jacks 101

Retention money, see Builder's lien 226

Return of nulla bona, see Provisional order of sequestration 1173

Review — Irregularity — Resident Magistrate.

On an application for a review of proceedings in a Magistrate's Court it was alleged that the Magistrate had refused to hear the witnesses for the plaintiff. The Magistrate denied the allegation on oath, and there was nothing to show that an application had been made to him to enter on the record a refusal to hear the evidence.

Held, that in the absence of proof of irregularity on the face of the record, clear proof aliunde was required.

Norbye v. Bensimon ... 234

Review — Irregularity — Resident Magistrate.

In a civil case, tried in a Magistrate's Court, a document in the possession of the defendant to which great importance was attached was shown by his agent to a witness, who acknowledged having previously seen the document in the possession of the defendant. The document was not, however, put in as evidence, and after judgment of absolution from the instance had been given, the Magistrate obtained a certain document from the defendant as being the document which had been shown to the witness. The document thus obtained was inserted in the record as being part of the evidence On review, the Clerk of the Court and the witness denied on oath that the document thus inserted had ever been shown to the witness.

PAGE

Held, that the irregularity was such as to entitle the plaintiff to have the proceedings set aside.

Vickers v. Mason & Co. ... 236

Revocation of gift, see Gift to minor child 1209

Revocation of agency, see Power of Attorney 985

Right of way, see Servitudes ... 465

Rule of Court.

The Court refused to make a certain agreement between the petitioner and the Municipality of M. a rule of Court.

Ex parte Robertson 1003

Rule of Court No 8, see Arrest ... 191

Rules of Court of 1903—Postponement of cases.

Douglas and Another v. Glass, ...1109

Rule 319—Damages.

The defendants had undertaken to finance the plaintiff by raising a certain loan for him. This they failed to do. He now sued them under Rule 319 (inter alia) for damages on the ground that they had prevented him by their default from completing a certain contract. The Court refused to give damages (1) on the ground that the damages claimed were not liquid; (2) that the defendants had not guaranteed a loan.

Nolan v. Sibbett and Stephan 1000

Rule 329D—Ignorantia Juris.

Judgment having been obtained under Rule 329d against the applicants by the respondent, the Court refused, upon their application, to set aside the judgment and give them leave to plead.

Achmatt and Another v. Bruyns 904

Rule 333D—Discovery—Privilege.

In obedience to an order for discovery under Rule 333, the respondent in an affidavit stated that he has in his possession "voluminous departmental correspondence," and objected to disclose this on the ground that such correspondence is privileged. In an application to compel the respondent to disclose and produce this correspondence.

Held (1) that official correspondence as such is, in the absence of some further or special circumstances, shewing that it would be contrary to the policy of an Act of Parliament or injurious to the public interest, not privileged from disclosure;

(2) that sufficient information should be given with regard to the documents comprising the correspondence, in order to enable the Court to judge whether any or all such documents are privileged.

PAGE

The Court consequently directed that the respondent should file a further and more complete affidavit, setting forth with sufficient accuracy the particular grounds for such objection.

Chester & Gibb v. The Big Ben G.M. Company (4 H. C. 374) followed.

Van der Horst v. The Colonial Government 911

Rule nisi discharged.

The Court discharged a rule nisi, calling upon the Government to shew cause why it shall not be restrained from proceeding with the construction of a certain overhead bridge until the plans thereof had been submitted to and approved by the applicant, and why the respondent shall not be restrained from breaking up a main road, on the ground (1) that the applicant had not first applied for and been refused an inspection of plans by the respondent, and (2) that as the applicant was plaintiff in an action, in which it was ordered that the bridge should be made by the respondent, it must be taken to have consented to the work necessary for commencing the construction of the bridge.

Cape Divisional Council v. Colonial Government ... 902

Rule of the road, see Negligence 576

PAGE

Sale—Breach of contract—Damages—Quanti minoris.

The plaintiff, who lived at K. in the Transvaal, ordered from the defendant, a manufacturer in the Cape Colony, three wagons of different qualities at different prices and paid the full price. The defendant sent the wagons by railway to K. and on their arrival the plaintiff accepted two of them, but although he took charge of the third he refused to accept it on the ground that it did not answer to the description ordered.

Held, that although under ordinary circumstances the plaintiff would be entitled to claim a wagon such as that ordered, or on refusal might retain the wagon and claim back the purchase price as well as damages, yet that, under the special circumstances, as the defendant refused to deliver a wagon such as that ordered, as the plaintiff did not by his declaration tender the wagon delivered, and as the expense of returning the wagon to the Colony would be very great, the proper course was to let the plaintiff retain the wagon and recover damages—the measure of damages being the difference in the market values at K. between a wagon of the description contracted for and a wagon of the description actually delivered.

Kinnear v. Huxham... ... 421

Sale—Delivery—Hire purchase—Means of knowledge.

The plaintiff sold a bicycle to A. on condition that the bicycle should remain the plaintiff's property until the price was paid. A document embodying this condition was given to A. A. sold the bicycle to the defendant and shewed him the document, but, according to the defendant, he did not read it. The defendant sold the bicycle to another person, but was unable or unwilling to give the name of the purchaser.

PAGE

Held, that as the defendant had the full means of knowing the condition on which, as between the plaintiff and A. the property was to vest in the latter, he was liable for the value of the cycle notwithstanding that he had parted with the possession.

Sadie v. Standard Bank (7 Juta 87) approved.

Smith and Another v. Sharenovitz 1029

Sale—Re-sale—Lex commissoria.

In 1860 the Town Council of P. sold two lots of land to G. on condition (among others) that on failure by the purchaser to pay any instalment of the price within a certain time the vendors should be at liberty to re-sell the lots at the expense and risk of the purchaser. G. took occupation of the lots and paid the municipal rates thereon, but he failed to pay some of the promissory notes given by him in payment of the price. He sold the lots to the respondent, who for a time paid the rates, and was recognized by the vendors as the owner, but no transfer was ever passed. The respondent, after a few years, left P. and ceased to pay rates. The Town Council, forty years after failure of G. to pay the promissory notes, applied for an order cancelling the sale on the ground that the purchase price had not been paid in terms of the conditions of sale, and the respondent tendered to pay the price still owing and interest due thereon.

Held, that until re-sale by the applicants in terms of the conditions the respondent was entitled to tender the price and interest, and thus prevent any re-sale or cancellation of the sale.

Port Elizabeth Town Council v. Rigg 451

Sale of land bequeathed, see Executor 399

Sale—To whom was credit given.

Goods were supplied to a business carried on under the style of Godfrey & Co., upon condition that the defendant should be regarded as principal in the purchase of the goods.

Held, that credit was given to the defendant as principal debtor, and that he was liable to the plaintiffs for the price of the goods.

Heynes, Mathew and Co. v. Zweigenhagt 704

Sale of liquor to natives—Trap—Corroboration — Credibility of witnesses.

Rex v. McDonald 644

Sales on credit, see Manager ... 775

Sale by military, see Vindicatio ... 220

Sale, see Pledge 239

Sale and purchase—Broker's note—Mutual mistake of seller and purchaser.

T. purchased from C. certain cottages. C. subsequently alleged that certain two cottages had been included in his broker's note by mistake. T. now sued C. for a pro rata return of the price already paid in respect of these two cottages.

PAGE

Held, that as the evidence disclosed that defendant's broker had led plaintiff to believe that he was buying the two cottages in question, defendant's mistake could not be set up as a defence against plaintiff's claim.

Semble: Had the mistake of plaintiff and defendant been mutual the latter would have had a good defence.

Trevor v. Chetty 378

Sale and purchase—Latent defect —Redhibitory action.

The purchaser of certain gramophone slot machines accepted them and credited the seller with the price, but after keeping them for several weeks he claimed the right to return them on the ground that they were in a defective condition. The defect complained of was not latent, but could have been discerned on the slightest examination, and, moreover, the purchaser knew that the machines were sold because they did not work properly.

Held, that the purchaser was not entitled to succeed in the redhibitory action.

Davis Bros. and Been v. Doyle & Co. 364

Sale and Purchase, see Redhibitory action 216

Sanitation, see Municipal regulations 52

Scab Act—Hand dressing of sheep —Dipping—Autrefois acquit.

The owner of scab-infected sheep does not in terms of the 21st section of Act 20 of 1894 "make proper and diligent efforts to cleanse them," if he dresses them by hand without curing them.

The accused was charged in a Resident Magistrate's Court with failing on a certain date to make proper and diligent efforts to cleanse his sheep, and was acquitted. A week afterwards he was charged in the same Court with committing the same offence between certain dates, including the date mentioned in the first summons, but the offence, if any, was proved to have been committed at that date.

Held, that he could not be convicted on the second charge.

Rex v. Bailey 474

Scope of employment, see Negligence 1069

Sea protest, see Stamps Act ... 49

Security, see Arrest 191

" see Builder's lien ... 226

" see Provisional sentence 864

Seizure of stock. see Martial Law 139

Service of Articles, see Attorney 765

Servitude—Remission—Permitting acts inconsistent with servitude.

In an action for an interdict restraining the defendant, the owner of land over which the plaintiff had a duly registered right of road, from placing a fence across the road, the evidence shewed that the defendant had for two or three years made a garden on the strip of land set apart for the road, but the strip of land was fenced off from the rest of the defendant's property, and there was no evidence that the owner of the plaintiff's property knew of the trespass.

PAGE

Held, that the work done on the strip of land was not of so permanent or substantial a nature as to justify the inference that the plaintiff had relinquished his right of road, and held consequently that the servitude had not been lost by reason of the owner of the dominant tenement having permitted acts inconsistent with the servitude.

Braun v. Powrie 783

Servitude, see Railway 770

Servitudes, urban and rural—Non-user — Prescription —

Right of way—Iter—Actus.

Rural servitudes are lost by non-user during the period of prescription, whereas urban servitudes, such as that of lights, are only lost by non-user if, in addition to such non-user on the part of the owner of the dominant tenement the acts of the owner of the servient tenement have been inconsistent with the existence of the servitude.

Where a person, who is entitled to a right of way for vehicles as well as for going on foot, uses the road only for going on foot, he does not on that account only lose the servitude by non-user.

Sed quaere where, although the road is used by foot passengers, it is blocked by an obstruction and trees were allowed to grow on it for the period of prescription which prevented the road from being used for vehicles?

Brawn v. Powrie 465

Servitude, see Lights 552

„ see Water 321

Shipping agent — Negligence — Measure of damages.

Defendants, a firm of shipping agents, having received and accepted instructions to forward certain goods with all possible speed by passenger train to plaintiff at V., neglected for more than a month to do so.

Held (1) That defendants had been guilty of negligence and that plaintiff was entitled to damages.

(2) That the measure of such damages should be the difference in value at V. of the goods between what it would have been had they been timeously forwarded and their value when they actually arrived.

(3) That as there was no evidence on this point only nominal damages could be awarded.

Frier v. Divine, Gates and Co. 1061

Siding, see Expropriation of land 168

Signboard, use of, see Hire of premises 206

Slander—Defamatory words.

Where words may have an innocent or a defamatory meaning, the Magistrate was wrong in allowing an exception that the words were not defamatory. He should try the case on its merits and determine whether under the circumstances the words were defamatory.

Knoesen v. Theron 811

PAGE

Slander—Justification.

Where justification is pleaded to an action for defamation charging the plaintiff to have committed a criminal offence the plea must fail unless the offence is clearly proved to have been committed by him.

Le Roux v. Zeeman 338

Slander—Magistrate Court costs.

Braun v. Cohen 352

Slander.

Ries and Others v. Willetts 1078

Soldier — Obedience — Order of Superior Officer.

The defendant being a soldier received an order from his superior officer to collect the mules which the Boers during the recent war had left behind and to take them to G. Among the mules so left behind was a mule which the Boers had taken from the plaintiff and which the defendant now collected with others, and took to Guries. The plaintiff did not get back his mule and sued the defendant for his wrongful act in taking the mule.

Held, that the order given to the defendant was not a manifestly illegal one and that as he was bound to obey the order he was not liable for damages.

Kaplan v. Hanekom 56

Spare diet.

By the Governor's regulations published in Circular No. 11 of 1881, no juvenile offender under the age of 16 years can be sentenced to spare diet.

Rex v. Maritz 1130

Specific bequest, see Executor ... 399

PAGE

Specific performance, see Exception to summons 975

Spliting of charge.

Rex v. Wiseman and Another 45

Spoliation.

Strydom v. Markotter ... 842

Spoliation, see Builder's right of retention 802

Spoliation, see Rebel 931

Stamps Act—Noting of protest by master of ship—Sea Protest.

On the 8th of September, 1902, the master of a ship which had just arrived in Table Bay, signed a document in the presence of a notary public notifying his intention to execute a sea protest. On the 25th of November a formal Notarial protest was executed by and in presence of the Notary

Held, that the Sea Protest was executed on the 25th of November and that as the document bore an adhesive stamp for 10s. and was tendered for execution on that day, it was not subject to treble stamp duty.

Arderne v. The Treasurer-General 49

Stock theft, see Evidence ... 67

Sub-division, see Valuation ... 197

Succession duty—Act 5 of 1864—Devolution of property.

A testator, who was in partnership in business with the appellant, by will gave the usufruct of the residue of his estate to the appellant, and appointed him and certain other persons as heirs of such residue in certain proportions, but as to the partnership property he directed that the partnership should continue, and that in case the appellant should sell any portion thereof he should receive a larger proportion than of the rest of the residue. The testator further directed that the remaining heirs should be paid their shares of the partnership property according to the valuation of the inventory to be framed on his death, but that in case the appellant should sell the whole of the partnership property, they should be entitled to share as heirs according to the original proportions. On the death of the testator, the Master of the Supreme Court assessed the duty payable by the appellant in respect of his usufruct only, and such duty was duly paid. Afterwards the appellant sold a portion of the partnership property for a larger sum than that at which the property was valued in the inventory.

PAGE

Held, that on obtaining his share of the proceeds under the will the succession duty payable by the appellant should be upon such increased value after deducting the sum paid by him in respect of his usufruct.

Stephan v. Colonial Government 852

Superannuated judgment—R.M. Court—Revival.

In the absence of any authority the Court refused to revive a R.M. Court judgment which had become superannuated.

Colley v. Parkins 991

Supercession of Colonial order of sequestration and of civil imprisonment, see Extradition... 225

PAGE

Surety — Co-principal debtor — Excussion.

The plaintiff had supplied certain goods to the mother of the defendant with whom the defendant lived. The Court found on the evidence that the defendant had guaranteed payment for the goods already supplied, but had made no promise as to payment for future supplies.

Held on appeal, that plaintiff's promise did not constitute him a co-principal debtor.

Held further, that as it had not been shown that he had received any consideration for such promise, he was not legally bound thereby.

Semble: Had he guaranteed payment for future supplies, and had the plaintiff in consideration of such promise continued to supply goods, he would have been liable as a surety, but would have been entitled to avail himself of the beneficium excussionis.

Groenewald v. Howe ... 945

Surety and principal debtor — Excussion—Pleading.

A surety, on being sued by the creditor in a Magistrate's Court, denied the suretyship by pleading the general issue but, failing such defence, he claimed the benefit of excussion. The evidence clearly established the contract of suretyship, notwithstanding the defendants' denial, and the Magistrate held, that as the defendant had deliberately postponed his claim to excussion until after issue had been joined, he could not claim the benefit after the issue had been found against him. The

PAGE

Court, on appeal, upheld the judgment.

Mason and Co. v. Booth and Co. 1154

Tender, see Pleading 1135

Theft—Animus furandi.

The taking of the goods of another does not constitute a theft if all the circumstances show that it was done without any animus furandi.

Rex v. Rossouw 650

Theft of prison clothes, see Gaol-breaking 146

Title to land—Interdict—Motion.

Bobbins v. Le Roux ... 727

Trade mark—Registration—Imitation.

In 1893, the applicant registered a trade-mark for pills in the following terms: "Dr. Williams' pink pills for pale people," and no application was afterwards made to expunge the mark from the register. In 1903, the respondent sold pills, in wrappers and boxes, of a different colour from applicant's, but with the label "Dr. Wilson's pink pills for anæmic people."

Held, that as the similarity was calculated to deceive intending purchasers of the applicant's pills, he was entitled to an interdict restraining the sale.

Dr. Williams' Medicine Co. v. Tothill 852

Trade-mark, infringement of—Interdict—Action—Principles which guide the Court in granting an interdict to restrain the infringement of a trade-mark.

PAGE

Where respondents, as agents of a principal residing in England, sold a certain medicine "Rheumaticide," which applicant complained was an infringement of his registered trade-mark "Rheumaticure."

Held, that as the respondents had sold both Rheumaticide and Rheumaticure for the last 16 months, and alleged that no one had been deceived nor that applicant had sustained any loss thereby, and as moreover the respondents had not had sufficient time to communicate with their principal, who might have a good defence, no interdict should be granted, but that applicant, who under the circumstances had not produced evidence of deception, should be left to his remedy by action.

Jones v. Petersen & Co. ... 634

Transfer of property, see Will ... 147

Transfer of property sold—Contempt.

Where the vendor of certain property had been ordered to pass transfer, but stated that the title deeds were not in his possession, the Court ordered him to pass transfer by a certain date or to show cause on or before that date why he should not be committed for contempt of Court.

Werner v. Kukard 248

Transfer of land—Option of purchase—Withdrawal of option—Damages for breach of contract—Consideration.

H. had given to G. an option of purchase of certain land to be exercised by a given date. Before that date arrived, G., not having availed himself of this option, H. withdrew it.

PAGE

G. now sued H. for transfer, or, in the alternative, for damages.

Held, that had G. exercised the option before it was withdrawn, a contract of sale and purchase binding on both parties would have been concluded, but that no consideration having been given by G. for the option, H. was at any time previous to its acceptance by G. at liberty to withdraw it.

Gous and Another v. Van der Hoff... 397

Transfer duty—Purchase on behalf of a Company.

It having been clearly proved that the purchase of a farm had been made by the applicant on behalf of a Company which had been formed but not registered at the time of the purchase, the Court authorized the Registrar of Deeds to allow transfer to be passed, after registration of the Company, by the seller directly to the Company.

Ex parte Botha 1142

"Trap," see Sale of liquor ... 644

Trespass—Illegal impounding—Act 15 of 1892.

A person who finds cattle trespassing on his land can recover compensation only by either (1) sending the cattle to the pound and claiming trespass money under Schedule C. to Act 16 of 1892, or (2) having the damage assessed by the field-cornet, or (3) by action at Common Law. In any case he must notify his intention to the poundmaster, and having once selected his remedy he cannot abandon it and pursue another.

Mason v. Dihning 594

PAGE

Trespass—Interdict—Town Council—Act 26 of 1893, Sec. 133—Compensation.

The Town Council of C. had entered upon applicant's property for the purpose of constructing certain drains. They were willing to pay compensation for any damage done, when the work should have been completed, but not before. Applicant now sought to have a rule nisi which had been granted, interdicting the Council from trespassing on applicant's land made absolute.

Held, that as the Council was justified in its action by Sec. 133 of Act 26 of 1893 and as it was a responsible body well able to pay such damages as might be awarded to applicant, the rule must be discharged.

Liebbrandt v. The Town Council of Cape Town ... 51

Trust funds, see Administering Liquidator 1019

Trustee in insolvency—Contempt of Court.

Leave given respondent to file an affidavit in answer to applicant's replying affidavit, which introduced new and material matter. The Court does not lightly presume that a person failing to do a specific act ordered by the Court neglected to do so ex contemptu.

Assignee of Insolvent Estate Weidner v. Brand ... 616

Ultra Vires, see Liquidator ... 977

Uncertain day, see Legacy ... 742

Undue preference, see Contemplation of Insolvency ... 751

PAGE

Unlawful possession—Bona fides.

Where the defendant had admittedly been found in unlawful possession of certain ostriches, which by his orders had been plucked "green" and branded with his principal's brand.

Held (on appeal), that the fact that the defendant had, per incuriam, not observed that these birds were not the property of his principals and that he had therefore acted bona fide, was not a good defence in a civil action.

De Wit v. Luyt 66

Usury, see Interest 655

Vagrancy Act, 1879—Native location.

Squatters trespassing upon land set apart as a native location cannot be convicted of a contravention of the 9th section of the Vagrancy Act of 1879, until after, having been directed by order of the Resident Magistrate, to remove from the land, they have disobeyed such order.

Rex v. Certain Natives ... 834

Valuation—Section 93 of Act 26 —Subdivision.

The property of the applicant, on which there were a restaurant and a store, was valued for £3,000. After such valuation, he made additions to the store, whereupon the Town Council, at an interim valuation, increased the valuation not only of the store but also of the restaurant on the alleged ground that there had been a subdivision of the property.

Held, that there was no such subdivision in terms of the 93rd Section of Act 26 of 1893 and that the Council had no right at such interim valuation to revalue the restaurant in respect of which there had been no improvement or change of tenancy.

Firth v. Town Council of Cape Town 197

Vesting, see Joint Will 62

Vesting, see Legacy 742

Vesting of bequest, see Will ... 741

Vindicatio—Ownership—Sale by military authorities—War.

During the recent war some British soldiers removed a mule belonging to the defendant from his farm and, after the proclamation of peace, the Magistrate held a public sale of cattle including the mule in question which was sold to C. and by him sold and delivered to the plaintiff. The mule subsequently came into the possession of defendant whereupon the plaintiff brought an action against him for the restoration of the mule or payment of its price:

Held, that in the absence of any proof of authority given to the Magistrate to sell the mule the plaintiff was not entitled to succeed and judgment of absolution from the instance was entered accordingly.

Kotze v. Prins 220

Vindication—Ownership—Jus tertii.

The plaintiff was directed by his father, who was the owner of several horses, to fetch them on the plaintiff's farm. The plaintiff said the defendant might take them on his own responsibility, and he subsequently sued the defendant for the return of the horses or payment of their value.

PAGE

Held, that the defendant was entitled to set up his father's ownership and directions as a defence to the action.

Visser v. Van Zyl 284

Voters' list, see New liquor licence 628

Waiver, see Arbitration 11

War, see Vindicatio 220

Water—Servitude—Prescription Accustomed flow—Rights of owner of dominant tenement.

A servitude had been imposed on the tenement of defendant's predecessor in title in the following terms:—"That the proprietor shall not be entitled to use more of the water coming down from the kloof than what is required for domestic purposes and not to lead off more than a stream of one inch, and that he shall be obliged to allow the remainder of the water to pass free and undisturbed, and not to be allowed to alter or displace any water-course by which the free run of the water might be impeded." In or about 1862 the river water had been diverted from the previous course of the river, and the then owners of plaintiff's farm cut a new furrow. Plaintiff now complained that the defendant had interfered with and damaged this said furrow, and had unlawfully diverted water therefrom. Plaintiff now claimed (1) a declaration that he was entitled to the sole free and undisturbed use of the water of the said river, and to that of the furrow traversing defendant's land, to maintain the said furrow, to have access thereto, and to take materials necessary for that purpose from defendant's land; (2) a perpetual interdict restraining defendant from interfering with the said river, the said furrow or the water therein, and (3) judgment for £1,000 by way of damages.

PAGE

Held, that (1) the plaintiff was entitled to the free and undisturbed use of the water in the said furrow and to reasonable access for the purposes of cleaning and repairing the same; that he was not justified in taking materials from defendant's land (save in the immediate vicinity of the furrow) for the purpose of executing such repairs; (2) that no interdict could be granted; (3) that, inasmuch as the furrow had been damaged by the defendant, the plaintiff was entitled to some damages, which the Court assessed at £50.

Steyn v. Zeeman 321

Weight of evidence, see Appeal... 886

Will—Vesting of bequest.

Strydom v. Strydom (11 Juta, 425) followed.

Ex parte Dixon and Another 741

Will, see Legacy 742

Will—Distribution of estate—Life usufruct of surviving spouse.

Ex parte Du Plessis... ...1206

Will — Allegation of fraud — Pleading.

Hiddingh v. Executors Estate Hertzog 205

PAGE

Will—Codicil—Beneficiary interest—Sec. 4 of Act 22 of 1876.

A testator had by will appointed I. P. and A. D. to be her executors and A. D. to be the guardian of her minor children. By a subsequent codicil the testator revoked the appointment of I. P. and appointed A. L. to act with A. D. in his stead. This codicil was witnessed by A. D.

Held, that as the will and the codicil must be treated as two distinct instruments, the fact that A. D. had attested the codicil did not invalidate his appointment as executor and guardian under the will and that Sec. 4 of Act. 22 of 1876 did not apply.

Doman & Lewis v. The Master 455

Will—Construction—"Such children as may be born."

The testator, having two children, C. and the plaintiff, made a will in 1861, nominating as heirs C. and such other children as may be born of his marriage.

Held, that the will applied to the plaintiff as well as to C.

Cranko v. Cranko 586

Will—Construction of, see Joint Will 554

Will—Evidence—Handwriting.

Herholdt v. Estate Herholdt 95

PAGE

Will — Transfer of property—Presumption as to possibility of issue—Age.

Where the heir to a certain life usufruct on whose lawful issue it was provided that the corpus of the estate should devolve, asked for an order authorizing the executor to pass transfer to his nephew, the petitioner having no issue and his wife being 70 years of age. The Court refused the application on the ground that on the death of his wife he might remarry and have issue by his second wife.

Ex parte Francis 147

Will—Witnesses—Evidence.

Where it was sought to set aside a will which ex facie appeared to have been regularly executed, but which the plaintiff alleged had not been signed by the witnesses in the presence of the testator: the Court held that as the onus of proving his contention was upon the plaintiff and that the evidence of his two witnesses (the witnesses to the will) was unsatisfactory, judgment must be given for the defendants.

De Wit v. Estate De Wit ... 164

Winding up, see Company ... 382

Witnesses, see Will 164

Written agreements—Interpretation of, see Evidence ... 318

Stanford Law Library
3 6105 063 309 350